A NOBLE HUMANITARIAN WORK.

An Outing Enjoyed by Chicago Mothers and Children, at Clinton Camp, Iowa.

We hear so much criticism both outside and inside the body, about the lack of humanitarian work undertaken by Spiritualists generally, that it is a matter for great rejoicing when any move is made by any of its people that is calculated to make the world understand they do not live for themselves alone.

Such a move has been made by the Mississippi Valley Spiritualist Association of Clinton, Iowa, and I am more than anxious that a report of the work done there, should be scattered far and wide, through the pages of The Progressive Thinker.

It may not be generally known that two years ago the M. V. S. A became interested in the summer outing work of the Bureau of Charities of Chicago, the object of this work being to provide a much needed summer outing to the hard-working mothers and children of the congested districts of the city. During the correspondence that followed the M. V. S. A. generously offered the use of their beautiful camp ground at Mt. Pleasant Park, Clinton, Iowa, for this purpose. The offer was gratefully accepted by the Bureau, and a year ago the first party of 50 were sent, and enjoyed the hospitality offered them by the friends there.

The venture proved so satisfactory and successful that this year again the offer was repeated, and an enlarged number invited, and a very pleasant surprise was given the writer when she received a telegram from the Bureau of Charities, with a special request that she would go to Clinton and take charge of the camp. The telegram was like the boom of a cannon to an old war-horse, and so with her indulgent husband's permission the invitation was accepted, and on the 28th of August, the family of 70—13 mothers with their children and three attendants—started for the camp grounds at Clinton.

We were met at the depot by the citizen's committee, representing the city generally, who had generously provided a fund amply sufficient to pay all the expenses of the party while there. We were conducted to a special car and taken to the park, and were cordially welcomed there by the representatives of the M. V. S. A., Mr. and Mrs. Chambers, superintendent of the grounds. The party was at once conducted to the dining-hall, where a sumptuous supper was already awaiting us, and having done justice to this, the work of settling the family for their ten days' outing was begun. We found the spacious pavilion on the grounds already prepared to receive us, the association having furnished all the supplies necessary for our comfort. The beds were quickly allotted, the mothers with large families being placed in tents by themselves, and this finished, the entire party threw care, toil and trouble to the winds, and entered upon what will be to them a never-to-be-forgotten ten days of unalloyed happiness and rejoicing.

To those who know the beautiful camp grounds of Mt. Pleasant Park, the delight of the weary mothers and happy children, as they enjoyed the absolute freedom of the grounds, will be fully appreciated. No restriction was placed upon them save that which exists in all well regulated families, and to their credit be it said, no liberties were taken, no breach of discipline occurred, and we think the management of the grounds will bear us out in saying no injury was done the park in any way. Our genial host and hostess were everywhere in evidence, untiring in their efforts, and no stone was left unturned to insure the comfort of the party.

As already intimated the fund for the support of the camp had been raised among the citizens, and the provisions were of the best, plain but good, generous and bountiful, and one of the most delightful features of the venture was that all the churches worked hand to hand and heart to heart with the Spiritualist association in the good work. Each day a committee of ladies, representatives of the various churches, met at the grounds and waited upon the tables, thus bringing them in personal touch with the recipients of their bounty, the enjoyment to them being found in the rapidity with which the generous supply of good things disappeared and the evident enjoyment of the consumers.

A trip to beautiful Eagle Point Park furnished one delightful afternoon's enjoyment. Dancing and other amusements in the pavilion at night were enjoyed by all, some of our friends still on the grounds sharing the fun with us, and on Sunday a concert was given in the auditorium by the church choirs of the city, and once more we were permitted to hear the voice of our own sweet singer, Mrs. Frankie Cole, so well known to Spiritualists generally, and who fortunately was still upon the grounds.

Indeed each day was a continuous song of joy which only ended when at the close of ten happy days the party again boarded the train for home, shouting themselves hoarse for the M. V. S. A., and the generous citizens of Clinton for their hospitable welcome.

The temptation to enlarge more upon this record-breaking outing is very great; I know the space is limited—but who can tell the good that was accomplished there? It did the writer's heart good to see the kindly spirit evinced by all, and to hear the words of respect, esteem and gratitude from the citizens to the association for the generous loan of their grounds, and the use of the necessary supplies, and so enthusiastic have they become in the work that at the close it was determined to make a two weeks' outing at Clinton a permanent institution. One hundred (mothers and children) are to be entertained next year.

This is the kind of work we need; no need to erect great buildings of wood and stone, if we reach the hearts and souls of humanity, and lift them up to higher and better things. Clinton has set a noble example. She has opened the door to a wide sphere of usefulness, and too much praise cannot be given. They have proven the possibility of success, and the name of Clinton is already engraven in gratitude upon many a suffering heart; and what she has done, other Spiritualist associations may do. The need is great, and hearts are waiting for that ray of sunshine which it is in the power of our people to give, and we believe the generosity of the M. V. S. A. will find its echo, and that in the near future other camp grounds will aid in the good work.

PETTY GRAFT PREVALENT.

The Need of More Genuine Spirituality Is Apparent When One Considers Petty Graft as Exemplified in Ordinary Business Transactions.

The great American public is protesting against graft. And yet that same protesting, finger-pointing public daily is giving support and encouragement to hundreds of little grafts which should be forced out of existence. The dear blind public overlooks the fact that the only difference between the small grafter and the big grafter is measured by dollars and limited by opportunity. The little grafter of to-day may be the big grafter of to-morrow.

One of the strongest pillars of the small graft is the bargain-hunting craze. In the desire to get something cheap or something for nothing people with limited means will grasp at any opportunity which presents itself garbed in a well-worded ad. The woman who wants to buy a fur coat, for example says: "Why should I go to a large establishment and pay an exorbitant price just for the name when I can go right to a pawnshop and buy a garment which has not been redeemed by its owner, but which is quite as good as new, for about half price?"

Buying Furs From Pawnshop.

Accordingly she goes to the pawnbroker and purchases the coat. She does not stop to consider that comparatively few women pawn their furs and fewer leave them unredeemed, nor does she realize that quite a number in proportion will be moved by the same impulse which took her to the pawnshop, or that the supply of unredeemed garments does not begin to meet the demand for fur bargains. What is the result? Old furs are bought up for a song, dyed, made over, given an up-to-date touch in buttons or trimming and sold as "almost new." A pawn ticket attached to a button is all that is needed to carry the sale.

Perhaps you will say the writer has gone a long distance out of his way for this illustration. Granted. But when it becomes known that a single pawnbroker offered to buy the services of a leading furrier, taking his force of workmen as it stood, for this work exclusively, and agreed to give him a contract for five years, the possibilities of this seemingly insignificant graft become apparent.

Fake Auction Grafters Flourish.

A few years ago a man in Cincinnati had a small store which he found falling behind and which he decided to sell out. His entire stock occupied but one floor, and, with a good auctioneer and a buying crowd, could not have outlived more than a week of brisk selling. Eight months that closing out sale continued, and was terminated then only by the expiration of the lease. Goods which never had a place in the store were brought in in carload lots and sold at enormous profit in the excitement of the auction.

The proprietor of the store retained the auctioneer, and together they go from town to town, staying from six months to a year in a place, and selling out the business of some merchant who has not been able to succeed.

Bankrupt stocks and antediluvian merchandise he buys up right and left for these sales, and the latest addition to his working force is a buyer who draws a salary of $5,000 a year. And the money he makes comes out of the pockets of the American public bitterly protesting against graft.

Eyeglass Game Is Easy.

Some of the little grafts practiced in the country are unique enough to be interesting and small enough to make the mind which could originate them seem most contemptible.

There is the "eye-glass game," as it is called by members of the profession. A peddler or agent comes through the country with a line of goods which he displays to the farmer and his family. Perhaps he makes a sale, but whether he does or not he has gained an audience with them, discovers some member of the family wears glasses, so, quite casually, remarks that he "picked up" a splendid pair of solid gold glasses on the train that morning—some traveler must have dropped them. Then he searches around in the bottom of the case and brings out the glasses which he thinks will be about right for the intended victim. They are resplendent and stylish, and immediately the desire to exchange the old steel bowed spectacles for a pair of shiny, up-to-date nose glasses is created. Reluctantly the agent parts with them for from $1 to $3 and then goes on his way.

Cost 27 Cents a Pair.

At the next sewing society the story leaks out, and it is well for the agent that he has sought new territory. These glasses cost him at wholesale about 27 cents a pair.

It seems a far cry from the pawnbroker to the auctioneer, and the eyeglass seller to the bank looter and fugitive from justice, but after all the difference largely is in environment and education. The owner of the pawnshop, whose name does not appear in connection with that business, is a power in a growing corporation, and it is safe to assume that the methods prevailing in one business will be introduced in the other. The auctioneer, or rather the man who runs the auction scheme, already is a director in one of the larger banks, and the seller of eye glasses awaits only an opportunity to branch out in his operations to cheat the people.

When the public takes a stand for honest methods, honest merchandise, and a "square deal" in every phase of business dealing, then will the row of the grafter be hard whether he works up on the heights in banking circles or down in the lowlands of penny practices.

LONG YEARS AGO.

The sun went down upon our wrath
  Long years ago;
Dark shadows fell upon our path—
  'Tis ever so.
Spring time and summer come and go,
  With bud and flower,
Then autumn rains her warning down
  In golden shower.
The sun went down upon our wrath
  Long years ago;
The shadows deepen on our path,
  We older grow.
Comes winter, bringing Yule log in
  And berry bright;
Then the pale embers whisper low,
  "Good night—Good night."

SECULAR MORALITY.

It Is the Most Exalted Kind, Spiritualizing and Uplifting, and Leads to Excellent Results, as Set Forth in the Searchlight.

The English people have had a world of trouble over the desire of so many that religion be taught in the public schools.

At an earlier stage of the interminable controversy going on, mainly between the Church of England and the dissenting Protestants, Mr. W. T. Stead said: "When once we begin to examine and to define we shall not be long in discovering that nearly everything which is of vital practical importance in the "religious" lessons can be taught as part of the ordinary compulsory 'secular curriculum,'" in which connection he states that, "The only definition of religion in the Bible limits it to the secular virtues of visiting the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and in keeping ourselves unspotted from the world."

That is coming near the position I have suggested more than once that true morality of the highest type can be taught without any reference to the Bible. It is not necessary to quote the Ten Commandments in order to teach children to honor their parents. There is no moral good in the Bible that cannot be found elsewhere and nothing is morally good because it is in the Bible.

Liberals are just as anxious to have morality taught in the schools as are Christians, but they object to having that morality cloaked with religion. There are Sunday-schools, churches and family circles in which those who so desire can teach religion, but, in the public schools, let us have morality without religion.

Some time ago it was reported that in New York City there was to be introduced a "Syllabus of Ethics," from which the press of that time published extensive quotations. If the plan was ever put into execution I have seen no statement regarding its results.

As may be observed from the following paragraphs, which are taken from reports then current, the plan proposed was truly non-sectarian in character, and suggestive of considerable improvement over former methods. It went on to say:

"It should be the aim of every teacher to make each part of the life of the school count for moral education. This aim should be present, not only in formal instruction and training, but also in the general atmosphere and spirit of the class-room and of the school. In working toward this aim the following suggestions, based on the experience of practical teachers, will be found helpful:

"The personality of the teacher is at the root of all moral education in the school. The teacher's ideals, sincerity, poise, self-control, courtesy, voice, manner, dress and general attitude toward life, are potent forces for character building.

"Self-respect, which is also fundamental to moral development, is engendered in a child when he does his best tasks that are worth while and within his power to do well, with proper recognition by teacher and school-fellows of work well done.

"The child should early gain the idea of social membership. The truth that co-operation and unselfishness are essential to true social living should be made real and vital. This truth is brought home through 'group work,' where the work of each is necessary to the work of all, and through the feeling in a school or class that the honor of all is in the keeping of each.

"The child should also learn that he is a member, not only of the school, but of the family, of the neighborhood, of the city, and of the State and Nation. The meaning of loyal membership of these social institutions should be made clear. The naturalness and the necessity of obedience and helpfulness should be shown. The moral aspect of home tasks and working with and not against the departments of health, street cleaning, police and education, should be enforced by concrete applications. In general, the truth should be impressed that without loyal and effective social membership no individual can wholly live.

"No person has a fully developed moral character until there has been a transfer of the seat of authority from without to within himself; a moral man obeys himself. Each child, in every grade, should be steadily helped towards self-direction and self-government. Effective means to this end are: appeals to initiative and resourcefulness; the development of such a sense of honor as will preserve order without surveillance; and some form of organization designed to quicken and exercise the sense of responsibility.

"In connection with the regular studies of the school, certain aspects of contemporary civilization, which are of value for developing the social spirit, should receive attention. Hospitals, societies for the prevention of cruelty to children and to animals, homes for orphans and for the aged and infirm, fresh air funds, and similar agencies for social service, should be brought within the child's comprehension at the proper stage. Deeds of heroism and self-sacrifice done by firemen, policemen, soldiers, inventors and persons in the ordinary walks of life, should be presented and dwelt on. The truth that success in life means more than mere money getting can thus be brought home again and again. The contemplation of deeds of cruelty, dishonor and shame has a necessary, though subordinate, place in molding moral taste."

DOCTRINE OF THE HOLY CHURCH.

Concerning the Election of Public Officials.

[From the Manila Daily American.]

To the Voters: — "CATHOLICS MUST NOT VOTE FOR MEN TO FILL RESPONSIBLE POSITIONS EXCEPT THOSE WHO ARE TRUE AND LOYAL CATHOLICS. It is not possible and unreasonable to expect that irreligious men (non-Catholic) will put down existing evils."—Leo XIII.

"The voter will sin if he does not fulfill his duty at election time. He must choose Christian men who are faithful to the church and who fear God, men who will not bring discredit upon it and not cause it to take a backward step by working against truth and righteousness, but who will rather advance the interest of the government."—Archbishop of Colon.

THE ONES WHO HAVE IN KEEPING YOUR BODY AND SOUL ASK THAT YOU NOT ONLY VOTE FOR MEN WHO ARE WISE, BUT FOR MEN WHO ARE GOOD CATHOLICS, who will promote the welfare of the people according to the commandment of God given to Moses when he said: "Choose you from the multitude men who fear God and hate iniquity and make them rulers over you."—Exod. 18.

And because many of you do not know for whom you should vote, YOU MUST CONFER WITH YOUR FATHER CONFESSOR AND OTHER GOOD MEN OF THE HOLY CHURCH WHO HAVE CLEAN CONSCIENCES TOWARD GOD. If you vote for a man who will not advance the interest of the people you commit a mortal sin.

NEVER VOTE FOR ANY OTHER THAN A TRUE CATHOLIC. If you vote for any other than a true Catholic, you will be overwhelmed by the many sins that will be thrust upon you, besides you will be responsible for all he does.

Therefore we desire that you take these two words of instruction: First, it is the duty of all Catholics to vote when they get a chance; second, THE VOTER HAS A BINDING AND HEAVY DUTY TO INDUCE ONLY CATHOLICS TO VOTE, AND TO VOTE ONLY FOR CATHOLICS.

By order of the ARCHBISHOP OF MANILA.

TRENCHANT REFLECTIONS.

Important Extract From Faraday's Origin of Religion, Illustrating How the Church Once Ruled With an Iron Scepter.

The church once ruled with an iron scepter "over science, and crushed it out wherever it threatened to reveal the falsity of her claims. Millions of spirits were sent into the life hereafter with no knowledge of that life as it really is, and the effect upon them has been to retard for centuries the spread of the truth concerning spirit life to those on earth. By the law of temperamental adaptation, they hover near the earth without knowledge of the means to effect their own redemption from the results of earth life, and reflect their own ignorance and sorrow upon the sensitive minds there, producing fantastical and extravagant feelings which ignorant people suppose to be a necessary proof of religious experience. Such people are the victims of self-imposed limitations of knowledge as well as psychological impressions, for if they could fearlessly inquire of other people the opinions held by such people upon religious topics, they would change the action of the brain and give both the spirit in and the spirit out of the mortal body an impetus in a new line of thought.

"Much of the persecution and evil that has centered around the religions of the world came from the determinations of the priestly orders to prevent the overthrow of their power, and not from a desire to preserve truth. This bias of the race having been determined by religion as a method of attaining truth of a spiritual nature, most of the efforts of better minds in spirit life had to be diverted into the channel of religious reforms in order to obtain access to the minds of people on earth, so that moral ideas could be enforced from a spiritual standpoint; for it was in obedience to moral ideas as a basis that true spiritual growth could be obtained.

"This brought the reformers in direct collision with the old superstitions, and the believers in the old being more powerful in numbers, with the advantage of the civil power in their hands, attempted to suppress the new ideas with violence, filling the earth with blood and crime in the name of religion. In the history of all religious persecutions the priests of the old religions have been the persecutors of the founders of the new.

"The priesthood claimed a higher position for themselves in morals than they demanded of the common people, but usually their lives were below the average moral standard. Living sumptuously upon the sacrificial offerings of animals and other gifts, they developed abnormal animal passions, which caused much of the degradation which involved the temple and cloister. The vestal virgins in ancient religions, and nuns in modern religions, and other secluded classes of women in religious orders, afford the passions of the priesthood a safe and secret method of gratification.

"In ancient days the birth of a child from one of the sacred priestesses was considered by the people to be evidence of the proximity of a God in the temple, and the woman so favored was regarded as honored beyond other women, but in modern days no woman even in seclusion can attribute the paternity of her child to the favor of the Almighty and be believed. Since the acceptance of Jesus as the only son of a virgin, begotten by God, the public occupation of such virgins has changed in religious orders, although you have no evidence that the real object for which the order was instituted has been modified."

Mr. Editor, please pardon me if I omit any comments on the foregoing extract. That Spirit Faraday is one of the most difficult fellows to get hold of in logic and argument, and it is my opinion the entire priesthood are tired and disgusted with him.

Several years ago I read and studied the "Confession of the Pagan Priests of Rome," and thought I should have to fight this same Faraday; but when I got to him he showed up so tall, broad-shouldered and muscular, I concluded not to take hold.

MOSES AND MATTIE HULL

They Are to Make Another Trip to the Pacific Coast, and Spiritualists All Along the Line Should Keep Them Busy.

Not until the close of the National Convention at Chicago, was it fully decided to make one more trip to the Pacific Coast. This is done in the interest of Spiritualism in the places where we may visit, and to arouse an increasing interest in the Morris Pratt School. Those wishing our services en route, or while on the Coast, should lose no time in letting us know that we may make a date for them on the way.

Our decision now is to leave the school and our home in Whitewater, either on the 15th or 16th of November. Our first stop will be in Minneapolis and St. Paul. It is possible that we may spend a week, or even more in the "twin cities." Address us while there in care of Dr. J. S. Maxwell, 1644 Hennepin avenue, Minneapolis.

Our next halting place will be Billings, Montana. Address us while there at "Cottage Inn." Then we go on, via Spokane, Seattle, Tacoma, Olympia, Wash., and Portland, and other places on the route to San Jose and other points to which we are called in California.

Our terms are: Give us good audiences, in as good halls or parlors as can be conveniently obtained; do as much as you conveniently can toward paying our traveling expenses, and give the Morris Pratt School as large a lift, at each place as is consistent.

It is sincerely hoped that this trip may be the last one necessary to be made in behalf of that school.

We shall report from time to time our successes and failures, in The Progressive Thinker.

MOSES HULL,
MATTIE E. HULL.

RAMBLING THOUGHTS.

While Enjoying a Delightful Season in the Beautiful Village of Corona, California.

As I gaze upon the Pepper Tree
In its perfect shade of green,
With its lovely load of berries
Hanging gracefully between,
Seems like a giant monarch
Or upon her throne a queen.

How beautiful its coloring, and its spicy fragrance seems like sweet incense to the spirit, bringing us in harmony with the Great Master Mind that has made all things in harmony and love. How can we hold hate, envy, jealousy, while we realize how all our wants have been anticipated and provided for? Why waste our time in idle regrets or worry for past or future, while we see and know that God's great storehouse and college has its doors wide open for us to learn the things which will bring us truth, love and happiness?

How glad am I that I live in this age or era, when we can all mingle together free to seek God through the different avenues of our own understanding; that only the ignorant will say, "I am right; you are wrong."

We find what seemed a wrong yesterday was a wrong interpretation through ignorance; by study we find a great truth, and truth comes to us in so many different ways.

In order to appreciate the moon we must have the darkness of night. In all ages people have been seeking happiness, but how differently, according to their environments, ignorance or knowledge. Youth seeks happiness mostly in athletic sports, and this is wisdom's intuition, as it is necessary to the development of the man or woman, to give strength to the body for the future in whatever direction it may seek happiness, for that is the aim in life. The miser, the gambler, embezzler and murderer, all are seeking happiness, they risk life in trying to gain that which they desire, expecting it to bring them happiness; but the fallacy is in their perverted idea. If one starts off in the wrong direction he is like the lost traveler, he continues in the same path, going round and around until he sees a landmark, or a light in another direction.

Let us seek to be a landmark
To those that go astray,
And we can learn true happiness
From leaf, and branch and tree;
That we cannot live another's life
But blend in harmony.
As great, or small, it takes us all
To make one living family.

THE NEW THOUGHT CONVENTION.

Something Regarding This Harmonious Body of People—Our Cousins.

Having put in the nights and days during the previous week compiling the proceedings of the National Spiritualists' Convention, your reporter also spent the evenings of last week at the New Thought Convention, and while it is not the purpose in this article to give the proceedings, I do want to make some statements by way of comparison, and will endeavor to make them interesting and instructive.

In the first place, let it be said that the New Thought people have harmony; it is one of the foundation principles of their organization; they unify their thought and their work by concentration upon the one word "Harmony;" they go into the silence in prayer (very much as the Quakers do) upon a single thought, and no psychic (and they are all psychics) can help feeling the vibrations of peace, love and upliftment; the very air is permeated with the unified thought and its power for good must be apparent to every thinker and more especially to every true psychic.

Every Spiritualist who has lifted his thought from the phenomena of Spiritualism long enough to reflect upon the power of thought and kindred subjects, believes, with these people, in the efficacy of pure and uplifting thought.

Many of the members of the New Thought movement are also workers in the cause of Spiritualism; in fact, as Mrs. Richmond told them in her address Thursday evening, Spiritualism made it possible for the New Thought Association to exist.

They believe in a future conscious existence of spirit, and the possibility to return from that bourne to communicate with mortals, and nowhere else in modern times can proof be found to substantiate this statement, but in and through mediumship of some phase.

Spiritualism has the foundation upon which this structure is being built, and can with as much propriety "go into the silence" and commune soul to soul, and harmonize their effort, as the New Thought people. But there has ever seemed a disposition among Spiritualists to settle down upon their truth, their foundation, and bend their efforts towards showing it to the world, their phenomena, with an air of ownership, through a right of discovery (re-discovery, properly speaking), to the complete neglect of the adoption of the many uplifting and inspiring teachings of their spirit friends.

They have not been sleeping during all the past years, but have been too busy gloating over what they found to think of some practical use it might be made to the world.

Spirit friends have ever taught "peace on earth and good will to men;" they have stood for harmony, truth and love; the power of thought; the influence of silence toward the formation of high and noble resolutions; and still Spiritualists have lingered in a state of elation, enthusiasm and ecstasy, close around the foundation, visiting, joking, gossipping, and often, too often, slandering, scandalizing, criticising and backbiting each other; creating inharmony, confusion, and a proportionately bad impression upon the minds of thinkers and inviting, very justly, the contumely of the better class of people.

This may seem harsh, and in reality does not include all Spiritualists by any means, but everyone knows it is the truth, and this New Thought Association is beginning the work we should have been doing, in part, long ago.

They do not deny the existence of matter, as do Christian Scientists, but they know that spirit has supremacy over matter. They do not deny that there is sin, error, and disease, but hold spirit as the ruling power over all—rightly understood and applied.

Is there anything in this that Spiritualists deny? No; and they can work with these people for peace and harmony; health and happiness.

When we lose our broadness and cling to envy, selfishness and prejudice we become dogmatic and narrow.

Spiritualism should take hold of every movement that has for its purpose the betterment of humanity, and so they are to an extent; but it should not only go hand in hand with other institutions of reform; it should lead and push. This belongs to the spirit part of man, the finer and higher side of life, and the angels of wisdom urge it upon us.

We have told the world over and over about our phenomena and beautiful philosophy; how it came through those innocent little girls, from a peddler who was rapping at the door, tapping on the window, etc.; that is history now, and we should make more history, and perpetuate the cause by teaching the people that harmony and peace are better than strife and war; that truth is superior to falsehood; that life is continuous in which to grow and unfold; to evolute; to rise; and that while we have re-discovered an important truth, now we must use it toward the universal good.

In the meantime let us remember that as we drop into the cold earth this old clod of clay, the unused wealth that might and should have been used to carry cheer to souls of despondents, and food to the hungry, will but be a millstone about the neck in spirit land, if left to fight over when we are gone.

The New Thought Convention was composed of intelligent, clean-looking and cheerful people, as was the N. S. A. Convention. The difference between the silent work of thought for harmony and the vigorous contention for unimportant measures of legislation was apparent to the casual observer, and decidedly in favor of work through silent, calm concentration.

No one is going to steal the phenomena, and we hold no deed to it, could not hold it as our own if we would. Spirit return depends upon the knowledge and power of the disembodied spirits, and they return through every possible channel, irrespective of ism or philosophy, morals or wealth, and it is left with us to build upon it for the world a home of peace and happiness here and now, and for all future time.

The teachings of Spiritualism are clearly religious in the highest sense, according to the best modern definition of the word, and rightly understood belong in every reform work, also every institution having for its aim the good of every living thing.

New Thought people have discovered nothing that can properly be called new; they have adopted a method of putting into use the power of mind to the benefit of themselves and others. They have learned that spirit has supremacy over matter, and are trying to direct their spirits in unison toward a high purpose, and ought to be commended and encouraged for it, and supported in their great movement.

For my part I can see as much and more in our own movement for the upliftment of the souls of men and women, as it is organized now, but that organization needs the unanimous support of all who claim to be Spiritualists, to make it effectual to the highest degree. If there is anything beyond us to reach out to and help along we ought to be broad enough and unselfish enough to take hold of it. This movement is within the limitations of Spiritualism; it is a wing, and we need not be afraid of it. It will not fly away with one side of us; but if we should rise from our solid foundation we must flap our other wing and rise square with the world. Our foundation will remain where it is. We need not spend our whole time and all our energy watching it.

Let Us All Be Large.

If we have a truth of value to the world in need to-day,
Pray why should we not divide it with our brothers on the way?
And why should we hover o'er it and refuse to let it go,
When the dear old world is hung'ring for the truth we claim to know?
  Let us all be large.

Every truth that comes to mortal from the higher wisdom sphere
Is intended for upliftment of the people now and here,
And to try to catch and cage it is a useless thing to do,
For 'tis handed down to others just as much as down to you.
  Let us all be large.

We are pleased because we found it and its beauty love to show,
But in selfishness we guard it as if loth to let it go.
It is childish to be narrow and in spirit be so small
O'er possessions that were given us abundantly for all,
  Let us all be large.

That our truth has changed religion is encouraging to know,
For this age would never sanction that old hell of long ago,
Nor the same old God of vengeance,
  with the devil at his side,
All those ancient superstitions, since our truth came forth, have died.
  Let us all be large.

Let us hold before us ever all the beauties of our truth,
But be rising into manhood from the lessons of our youth.
Let us grasp the hands of brothers who are walking by our side,
And with them our cherished treasure in unselfishness divide.
  Let us all be large.

LEGERDEMAIN.

Cases Where It Is Practiced Are Still Coming to Light—The Latest Victim at Ray, Ind.—Another Credulous Victim Duped.

A. B. Noble of Ray, Ind., is the latest professed Spiritualist to allow credulity to predominate over good judgment. Early last spring he became a regular visitor to Fort Wayne, ostensibly on business, but it has developed that he went to consult fortune-tellers and clairvoyants, keeping posted on all the new ones that came to that town.

On Oct. 7, Mr. Noble went to Fort Wayne to meet a "Prof. Vaughan," and among other things the Professor had him give him a small amount of money which was put into an envelope and sealed and after some incantations was handed back to Noble with the instructions to carry it for several hours that it might work as a talisman to attract other money to him. Noble did this and the next day opened his package and found his money all right. He hurried back to the Professor in a day or so, who after the usual amount of "soft soaping," told Noble there was a band of evil spirits around him which he would have hard work to evade, and told him to come back on October 17, with all the money he could get, and they would try and overcome the evil influence of the band. Now Noble had a couple of hundred dollars of his own money, so on the pretense of needing it to pay for a carload of poultry which he was to ship in a day or two he was able to borrow from his business partner, his father and other friends enough to bring the amout up to a little over $1,100. In jubilant spirits Noble rushed to Fort Wayne on the day appointed and handed over the full amount, which was put into a large envelope and this then put into a still larger one, and the "ashes of good fortune" sprinkled in with it. Noble was then told it would be necessary for him to carry this for twenty hours for the good spirits to work with. Noble returned to Ray and guarded his package with jealous care for the allotted time, and when he opened it behold, NOTHING BUT A BUNCH OF WORTHLESS PAPER!

To shield himself Noble then gave out the report that he had lost the envelope containing the money on the streets of Ray. The farmers were delivering their poultry and were demanding their money, so the whole populace turned out to help in the search for the lost funds.

When on the second day the money still remained missing, those who had loaned him the money took him to serious task to account for the missing funds, when Noble broke down and made a clean breast of the whole affair.

About a year ago Noble had domestic trouble that ended in a separation of himself and wife, then followed a business failure that let down storekeepers all over this section of the country from whom he bought poultry, butter and eggs. Public sympathy was with him to that extent that his friends helped him to get a new start, but now they haven't a pleasant look for him and he has gone to live with his aged father near Montgomery, Mich.

The "Professor"? Oh, it's just a case of another field, ANOTHER NAME AND MORE VICTIMS, OF WHICH THE WOODS ARE FULL, AND MAY GOD HAVE MERCY ON THEM IN THEIR CREDULITY.

An Analysis of Sleep.

Illustrating Its Nature in Various Ways—Many Problems of Great Moment Have Evolved During Sleep, and Been Revealed in What Appears as a Dream.

Sleep, so freely and regularly indulged in by the animal kingdom, is as little understood as the subject of dreams or death itself.

While great relief and reanimation result from healthy sleep, yet Locke seems almost alone in maintaining that mental activity is not continuous during this state. Aristotle, Plato, Cicero, Kant, Leibnitz, Descartes, Hegel and a host of others contend that there is no cessation of mental activity during sleep, save as to the volitional, directional faculty of the individual.

That the animal kingdom requires sleep; is quite established. That renewed vigor follows this period of quiescence is also clear.

That many problems of great moment have evolved during sleep and been revealed in what appears as a dream, has been repeatedly demonstrated, and indicates clearly that, while association and environment, and great anxiety may, and do, in cases, influence mental activity during sleep, that this process is as often independent of such influences is illustrated in the interpretation of certain inscriptions found at Nippur by Dr. Herman Hilprecht. This noted Assyriologist having made many marvelous discoveries for the University of Penn., in the valleys of the Tigris and Euphrates, officially reported that the interpretation of certain inscriptions had been revealed to him during his sleeping hours

No attempt was made to enter into a discussion of the philosophy of the application of this knowledge, and I concede my inability to do more than conclude that the mind of the professor was in a high state of receptivity and corresponding activity during the period of his sleeping hours on this occasion; induced, probably, by his interest in the subject.

This circumstance is noteworthy as being more than a mere coincidence, since it savors strongly of an interposition of extra mundane intelligence in aid of information which is to inure to the common good of mankind.

The weakness of this argument may be pointed out as not being supported by direct testimony, but may I not ask if an evolutional interpretation of a phenomena of nature is not the only logical application to be attributed to a phase of nature which is susceptible to the unfoldment and edification of humanity?

There is here every evidence of special creative and studied effort to impart information, veiled from the gaze of the present age, by stamping its impress upon the sensitive and active soul while its mortal possessor has no conscious control over its functions.

Had this data proceeded from a less exalted source, criticism calling into question its authenticity and value might have been admissible.

It occurs to me that the fact of one dream being established, is sufficient evidence to indicate that such unconscious mental activity is not incidental and occasional, but a perfectly natural and continuous function of the mind of man.

Let us consider a subject on the verge of falling asleep, but who, nevertheless, is making heroic efforts to avoid being overcome by this condition. It is noteworthy in cases of this kind, if the efforts of the individual are sufficiently vigorous and persistent, it will be found that sleep has actually overtaken him on one or more occasions, and from which he has found himself abruptly aroused, and during which times of semi-consciousness the mind has been discovered to be in a high state of activity, and particularly so in respect to matters absolutely foreign to subjects which have most recently engaged his conscious attention.

It will be conceived that the mind has already started on its customary journey, untrammeled by the disciplinary harassing of conscious direction, but whose start has been temporarily arrested by the super-human efforts of the individual to retain conscious control a few moments longer. There may now be presumed to be in progress a battle royal between the mind, free and unshackled, and the same faculty in the directional grasp of the conscious individual requiring it, arbitrarily, to make correlative response in the field of environment. Sleep has now overcome the individual for a brief moment, during which comparatively infinitesimal period of time, the free mind has seemingly wandered over an age of strange experiences, only to be suddenly checked when the individual finds himself abruptly awakened and enabled to continue his attention to his latest subject without any apparent interruption save a most vivid recollection of the momentary experience of his free mind. This will continue until one or the other is victorious—and sleep is usually the victor.

The two experiences here noted have nothing in common with each other. The pursuit of the directional mind is entirely different in character and purpose from that of the free mind which at once wanders over fields and among incidents with which the directional mind may be totally unacquainted and unfamiliar.

Let the individual so systematize his research to ascertain, immediately on waking, if any recollection appears of any mental activity which may have supervened since his last waking moment, and it will almost invariably be discovered that fragments of the work of the free mind will manifest themselves clearer by degrees as studious attention is given the subject; and what, to the casual observer, will appear to be fragmentary ideas obtained at random in a desultory fashion at some previous time, will be found to be in reality the results of great mental activity during the unconscious period from which the subject has just emerged. The degree of excitability resulting from this activity will determine the vividness of their recollection in the waking moments; and hence it will be seen that what has been here described is a perfectly normal, regular and certain function of the mind, and the period known as sleep and unconsciousness is, in reality, a period of the greatest mental activity, and may logically be presumed to be the source and inspiration of the great ideas and problems to be evolved and embellished during the conscious moments.

"The night time of the body is the day time of the soul."—Jamblicus.

Thus it will appear that there are no dormant moments in the animal life, and that the mind of man is always active whether the individual possessor sleeps or not.

It will be asked why we are so tired before sleeping, and so fully refreshed on waking?

Animal life is born in sleep, and this condition predominates for a considerable period pending the mental and physical development of the new birth. This requirement diminishes with the growth and development of the individual even to old age; and I would use the same argument which insures the creation of animal life by and through the gratification of the sexes, to support the theory of induced relaxation of physical stimulus resulting in weariness and sleep, to enable the free mind to function in relief from the cumbersome attributes of physical life, and continue the accumulation and advancement of spiritual growth and development.

It is thus that the directional mind obtains fresh and renewed stimulus for the morrow from this never ceasing fountain of mental activity.

It will be seen that the mind becomes weary as a result of its enforced association with unsympathetic environments which are foreign to the purposes of the free mind. Note the closed eyelids in a court of justice pending the discussion of a technical question, or among the auditors at the ordinary Sunday sermon. For the mind not in sympathy with a subject, or not of sufficient capacity to grasp a theory or participate in a discussion, the apology is made that the subject is not interesting; and, if no person or other attraction comes to the rescue, the individual straightway falls asleep to enable his mind to relieve itself from its unsympathetic environment and pursue its untrammelled course during the unconscious moments of its possessor, and obtain stimulation for a further onslaught against associations not in harmony with its aims, and which are sure to be encountered as a natural result of promiscuous environment, when its possessor regains consciousness.

It may be observed, however, that the more potent reason lies in the fact that sleep is the natural condition of animal life from which it is ruthlessly distracted by the pangs of thirst and hunger, as well as by enforced associations not in harmony with the aims and purposes of the free mind.

The volitional requirements of the conscious state evidently necessitate the sleep which is incumbent in animal life; and while the more cumbersome part of man enjoys the rest and solace of sleep, the intellectual function is ceaselessly at work on problems of its own.

It will, therefore, be seen that sleep and dreams are integral features of the same subject, and the treatment of one necessitates a notice of the other.

Many problems which agitate one during the hours of consciousness, are elucidated and unfolded to us during sleep in what appears to us as a dream; and while many such developments are similar in the corresponding analysis to the experimental suggestions of the conscious moments, they are none the less valuable and interesting for having been thus stimulated by conscious incentive.

"Nothing more closely resembles the death of man than sleep; but it is in sleep that the soul of man appears most divine, and it is then that it foresees something of the future; for then, as it seems, it is most free."—Xenophon Cyropedia, Book 8, ch. 7.

That many of the most noted and interesting characters in history were able to accomplish stupendous results with a minimum amount of sleep, is emphasized in the lives of Humboldt and Napoleon I, whose careers, although dissimilar in the manner of impressing humanity of the value of individual genius, each in his own way left his great heritage to humanity with the assistance of less than four hours of sleep in twenty-four, while other instances of equally noted personages may be cited in which the individual was a most profound sleeper.

Cato, one of the calmest of men, prefaced many of his greatest accomplishments with a profound sleep.

On the eve of his suicide, Plutarch informs us, he delayed the commission of the act until the receipt of certain information concerning the welfare of certain of his friends, to obtain which he had dispatched couriers, and pending the arrival of whom, he enjoyed the luxury of a profound sleep, notwithstanding the determination of becoming on the morrow a denizen of the spirit world. Suicide was in this age a most honorable death.

Alexander the Great opposed any interference with the contentment he found in sleep, and the great Marius, in his last battle against Sylla, is reported to have fallen into a heavy sleep under an oak tree as the onslaught began.

Augustus Caesar was likewise an indulgent sleeper, but I cannot conceive that in these instances the tendency resolved itself into a passion resulting from power and luxurious living, since events of great moment in shaping the lives of these men were constantly happening, and I am unable to assume that this propensity to sleep was not a necessity, and probably a prefatory condition to other and further successful moves on the political chess-board.

THE ANGELS' CHORUS.

When I hear the angels' singing
Sounding through the ether spaces,
When I hear their chorus ringing,
To awake earth's dormant races,—
Then I join that welling chorus,
Singing with the heavenly throng,
Voicing harmony sonorous
Blended with the angels' song.

When I see those happy faces
Shining with celestial light,
Brightening the darkest places
Hid away from truth and right,—
Then I join the chorus swelling
Earth with song so sweet and clear,
Cheering man, his gloom dispelling
For he knows that friends are near.

When I know that life eternal
Is a part of God's wise plan,
That we go to worlds supernal
After earth's allotted span,
Then I join the chorus telling
Man of joy he soon must share,
When he finds that better dwelling,
Far beyond earth's pain and care.

Miracles in Surgery.

Making Persons Better by Mechanical Means,--Hence in a Measure Spiritualizing Them--The Idiot Made Intelligent, the Blind Made to See and the Wrong-Doer Reformed. A Mother's Sacrifice.

As set forth in the New York World, the medical men here and abroad are awaiting with considerable interest a report from Berlin giving complete details of a most daring and unusual surgical operation performed there a few weeks ago.

An idiot child, the six-year-old daughter of Mrs. Louis Wolff, a resident of Berlin, has been converted into an intelligent being by the process of grafting part of the mother's thyroid gland upon the child's pancreas. Reduced to plainer language, this means that part of the mother's throat has been transferred by the grafting process to a gland, or tissue, lying directly at the back of the stomach. By this operation the dull, inactive brain of little Lena Wolff has been awakened so that it is now performing the duties for which it was intended.

This, in the history of medical science, is without a parallel, not only because such an operation was never attempted before, but also because of its seeming vagueness. The idea of grafting part of the throat of a mother to the pancreas gland of her child with the expectation of converting the child from idiocy to a normal mental condition, would seem at first glance unworthy of serious consideration. But Dr. Karl Garre, professor of surgery in the medical university of Bresslau, did exactly what has been described above, and recent dispatches from Berlin declare that the operation has been pronounced a complete success.

Prof. Garre is an eminent German surgeon whose success in the transplanting of organs from one animal to another and even from the lower animals to human beings, has attracted the attention and admiration of surgical men all over the world. When his report of how he changed Lena Wolff from an idiot into a bright and intelligent little girl is completed it will form a valuable addition to the list of modern miracles of surgery.

Lena an Idiot from Birth.

From the details of the case already received from Germany it appears that Lena Wolff was born an idiot six years ago. Reason never dawned for her as in other babies. She had come into the world without one apparent spark of intelligence and seemed doomed to pass her whole life without knowing the joys and the sorrows of living.

Her case was called to the attention of Prof. Garre, who was interested from the very beginning, because in it he saw a possibility of being able to prove the correctness of a theory on which he had been at work. This involved the probable action or influence that certain substances or secretions found in the ductless glands of the human body have upon the blood.

It is the blood, as everybody knows, that feeds the brain; keeping it active and clear and in good working order. If the blood is thin or sluggish the brain is first to record that fact. The great German surgeon knew that the reason Lena Wolff's brain was dull and inactive was because the blood was not feeding it as it should.

One of the principal duties of the pancreas, situated just behind the stomach, is to superintend the regular feeding of the brain with good blood, according to the theory of the German surgeon. In the case of Lena Wolff, he believed the pancreas was minus one very important digestive essential, without which it could not do its work properly. That very important essential had to be supplied by grafting a portion of a ductless gland from another living person.

The child's mother readily offered herself as a sacrifice. She was perfectly willing to undergo the necessarily painful and tedious operation of having part of her throat grafted on the body of her little daughter if only it would give Lena her reason. The mother's throat was selected because of the accessibility there to the thyroid gland, a ductless gland.

The operation took place in one of the large hospitals in Berlin, and by the grafting process one end of the mother's thyroid gland was released and stretched over to the exposed pancreas of her idiot daughter.

For days neither mother nor child was permitted to move. To insure a successful grafting operation they had been tightly bound together, the child's body against her mother's neck, and there they remained until the severed end of the thyroid gland had knit firmly to the pancreas, forming a living, pulsating link between mother and daughter. Then the link was cut, leaving a portion of the thyroid gland grafted successfully to the child's pancreas. It is believed now that both mother and child will recover. The complete success of the operation cannot, however, be announced yet, as too short a time has elapsed since the operation was performed.

But it is known that the dawn of reason came to little Lena Wolff almost immediately after the thyroid gland began to knit. For the very first time the idotic stare gave place to a look of intelligence. She may grow up to be a very bright young woman.

Dr. Swale Vincent, professor of physiology in the University of Manitoba, at Winnipeg, Canada, has prepared an extremely interesting article on the duties of the thyroid gland, the pancreas and other ductless glands, which appeared in a recent issue of the London Lancet.

"It is believed," he says, "that these ductless glands manufacture and pour directly or indirectly into the blood stream some substance or substances which are of service to the economy, either by supplying a need or by destroying other substances which are needless or positively harmful. This last function is usually prescribed to the thyroid and parathyroid glands.

"It is obvious that, in the broadest sense of the expression, all tissues and organs of the body may be said to have an internal secretion—i. e., the blood which leaves by their veins contains different chemical substances from that which enters by their arteries.

"The most usually quoted example, however, of a gland which has both an external and an internal secretion is the pancreas. A relation between diseases of the pancreas and diabetes has long been suspected, but Minkowski and Mehring first definitely showed that complete removal of the pancreas in the dog, cat and pig is followed by diabetes, having the usual symptoms of that disease in man. That this is caused by the absence of an internal secretion is proved by the fact that it does not occur if the gland be left in situ and the duct tied, nor does it occur if a portion of the pancreas be grafted in some situation remote from its normal position. How the internal secretion of the pancreas normally prevents glycosuria is not clear. We can only say that it exerts some influence upon the carbohydrate metabolism, either by favoring the formation of glycogen in the liver from the dextrose taken to it by the portal vein or by furthering the oxidation of dextrose in the tissues generally."

Equally remarkable and interesting is the operation by which sight has been restored to the blind eyes of little Margaret Huber, aged ten years, of No. 524 East Eighty-fourth street, New York City. She has become the subject of widespread interest among opthalmologists by reason of her "pinhole camera" eyes. Eye surgeons who have followed the case at the German Poliklinik declare it to be, so far as their observations have gone, without an exact parallel.

Nobody knows exactly how Margaret became blind. The liquid matter constituting the lens of the eyes became atrophied and was entirely absorbed, leaving the lens a thick, opaque, fibrous cap, which shut out every glimmer of light. This was three years ago, when the little girl was only seven.

Several operations were tried, but with no good results. The membranes of the eyes were punctured, but they immediately closed again over the openings like sheet rubber when a hole is made in it.

Dr. John A. Price, chief surgeon of the opthalmic department of the German Poliklinik, took charge of the case, performing three operations in February, March and April, 1904. The third one restored the sight to the left eye. The right eye remained stone blind until two weeks ago, when he performed a most unusual and successful operation upon it.

He first made a peculiarly shaped pair of scissors, the under blade pointed and the upper blade blunt. This instrument he inserted through an incision in the cornea made at the top. Pushing the points down through the pupil, with the sharp blade he punctured the opaque membrane of the lens capsule and cut it squarely in two. The task of the surgeon was to cut so delicately and precisely as to divide the obstruction and let the light into the eye again.

The operation was entirely successful. The dead lens matter remains in the eye and on either side of the pupil a speck of the opaque substance can yet be seen. This in time may be absorbed.

Philadelphia and Toledo, Ohio., have recently contributed to the list of marvels of surgery through operations on the brains of incorrigible and mentally defective boys. A still more recent case is that of Carl Fredericks, aged nine years, of No. 200 Clinton street, Hoboken. He is under observation at the Ranway Reformatory preparatory to the practical reconstruction of his brain.

Surgery to Awaken Sense of Right.

The doctors say the boy's brain is so peculiarly constructed that it prevents him from being good for more than an hour at a time. The head is of abnormal shape, the skull coming almost to a point. The ears are small and protruding, and the eyes are as sharp as a ferret's

Tests made a few days ago showed that the boy had no sense of right or wrong. This is attributed to an abnormal brain growth. As the result of the operation, which includes the cutting out of certain parts of the brain, it is expected to relieve the boy of his wicked tendencies and transform him into a model youth.

Scientific surgery is gradually solving the problem of making us over piecemeal. Raymond Moore, aged twenty, of Baltimore, lost the sixth and seventh ribs on the right side. Dr. Hamilton Brown replaced them with artificial ribs of hard rubber tubing.

By an operation at Fordham Hospital, Joseph Reicher was supplied with a silver windpipe to replace the original, which had been damaged beyond repair by a hard fall.

Dr. Kaintsky, the famous Russian surgeon, recently astonished the medical world by furnishing a man with artifical arteries. The operation took place in Dr. Kaintsky's private laboratory at St. Petersburg. The patient, a very rich farmer and cattle raiser, Ivan Poitinkask by name, had collided violently with a stump while driving in a sleigh. He was hurled out and impaled upon a broken branch. The jagged piece of wood struck him below the hip joint and ranged down for about four inches. The wound was an exceedingly ugly one. It was directly over and in line with the femoral artery which supplies the entire leg with blood. Dr. Kaintsky saved Poitinkask's life by removing the injured part of the femoral artery and replacing it with an artificial one.

The Berlin surgeon, Dr. Seyfried, has succeeded in giving a man a new top of his skull, made from the skull of an ox.

At Stamford, Conn., a unique operation on the skull of the two-year-old son of Michael Gunther has given the boy rationality. The boy was born with normal mental and physical endowments and began to show, when a year old, signs of general deficiency in all his senses. It was finally determined by the surgeons interested in the case to explore the child's skull. Dr. J. T. Biggs, of New York, assisted by Drs. Whitehorn and Hogan, of New York, and Howell and Loeb, of Stamford, performed the operation at Stamford Hospital a few months ago. They removed a strip of bone from the skull three inches long and one-half inch wide, to give the brain a chance to grow. Immediately on recovering from the anaesthesia a look of normal intelligence showed in the child's eyes, proving the theory of the doctors that the skull had been pressing unduly on the brain. With the pressure relieved, the brain was free to exert itself. The doctors believe the boy will soon be able to talk and act as rationally as the brightest of his little playmates.

Dr. Guthrie and Dr. Carroll, of the University of Chicago, have been making a series of remarkable experiments in surgery. Hearts of dogs have been successfully moved up into the animals' necks and there performed their functions. The circulation of blood in canines has been reversed without causing the animals any apparent inconvenience.

"What we have learned," said Dr. Carrell a short time ago, "gives us hope that some day we may replace wounded and worn-out hearts in human beings with the healthy, youthful and strong hearts of living monkeys."

Sewing Up a Stabbed Heart.

A recent dispatch from Milan described a wonderful surgical operation performed there by Dr. Meda. A workman had been murderously assaulted, a knife in the hand of an assassin actually piercing his heart. He was attended by surgeons who cut a way through his breast to reach the wounded heart. Three stitches were required to close the wound, which had almost entirely healed five days after the operation.

To restore sight to the blind eyes of William Heinard, of Washington, the specialists at the Episcopal Eye, Ear and Throat Hospital have grafted the transparent membrane of a Belgian hare's eyeballs to Heinard's eyes. The most recent reports on this operation indicate that it is going to be a success.

C. A. McCartney, a young contractor of Passadena, has survived the unusual experience of having his heart and lungs, exposed, washed, mended and replaced. He was injured last June by falling from a bicycle upon the upturned prongs of a hayrake. He is almost as well as ever.

At the Harper Hospital at Detroit, Dr. H. O. Walker has succeeded in giving a twelve-year-old boy a new shin bone taken from the leg of a dog.

WOMAN IN POLITICS.

They Are Assuming a Prominent Position Therein.

The elections of 1906 present a unique feature in the elections of Illinois, from the fact that all the parties have one or more lady candidates. The greatest interest in this feature is shown not only by the candidates themselves, but also by the women who participate in voting for them.

In response to a request for some information regarding these ladies some facts have been gathered and boiled down for publication.

Mrs. Carrie T. Alexander of Belleville, who was nominated by the Republican party to succeed herself on the Board of the State University, is so well known in Republican clubs, and G. A. R. circles that she needs no introduction to Illinois readers.

Miss Anna Nicholes, who was nominated by the State Central Committee of the Democratic party, September 29, was born and educated in Chicago, and later graduated from the Rockford College. She took the course of training in the Training School for Nurses in Chicago, but never practiced in that line. Very early her sympathies were enlisted in the cause of working women, and all her energies have been directed toward some amelioration of the curcumstances under which wage-earning women labor. For several years past she has lived at Neighborhood House doing settlement work, and incidentally filling onerous positions in the Consumers' League, the Trades Union League and editing the Women's Department of the Union Labor Advocate.

The Democratic party also nominated Miss Caroline Grote of the Normal School at Macomb, for Superintendent of Public Instruction; and although women throughout the State cannot vote for her, the fact of putting a woman at the head of the educational interests of the State has awakened the keenest interest in the mothers, the teachers and even the pupils of Illinois. Miss Grote has issued a tiny bulletin, setting forth her parentage, education and experience as a teacher and county superintendent, with the result that she is being invited by all kinds of women's societies to speak or meet with them.

The Prohibition party nominated two women trustees of the State University—Mrs. Eva Munson Smith of Springfield, and Miss Eva M. Shontz of Beverly Hills, Chicago. Mrs. Smith is well known in Republican circles as the wife of George C. Smith, and has been very active all her long life in the various organizations that appealed to educated, cultured women; this includes missionary societies of the Presbyterian church, W. C. T. U., Suffrage Association, D. A. R., Illinois Humane Society, Associated Charities, and she found time to issue a few books, "Woman in Sacred Song," containing the best that any women has ever done in hymnology. Miss Shontz is a graduate of Monmouth College and taught school in Centreville, Iowa; she also spent a year at the Philadelphia School of Oratory. She was an admirer of Miss Willard, and has been very active in Y. W. C. T. U. work. Her highest ambition is said to be as good a woman as Frances Willard."

GLORIOUS NEWS.

A Splendid Medium Wins Her Case in Colorado.

The following items are from Colorado Springs papers:

The two appeals of the City of Colorado Springs vs. Lucy A. Sampson were yesterday dismissed at the cost of the city.

This is the final termination of a hard-fought case and makes the third victory for Mrs. Sampson. Attorney Wm. Swift represented Mrs. Sampson in all of the three cases.

She was acquitted twice in the lower court and the case attracted considerable attention throughout the country. Mrs. Sampson's attorney, Mr. Swift, claimed that Mrs. Sampson was not guilty of violating the ordinance and that the ordinance was unconstitutional and he was successful in his claim.

The cases of the city against Mrs. Lucy A. Sampson, in which the defendant was charged with practicing clairvoyancy without a license, have been dismissed by Judge Robert Kerr, in accordance with stipulations filed by the parties to the suits.

Judge Robert Kerr in the county court has dismissed the case of the city against Mrs. Lucy Sampson, charged with practicing clairvoyancy without a license.

Letter From Mrs. Sampson.

To the Editor:—The enclosed clippings are from Colorado Springs, Col., papers, bearing on the case of Mrs. Lucy A. Sampson, a clairvoyant medium, who was arrested twice for not paying a prohibitive license of one hundred dollars per year to qualify her for giving psychic readings, and for charging for same. She won both cases before the police court; then it was appealed to the county court, from which the two appeals were both dismissed at the cost of the city.

This is a grand victory for the mediums throughout Colorado, and for Spiritualists generally, as it establishes the fact that all true mediums have as much right to practice their religion as any other denomination, and they have a right to ask and receive compensation the same as all other religious bodies.

The Constitution of these United States gives liberty to worship our Creator according to the dictates of our own conscience.

Only one sermon is credited to Jesus Christ; all his other teachings were in the form of parables or manifestations, objective lessons, as it were, to show us the power of spirit and as God is claimed to be a spirit, then spirit power is the greatest of all, pre-eminently above and beyond all others, hence Spiritualists who develop along these lines have discernments far beyond those who refuse to investigate or develop the receptive and spiritual senses.

The five material senses must perish with this material body, and hence the greater necessity for us all comes to us with greater momentum to develop the intuitive and spiritual senses, which live for ever with the spiritual body. LUCY A. SAMPSON.

THE PSYCHOGRAPH

OR

Dial Planchette.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than twelve years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the

with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

Very Remarkable Doings.

Occurrences at Mr. T. W. Stanford's Seances with the Noted Australian Medium, Charles Bailey. More Tablets Are Brought.

It is a somewhat remarkable coincidence that the reproduction of photos of some of the Assyrian tablets received at Mr. Stanford's circle should have been arranged for just before the receipt of news of their total destruction at the Leland Stanford Jr. University during the recent earthquake. At first the extent of damage to the museum and its exhibits could not be ascertained, and it was only after the work of clearing away the debris had been done that the exact position of affairs was known. Strange was it also that during Mr. Stanford's absence from the circle, on September 14, it was announced by Dr. Whitcomb that on the following Friday night, after Mr. Stanford's return, they would commence to bring a second series of tablets. In the following week, on September 18, the San Francisco mail arrived, bringing the news that the tablets being found ground to powder under the fallen ruins. These are some of the originals of those given as supplement to this issue of the Harbinger, and around which in American journals last year so much controversy was raised. Of the genuines of the tablets there can be no doubt, but what chiefly concerns investigators into the possibilities and potentialities of unseen forces is that solid matter can pass through solid matter when spiritual forces set to work.

On the evening of September 20, true to promise came the first of a new set of tablets, and it fell with such force on the table that it was broken in half. It was brought, it was stated, from a mound at Nineveh, and with hieroglyphic inscriptions on both sides, which will be translated by Dr. Robinson at a subsequent meeting.

It may be mentioned here that on Mr. Bailey's recent visit to London he carried with him three tablets, and took them to the British Museum. Dr. Whitcomb informed the circle on September 14, that Bailey saw Mr. King, Dr. Budge's assistant in the Assyrian room, who deciphers with Dr. Budge cuneiform inscriptions. The medium said, "I have three tablets, and I would like you to tell me if they are genuine." Mr. King asked who he was and where he got them. He gave his name and said, "I got them from a friend"—which was perfectly true, added Dr. Whitcomb. "Yes, they are perfectly true," said Mr. King. Then he deciphered them. The whole three were receipts for corn, and the translations are in the possession of Mr. Stanford.

The following is a brief record of the circles held since August 17:

Fourth Seance, August 24.—Address by Prof. Denton, "What is the use of it?" Phenomena. Solid lump of clay containing flint spear heads. Flag from the Soudan used in the Battle of Ondurman with letters from the Koran worked in on either side; a most remarkable exhibit, promised many months before, and procured through the agency of Hassan, a soldier killed in the war, and in communication with Abdul and Selim.

Fifth Seance, Friday, August 31. Creswick night. Three of his own original pieces given by Creswick, the late well-known actor, through the mediumship of Charles Bailey. The third one, "The Wanderer's Return," acted with thrilling effect, will be given in a future issue.

Sixth Seance, September 7. Address by Professor Denton on "God is a Spirit." Phenomena. A lovely and rare bird from Malay, unlike any brought before, with yellow head and brown beautifully marked body. Lump of clay with spear-heads embedded. These made ten in all. Dr. Whitcomb explained that they were brought from Central America, from a sort of pre-historic flint arsenal—that 2,000 or 3,000, all sizes, some very large, could be brought if desired. Yogi promised to grow tree from Mango seed if obtained for him.

Seventh Seance, September 14. Addresses by Dr. Witherow (given below) and Signor Valetti. Phenomena. Bird brought, mate to the one of previous week, a female, with less bright coloring. Abdul said it was "real wife of Sahib bird brought the week before," and they met as long lost mates. Three small spear-heads in clay. Mango seed thrown on table, as none could be procured in Melbourne. Given in charge of a clergyman, who is to make his own private marks on it previous to being grown by Yogi at circle.

Rev. W. H. Witherow's address, given on September 14, on "Conditions," has been selected for reproduction, as full of interest for all who desire to obtain the best results when sitting for physical and other phenomena.

Rev. W. H. Witherow:—It gives me very much pleasure to speak to you once more. To me it is perfectly delightful to return and through a sensitive commune with my brethren and sisters who are yet tabernacling in the flesh; and I try always, when called upon to speak, to say something that will help you and be beneficial to you spiritually. This is my mission—to teach, to uplift spiritually, and to prepare men and women for the life to come.

"I have been asked to speak on the subject of "Conditions," and as a plain man who has learned a little, who has received a little knowledge in the spirit world, I desire to give you my thoughts and advice on how to obtain the best results. I have no need to tell those who have been sitting in the circle here for a long time, how very necessary it is that there should be perfect harmony, and that you should be en rapport with this spirit world to obtain good results.

From time to time you learn something of the finer forces; for a long period man knew little or nothing about the occult forces and power. Only when he seriously began to investigate in the face of opposition, in the face of revilings and persecutions, and even death itself, did he become possessed of a little knowledge concerning the spiritual forces. It has been truly said by other speakers that conditions are necessary for almost everything—for the production of everything round about you. To grow corn you must have the requisite conditions—there must be soil and seed, moisture and light and heat; without these your crops would fail. To take pictures of the human body with a photographic lens you must have the necessary conditions; how much more so, then, when dealing with those finer forces which are round about you and of which you know so little?

You have not an intimate knowledge of the laws that obtain, and are in operation in the spirit world; hence you must go to the spiritual messengers for a good deal of that knowledge. A Yogi, a descendant of one of the ancient races of India, who spoke to you in the spirit on the last occasion, tried to make you understand, in his broken language, that it was necessary that there should be as near a perfect condition of the body for the proper manifestation of spirit power as you can have it.

Why did these old ascetics retire to the caves? It was because they knew that by entering into silence, peace and quietness, they could be at one with the spiritual forces round about them. They may not call the spiritual hosts by the same name as you, but they understand and realize that the spirits of men having great power, who have dwelt in the flesh, are in communication with them.

I said once before that man's normal condition, his proper state, should be perfect health of spirit, soul and body. As Paul prayed long ago, "I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless." A great many people make a mistake by putting it the other way round—body, soul and spirit. It is spirit, soul and body, because the work from the spiritual world begins from within and not from without.

Did you ever know a man with a pure spirit who had a dirty body? I do not think you have, for "cleanliness is next to godliness," and no godly man can be unclean; and if I touch to-night on some of the common habits of the day, popular prejudices, I pray you do not think I am a fanatic, but I am telling you to live the better life which will bring you not only peace, and joy, and satisfaction, but will make you a power amongst the people with whom you dwell.

I have been told that there are present here, from time to time, one or two of the clergy, and I am so pleased to know it. They are the spiritual teachers in the flesh and they should receive spiritual knowledge. People look to them to answer their questions, and they should be filled—first emptied and then filled; emptied of all pre-conceived notions and ideas, of all theological dogmatic teachings, and filled with the truth and spiritual light. Then they will become a power in the land.

From what I have said you will gather that it is necessary that every sitter should be pure. Now I must, as a faithful messenger, say that Spiritualists who are smokers do not make the best investigators—not that there is any sin attached to smoking in itself; it is a habit, I believe, derived from savage life, but there cannot be any question that it is defiling. There is no doubt that a man who does not smoke is cleaner than one who does, and I know that smoking is an obstacle, a bar to perfect harmony between fleshly and spiritual things. I am not going to enumerate many of the vicious habits and customs of the present day; they are known to you too well!

The Yogi Indian said that one must not partake of swine flesh if he would be a seer, if he would understand Nature's laws, if he would be taught of God. In the old dispensation—which you call the Mosaic dispensation—the eating of swine's flesh was prohibited; on scientific grounds I believe that this is verified to-day. I remember there was a very serious discussion in the German Empire about prohibiting the importation of the flesh of the pig, for the reason that it was productive of many diseases. But I am not going to say that you cannot be a good sitter or a good medium if you do eat the flesh of swine, but I do say that a man or woman who does eat of the blood, is unclean; I do say that a man becomes savage like unto an animal if he eats largely of animal food. Take the man who lives upon beer and beef, he becomes fleshly, sensual. Do you know that the fakirs of India lived largely on seeds and vegetable cereals. I am not an advocate of vegetarianism, but I do believe that the herbs and the grains and the fruits were given for man's food, and if you never partake of the flesh of animals I am quite sure you would not be any the worse for it. Some of you will wonder why I touch upon this subject, but it is of importance. Man should be pure in spirit and in thought; the sensual or fleshly cannot be joined to the spiritual. And if your life is pure, then you draw to yourself the refining spiritual influences that are around about you. Oh, my friends, think of the gin shops and other such places, remember that they draw to themselves the earth-bound, the sensual, whose punishment is an unsatisfied craving which was bred in the flesh; they will not hearken to the spiritual teachers and they wander about. You read in the Epistles of certain who kept not their first estate. Milton was right when he said that, "Millions of spiritual creatures walk the earth unseen, both when we wake, and when we sleep."

You remember the parable—the man's house was swept and garnished, the evil one was cast out, and after a time he returned to his old ways and the house was occupied again, filled up with evil influences.

Let us presume that, according to your light and conscience and living a life that will be productive of good spiritual results, you come to the seance room with a peaceful, calm mind, leaving all that is worldly, all that annoys and worries and perplexes you outside. Truly you are about to enter the holy place to communicate with the spirits of the so-called dead. It is a solemn time for everyone—or should be. But alas, some enter with frivolous minds, without a desire to be benefited spiritually, something of the mind, with which they go to the theater, and we find that instead of having a perfect chain, a magnetic chain, we have links of gold and silver and iron. The time is coming when men and women, with a desire for knowledge and for a perfection of their spiritual condition, will assemble and the results will be as it was on that pentecostal day—tongues of fire will be upon the heads of everyone and they shall speak with new tongues, they shall prophesy; the phenomena that will be produced will be like unto that recorded in the Testament. Get back to primitive Christianity, the simple, Christian life. I often think that homely, lowly Spiritualists, who are seeking spirituality and the perfecting of the spiritual life, are nearer to primitive Christianity—the Christianity of the first three centuries—than millions of church adherents who are seeking to serve God with pomp and ceremony. The early Christians met as you are meeting, in the house of one of the brethren, and they broke the holy bread and sang hymns unto God; and some spake with the tongues of prophecy, and others cast out evil influences. In the catacombs at Rome an inscription has been found relating to an exorcist. That office has died out of the church, and there is no such officer in the modern church, but in the early days of Christianity were one or more exorcists attached to each church, who understood something of spiritual laws and could banish the evil influences that, like the man we read of in the gospels, threw him upon the ground and tare him.

With harmonious conditions you should expect great spiritual results. The source of weakness, I find, is that some come from curiosity, others desire to be amused. It is true to-day as of old that many have come to blaspheme and they have remained to pray. Understand me that there should be meetings held for special purposes; for instance, an advanced class for the production of phenomena and the perfecting of mediumship. I see a number of men and women here to-night, and each one has a gift of some kind. In such a circle your gift would develop, your mediumship would develop; but in a mixed circle as you call it, this does not frequently happen. There should be other meetings for beginners where they could be taught. The evil of to-day is, my friends, that people desire to witness advanced phenomena before they understand the rudiments of spiritual philosophy. Remember that you were once placed in the A B C division of your school before you entered the third or fourth division. What would you have thought of the schoolmaster who took you as a little child and placed you amongst the seniors? Herein we have found the reason why Spiritualism does not make headway as it should.

There is, however, a good time coming for spiritual investigators because they hold the primitive teaching, the simple truth in its purity—what is needed for the uplifting of humanity. The church, with her doctrines and dogmas, her vestments, her incense swinging and her cathedrals, her priests and priestesses, has failed largely to bring about the desired spiritual state. As man becomes more cultured and receives more knowledge, he looks down upon these things as you look upon the memories of the fetish men. What is needed is the simplicity of the spiritual church of the first Christian century. If you have ever read the writings of Tertullian and others of the Christian fathers, you will find there recorded many incidents, even to the end of the third or beginning of the fourth century, showing that what you call supernatural or miraculous things have passed away from the church. Primitive Christianity is what each and everyone should strive for at the present time; men and women would listen and you could command the attention of millions who are now careless.

Do you not, my friends, believe that the wayward, the unthinking, the evil, can read the scripture as well as you? True, they may not understand it spiritually, but they can read the promises, and when the clergy stand in their pulpits and teach them that "God is the same yesterday, to-day and for ever," when they read the words of the Nazarene, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go to my Father," when the people read that certain signs and wonders should follow the teaching of the truth, and they say unto their teachers: "Where are the signs and wonders promised?" their weak-kneed explanation, their apologies for want of power are derided and laughed at because the Word says it shall be so; and what right have they to say it shall not? A weak explanation cannot help the cause of truth, but when there is a perfectly harmonious body of people, the signs and wonders must follow, and you can go forth to the world and give evidences of the truth. My time has expired. Some other evening I shall continue this subject, "How to Obtain the Best Results."—Mrs. Charles Bright, in the Harbinger of Light.

Mental Philosophy

Life's Evolutionary Process From Microbes to Man.

What is the controlling force of mind whose effect upon the true destiny of life is as lasting as time in its development, as it seeks the condition of God himself? There can but one answer, it must be love. We do not deny that occasions in the development of life have made physical strength a necessity. How else could man have subdued his crude animal instincts, the source from which he sprang? The vicious animal character had to be subdued and covered by love after that subjection was made available. Reason in the highest form that I can conceive, it can find no fault with this assertion.

While in truth, love is the only power that eventually must shape the true destiny of life which leads to perfect conditions, passion and in fact, every faculty of mind by which mankind has ever been guided, made of love a transitory personal condition and used it only for selfish designs, where in truth it must become universal and govern and control every intellectual power exactly the same. It must be governed by a high degree of intellectual endowment, where energy and effort in using their forces are so directed that each and every human being with whom it comes in contact will receive the full and exact reward that equals the effort of their life.

In fact, love has its degrees of comparison, it has its limit of operations, it forms a circle surrounding every spark of life, and its circles are great or small in proportion to the advanced condition of that life.

An animal loves its offspring in its wildest and most vicious condition, but greedily devours the life of another to satisfy its appetite.

The love of a dog for his master is phenomenal, a condition of devotion which equals, if not excels the average love of man. Love, too, in its smaller circles of life has peculiar conditions whose effect seems to be the same at certain stages of its existence in both animal and man; that is, selfish and sordid in its nature. The dog that loves its master endures pain, when it sees its master love another of its kind, and will demonstrate this selfish spirit very plainly too. The same condition exists in man and woman, as well. They can love their own offspring to an extent that they will deprive themselves of every comfort of life; ah! even sacrifice their life itself in order to protect the freedom of the child where his errors have led him into a criminal channel, where his freedom, if not his life must be taken to satisfy the law. Yet these same human beings willingly would furnish means as well as circumstantial evidence to place in chains and prison, if not on the gallows, the life of another's child who had been guilty of committing the same error.

This seems to be a ruling passion in all mankind to centralize this love in small circles and keep it there, and thus create a central power where life can be fed, clothed and sheltered, and enjoy every luxury of earth, regardless of the source from which these luxuries are drawn, regardless of the condition left in the trail of its operations, although it is perfectly familiar with the miserable condition to others, it has created by its efforts.

It tenaciously clings to the environments that bring to it the object of its affection, whether this object be worldly power to command mankind and force them to obey. It is with these powers we seek to discuss the great fundamental principle of life, so as to discover if possible, to what extent they are in error, as well as the remedy that will forever remove that error, so that love can widen its field of usefulness, and become universal in all of its character, not only universal, but omniscient and omnipresent.

Then if our theory of life is true, the germ of discord which has ever contravened the element of human progress, which has builded the great walls where human beings are held in bondage has created forms of tyrannical governments, has in fact, made life a burden to the major portion of mankind in order that a few could enjoy the blessings of earth, which spring from human effort.

These circles of sordid love have been inherited from our ancestral race and have been sacredly held and cherished, as man's most commendable achievement, and dignity and honor, as well as surplus wealth have flowed into their coffers. In all European and Asiatic countries, these central forces in former ages, seldom changed. If at all, one powerful force subdued another.

The magnetic central power of individual man could not expect to enlarge his circle. It was forever at the mercy of the central power, under which it lived and was forced to contribute its surplus energy to this central force. This was the case until America was discovered. There the freedom of individual man found a field for its own development, and in this field, it has grown and expanded until even the monarchical governments of every sphere of earth have been forced to bow and acknowledge this individual power. Yet in this development tremendous forces came as an inheritance of the monarchical governments, from which we as a nation sprang. And as a government we placed in active operation many of these fundamental principles as the foundation upon which our free government should rest.

As a result America has on different occasions run rivers of blood drawn from the veins of humanity, in order that the principle of individual liberty might be sustained. But yet the magnetic central forces which seek to control human action by the control of the product of labor is still strongly intrenched and seem at least to be well fortified in their citadel of central love, each having its field of action, each controlling a portion of the individual power of the whole; all surrounded and encircled with a central force of government which acknowledges the power and authority of each.

The next step in human progress must be to dissolve these magnetic central powers so that absolute personal liberty to individual man will be assured and when he fully realizes the object of life by becoming familiar with its problems and widens his sphere of love, so as to become perfect with God, then will individuality fully realize that love is limitless and boundless as time and space, and that any sphere of human action which attempts to encircle it and hold it in a limited sphere is an error,

There must be a point in the evolution of life to be gained. There must be an object, and that object must be to convert darkness to light, and it must come through the developed power of conscious mind; it must come from proper thought to fully comprehend its mission.

Space is boundless and until converted to light by love, is utter darkness. We can comprehend that each planet is caused to revolve in a given sphere in this darkened condition of space.

That is in perfect accord with the life element which composes it, and that the sphere in which this planet floats will eventually become a field of light and life and love, the abiding place of the conscious minds from which this conversion came.

I am led to believe that each individual perfect mind becomes the parent of a planet, and that the absolute personal freedom of that mind will never be reached until that planet is converted into a paradise of love and light and joy, and an intellectual attainment to a perfect degree. That planet may by the thought and action of the mind that created it be very refined or it may be very crude; it may be light and airy, in which the life germs which compose it are in a high degree of development; or it may be dense and solid, from the selfish error from the mind from which it sprang, so that cycles of ages will be required for its conversion in the density and darkness in which it was thrown.

These conditions are the legitimate fruit which springs from the fact that every substance is attracted to that condition that is in harmony with it, and could we but see the trail we have left behind us; could we see floating in the atmosphere each germ of magnetic life which we have been the parent of, which we have converted from matter and started on life's mission in a new form that was a perfect personality of our being, that in fact was a germ-child of our own, the true reflection of our most inner soul.

Then if we fully comprehended the truth governing evolution, the growth and development of these germ-cells of life, until they reached the stage of conscious mind, then could we fully realize our future efforts ere personal freedom could possibly be obtained.

How stranger than fiction, then would life appear. We must not forget that every breath that we breathe we send into the atmosphere new living germs of life that are perfect representations of our mental condition at that hour. Every element of the body does the same thing.

We cannot exert one single minute of time that we are not producing living germs; we are in fact a hot-house for germ development. These life germs float in space until they find a perfect covering that is in harmony with each; this fact is true with both animal and vegetable life, and we, as their parents, must of necessity be their protector and in the future ages to come be their redeemer.

When error has been followed, when when darkness instead of light has been entered so, as before stated, conscious mind becomes the parent of a plaet, and its brilliancy or density must depend upon how near or how far have we wandered from the true road in life's development. Under these conditions life becomes a reality that is well worth our most serious consideration. And truth and virtue, as well as error, will receive from us a more candid and careful consideration, and each life we come in contact with, be it of high or low in its degrees of development to us, will be a problem worthy of our best efforts, not only to fully understand, but loyally and lovingly to assist.

A LETTER TO OUR READERS.

To the Readers of The Progressive Thinker:—In 1891, while on a visit to Pine Ridge Indian Agency, South Dakota, I was entertained by Rev. John Jutz, S. J., Father Superior of the Holy Rosary Mission, a Roman Catholic institution. I had previously spent a few days at Rushville Nebraska, where, on invitation of a committee, I had given a lecture in the M. E. Church, on "Some Social Aspects of Christianity." That lecture was published in the Rushville Sun. After supper, on the first day of my visit with him, my host said to me:

"Dr. Bland, I have read your lecture in the Rushville Sun, and I do not agree with you on religion. I want to ask you some questions on that subject."

I replied: "If you ask me any questions I can answer, I will answer them frankly and to the best of my ability."

"That is just what I want you to do, and what I should expect of you, for I believe you to be a good man."

Our dialogue covered the whole ground of the difference between the doctrines of the Roman Catholic church and rational religion.

My priestly catechist did not argue with me, but simply asked questions and waited for my answers.

I have written up that dialogue and propose to print it in a booklet, with the title, "A dialogue on Religion, Between Rev. John Jutz and Dr. T. A. Bland." This booklet will also contain a review of the Roman Catholic and the Seventh Day Advent theory of Spiritualism, showing the inconsistencies of their hypothesis, and a review of the rise and progress of rational religion.

It will be printed on fine paper and bound in flexible leatherette covers, with gold title. Price twenty cents, three copies for fifty cents or seven for one dollar.

I would appreciate advance orders, as that would aid me in paying my printer. The booklet will be ready for delivery by December first.

LETTER FROM ST. LOUIS, MO.

An Enjoyable Meeting of the State Board at the Home of President McArthur.

To the Editor:—Saturday, October 27, being the first regular meeting of the Missouri State Board after the National Convention, President McArthur, Brother Beauvais and wife, Sisters Jones and Hary, brought us stay-at-home members news of good cheer, that Spiritualism is fast taking the place in the world that it rightly belongs to and the National is with us in our desire to clear our ranks as fast as possible of the questionable speakers and mediums; and Spiritualism as an organized movement is fast attracting the attention of thinkers in every part of our country.

Th State of Missouri is organizing a fall and winter campaign for funds, in order that we may show a good work this year, and have a handsome balance on hand at the end of the year, to insure the continuation of the good work of spreading the gospel of truth and freedom in every corner of the state.

Brother Beauvais and wife, Brother Cershaw and wife, Brother Cornelius and wife, and ye editor-at-large and wife were notified that on the regular meeting night of the State Board also fell the anniversary of an event in the life of our honored president, never to be forgotten by him, that he had passed one more milestone in his journey of physical life. In honor of that event, on the invitation of himself and wife, we had the regular session of the Board at his home, which was adjourned early in order that we might partake of many of the luxuries of life prepared by the estimable Mrs. McArthur. After the inner man had been satisfied we met in the parlor and enjoyed the most pleasant evening that has been our lot to enjoy in many moons. As I sit writing this, the thought comes to my mind, if all Spiritualists could be of one accord as was that company of men and women, we could say, "The world is ours," as all the dogmas of the past could not withstand the great influence of co-operative fellowship displayed there, but would sweep back the cloud of ignorance, loosen the chains of bondage, and make every woman a queen and every man a king. In conclusion I will say, we all retired to our respective homes in the wee hours of the morn, better for having enjoyed that fellowship of men and women who have the knowledge that if a man die here, he still lives.

LOOKING FORWARD.

There is progress and much retrogression,
In the world's busy marts and highways,
Some persistently toil and move onward,
While the work of the slothful decays.
There are many who will not look forward
But they gropingly move with complaints
They consider their life's tasks a burden,
These would try all the patience of saints.

Do they think that by sitting and sighing,
They shall ever obtain all they want?
It is cowards alone fear the future,
And are foolishly saying, "I can't."
It is only by planning and striving,
With a forward look up life's steep hill,
That the goal may be reached if you're trying,
To meet problems of life with good will.

Are you now looking forward or backward
As the journey of life you pursue?
Are your thoughts of the past, or the future,
Is it progress with you, or review?
Are you trying to cheer weary mortals
Who are fighting life's battles alone,
Or sit you in mood reminiscent,
Of events that are long past and gone?

Are you thinking that you've done your duty,
And henceforth need do nothing more,
Do you feel compassion and pity,
For the needy ones there at your door?
Who can tell what the years yet may bring you?
Do not frown down distress and despair,
Do not feel too secure of the future,
It may come fraught with sorrows and care.

Is there good in the work you are doing,
Has pure selfishness in it no part,
Do your plans and ambitions and motives,
Aim to comfort and cheer one sad heart?
Then just carry your work to perfection;
The reward of good deeds follows sure;
There is comfort and sweet consolation
In this world for the good and the pure.

SIX HISTORIC AMERICANS.

A Book That Every American Freethinker Will Delight to Own.

By John E. Remsburg.

The work consists of two parts, "The Fathers of Our Republic," and "The Saviors of Our Republic." In regard to Paine's religious views, Mr. Remsburg establishes the negative of the following (1) Was Paine an Atheist? (2) Was he a Christian? (3) Did he recant? Page after page of the most radical freethought sentiments are culled from the correspondence and other writings of Franklin and Jefferson, which show that these men were as pronounced in the rejection of Christianity as Paine and Ingersoll. That Washington was not a Christian nor a believer in Christianity. In support of Lincoln's infidelity he has collected the testimony of more than one hundred witnesses.

The book is handsomely bound in cloth, giving fine portraits of George Washington, Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Paine, Thomas Jefferson, Abraham Lincoln and U. S. Grant; also portrait of the author.

This book contains 365 pages, printed on heavy paper, well bound in cloth. Price, $1.25. For sale at this office.

LIFE'S PROGRESSION.

"There is no death; there are no dead."

These words stand out on the cover of Edward C. Randall's new book. They are a challenge to the orthodox world, and through all of its pages runs this challenge to those whose ideas of God, of heaven, of hell, of a future life are based strictly upon the Bible. Yet Mr. Randall believes in life hereafter, based on positive knowledge given him from the living friends passed to the life beyond. Price $1.50. For sale at this office.

ANCIENT PAGAN AND MODERN CHRISTIAN SYMBOLISM.

By Thomas Inman, M. D. Revised and enlarged, with an Essay on Baal Worship, on "The Assyrian Sacred Grove," and other allied symbols. Third edition, with two hundred illustrations. Cloth, $1.

"The Infidelity of Ecclesiasticism, A Menace to American Civilization." By Prof. Wm. M. Lockwood, lecturer upon physical, phyiological and psychic science. Demonstrator of the Molecular or Spiritual Hypothesis of Nature. Scholarly, masterly, trenchant. Price, 25 cents.

Protracted Torture for the Damned.

During the writer's youthful years, while a member of an orthodox church and accepting its dogmas, among which were that of an angered God and eternal torture as punishment for unbelief—dogmas inherited from Christian parents, a booklet published by the American Tract Society, fell into his hands. The title is forgotten, but it was a diatribe on hell, its awful furnace of flame and its eternity of duration for not believing Jesus is the son of God, and the Redeemer and Savior of fallen humanity.

That tract was read, re-read, and finally its graphic description of an eternity of anguish and unparalleled misery long drawn out, was memorized, and has been a constant companion for full three score years, during all of which period we have felt justified in "kicking hell," a la Col. Ingersoll. We quote for the delectation of faithful churchmen who have never been permitted to see a first-class notice of the eternity of the damned as protracted by a good rhetorician:

"When millions on millions of years shall have rolled over its victims; yea, when ages on ages innumerable, multiplied in continued succession by all the stars that twinkle in the azure dome of heaven, by all the drops of water that circling roll in ocean's waves, by all the grains of sand that compose this globe, by all the blades of grass, and all the leaves of trees that grow, and that number multiplied in continued succession by all these, still the ceaseless waves of liquid wrath and burning agony will heave and roll over the body and mind of those who, for disobedience of divine law, God has consigned to the miseries of the damned, over whom the saints of heaven will rejoice with joy unspeakable."

And yet the God who made man and saw the end from the beginning, and knew the great mass of mankind would be doomed to eternal torture, demands our prayers and praise, else the average theologian lies. The Jewish tribal God Jehovah, a priest-made fiction, may be such a character, but the True God who is worthy of universal love never taught any such grossness. Hell was priest-invented for pious uses, and has been employed with great skill to advance the needs of the craft, but it has seen its best days.

Suggestion a Powerful Curative.

On the occasion of commencement exercises at the Eclectic Medical Institute, Cincinnati, February 7, 1863, in conferring the degrees on that occasion. President Wm. S. Merrell, among many other good things, said:

"There is a qualification which must be brought into use to make the successful practitioner in medicine. It is an INTUITION, a reception of truth not received from outward teaching. This is experienced by men in every vocation, but by none in a higher degree, than by the physician, when exercising his profession in the love of it. I hold it to be an influx from the inner and higher life. Explain it as you will, there do suggestions or impressions come into the mind when anxiously desiring the truth, and placing itself in a passive or recipient condition, which it cannot trace to any outward or previously received instruction. It is owing to this there have always been many so-called doctors who acquire no little notoriety in curing disease, and often in their success shame the educated M. Ds., yet are uneducated, and know nothing of the first principles of medical science."

The above was recalled by reading Dr. Davis' article in our issue of Sept. 15, entitled "Spiritualizing Suggestion," one paragraph, in substance, we quote:

"There is more in the practice of medicine than can be attributed to the action of drugs. Look at the history of material medicine, and trace its history back one to two thousand years. What a constant revolution of ideas. Wonderful panaceas have flourished for a time, then have been discarded as useless."

His illustration of the action of the mind on the organs of the body was beautiful, forceful and truthful. That Doctor who neglects the employment of "suggestion" in the cure of disease has an imperfect knowledge of his profession.

A Great Disturbing Element.

An overwhelming question puzzling all of us that must be met in the near future is, what is to be done with the negro? It is very evident the two races cannot live together in harmony. Collisions are constantly occurring, and the bitterness increases with advancing years. The Progressive Thinker has not the necessary foresight to determine the solution, but it can look back to the origin of the terrible calamity which threw the two races together in America, and it can trace the evil through all the subsequent years.

An attempt was first made to enslave the native Indians, but the project was a failure, though multitudes perished in the attempt. The good Columbus, whose fame we celebrated in Chicago in 1893, captured 500 natives and sent them home to Spain, who were sold in Seville as slaves. Queen Isabella interfered and sent them back to America. Then the supreme head of the Christian church found a "Thus saith the Lord" permitting the enslavement of heathen, and a bull was issued allowing the capture and sale of the natives of Africa. The first cargo of negroes reached Jamestown, Virginia, in 1620. Their numbers have rapidly increased by importation and generation until now they equal 10,000,000 in the United States.

The colored man has become a disturbing element wherever found, particularly in the Southern states. It was hoped education and experience would fit him for citizenship; but it must not be forgotten that civilization is a creature of growth and habit, not of a day, or a generation, but of long ages, and that traits of character are transmitted from parent to son, and is passed on by inheritance, each successive generation rising higher and still higher in the scale of intelligence and moral worth.

Pennsylvania, in her act of emancipation, drafted by the hand of Thomas Paine, became a law in 1780. It adopted what is known as the apprenticeship system. Children born of slave parents after a given date were to be free at 25. Those in advanced years remained in servitude, and were to be cared for by the master for life. Because of this method no injury to industrial pursuits followed, and the young were fitted for freedom, so far as they were capable, by the time the age was attained when they assumed the new relation on which they entered.

Possibly it would have been better at the close of our civil war had we adopted a similar enactment, in place of having enfranchised such a mass of gross ignorance, which had not the necessary ability for self-government, saying nothing of ability to govern the state and nation.

We do not write to suggest a remedy to correct existing evils, but to deplore the fact that Christianity, which claims to be the great civilizing agency of the world, insisting its junior God was its founder, permitted such a curse as chattel slavery to be established by his vicegerent, out of which grew the most destructive war of all the centuries, and which curse will continue a source of discord until a separation of the races shall be complete.

Which?

"Thus saith the Lord of hosts, 'I remember that which Amalek did to Israel, how he laid wait for him in the way, when he came up from Egypt.

"'Now go and smite Amalek, and utterly destroy all they have, and spare them not; but slay both man and woman, infant and suckling, ox and sheep, camel and ass.'"—I. Sam. 15: 2, 3.

No savage chieftain ever issued such a cruel order to his fellow savages. Angered, he might destroy the lives of his enemies, but he would have saved alive the "ox, sheep, camel and ass." Either the Lord issued such an order to Israel, else the inspired author of that damnable record lied. If he lied the book is unworthy of credence. Take which horn of the dilemma the Christian reader prefers he occupies an unenviable position.

The Lord The Progressive Thinker adores never issued any such order. The sacred historian shamelessly falsified when he so wrote. The book in which the record is made is everywhere errant, and should occupy the place on our library shelves with other discarded mythological productions. This cannot be stated too often or too forceful, with the reasons therefor.

Cured by Adventist Prayers.

A news item says: "Miss Frances S. Case, for four years a teacher in the Adventist school in Battle Creek, Mich., declared that after suffering two years with tuberculosis, and after hope for her recovery had been abandoned by physicians, she was cured by prayer. She says she asked four elders of the Adventist church to pray for her, and that after an hour's intercession the miracle was performed. She avers that her recovery is complete, and she has resumed her work as a teacher in the Adventist school."

Such cures are common among the Christian, Spiritual and Mental Scientist, and even among magnetic healers, many of whom treat the mind more than the body. It is simply an instance of the supremacy of the spirit over matter, and the aid, doubtless, of spirit friends, who, though they may not have grown beyond Adventism, hold the same anxiety for earth friends that they held while with them in the form. Again we are shown that no one has more claim on these powers than another, only as they are proven to possess them by demonstration.

GOD'S MEASURE.

God measures souls by their capacity
For entertaining his best angel Love.
Who loveth most is most akin to God,
Who is all Love, or nothing.
He who sits
And looks out on the palpitating world
And feels his heart swell in him large enough
To hold all men within it, he is near
His great Creator's standard, though he dwells
Outside the pale of churches, and knows not
A feast day from a fast day, or a line
Of scripture even. What God wants of us
Is that outreaching bigness that ignores
All littleness of aims, or loves, or creeds,
And clasps all earth and heaven in its embrace.

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

The Weakest Link

And the Part it Plays in Spiritualism—The Medium Kingsley—John C. Amos Now Believes the Spirit Voice a Veritable Sham that Induced Him to Give Away Half of His Property—Elsie Reynolds Again Exposed—The Weak Links in Spiritualism Carefully Considered.

"SPIRITUALIST—The Great Kingsley will this (Sunday) evening at 8 o'clock, in First Spiritualist Church, corner of New York and North Alabama streets, deliver the greatest of all his series of great lectures, entitled 'The Man of God.' Good music and astounding tests given. My platform is open and free to man or woman. I bar neither color nor creed. I am master of every medium in the state. They dance to my music. Reformed trumpet mediums, independent slate writers and users of 'luminous paint' during ye dark seances will please sit on the mourner's bench with their eyes glued on the most worthy pastor. Come early to secure seats. 'The truth sets us free.'"—Advertisement in an Indianapolis paper.

The above illustrates most comprehensively the condition of Spiritualism in Indianapolis, Ind. It is alleged that this man Kingsley is the original Jules Wallace, at one time a "celebrated" materializing medium of Milwaukee, Wis., at whose circles some sixty materialized "spirits" would appear in a single evening—all the work of skillful confederates, aided by legerdemain.

Mr. Kingsley has assumed special importance in Indianapolis, as set forth in the statement—"I AM MASTER OF EVERY MEDIUM IN THE STATE. THEY DANCE TO MY MUSIC." In making that statement he places himself in an exalted position, illustrating his inordinate egotism, his overweening vanity, and as well, his consummate foolishness! This man with his colossal vanity has his special following in Indianapolis, and several of his gullible friends have endeavored to force into The Progressive Thinker notices extolling him "to the skies."

It is one of the lamentable aspects of our grand and beneficent Cause, that such a man is considered by the general public as one of the segments of Spiritualism, and its ethical standard by the public is often MEASURED BY ITS WEAKEST LINK as manifested in this Indianapolis individual—just as one's personal strength of character, spiritual, ethical and intellectual is estimated—judging FROM THE WEAKEST LINK IN HIS MAKE-UP.

Spiritualism is judged all along the line by its WEAKEST LINK OR LINKS. It is the same in all great ethical, social or political reformatory movements—THE WEAKEST LINKS stands forth exceptionally prominent, and at times attracts the most attention, and it is invariably THE WEAKEST LINKS that lead one ofttimes practically to ruin.

And here is another case of peculiar importance and significance—something like the one that occurred in the East some time ago, where a spirit—a spirit materialized husband, if we remember rightly—induced a widow to part with the MOST OF HER PROPERTY, it going into the hands of the medium, resulting in impoverishing the former. A suit at law, however, resulted in the return of the most of the ill-gotten gains. The Indianapolis Star says:

"That he assaulted her and called her names are the counter charges made by Josephine C. Amos against John C. Amos, her husband, who filed a complaint for divorce some time ago, declaring that his wife through her power as a Spiritualistic medium had obtained a half interest in all of his property.

"According to the husband's story he sold his farm in Clinton county a few years ago and came to Indianapolis. He was interested in the occult and met his future wife while studying the system. He married her about three years after they met and he says that all went well until after she had obtained a half interest in his property.

"He charges that she called upon his former wife, whom he loved dearly, through the agency of a spiritual being she called "Bright Star, an Indian spirit," and that he heard what he believed to be, and what she said was, the voice of his former wife. The voice told him to invest the $10,000 cash he had from the sale of his farm in Indianapolis building lots. This he did.

"A little later, he charges, the new wife placed him in communication with his former wife again, and this time the voice, which, as before, came through a trumpet, told him to build houses on his lots. He built two cottages and two double houses, spending $7,500. And as he gained possession of the properties, the voice advised him to place the titles jointly in the names of his wife and himself. This he did.

"Again the voice spoke and this time he was advised to take $3,000 life insurance and to make it payable to the new wife. He followed the advice.

"And then, according to the complaint, the awakening came. Amos believed that the voice was a sham and that his new wife knew it was a sham. She began to be cruel to him, he says. He finally told her that he would gladly leave her if she would only transfer her share of the property to him, but he says that she 'pulled down her eye and asked him to look carefully to see if he saw anything green there.'

His complaint says he was generous enough—that he paid $300 for diamond ear-rings for her, bought an iron fence for her property for $100 and gave her $200 to keep for him, which she forgot to return."

As the leading Spiritualist paper, we give the above as of great public interest, inasmuch as alleged spirit return figures therein conspicuously, a man's loving wife, now in spirit life, advising him to part completely with half of his property to a strange woman, who had earned none of it. The reason, probably, the whole of it was not demanded was because the spirits FULLY MEASURED MR. AMOS'S EXTREME GULLIBILITY and foolishness. Mrs. Amos was formerly Mrs. Josephine Ropp, who during the past two seasons has been a conspicuous figure at the Chesterfield camp.

And now here is another of the WEAK LINKS of Spiritualism—"spirit return" of the bogus kind figuring therein conspicuously. A telegram from Robt. T. Hale, of Los Angeles, Cal., under date of October 31, states that the notorious materializing medium, Elsie Reynolds, has for the hundredth time—more or less—been caught in her efforts to deceive the gullible public. But this poor woman, with an iron will with great strength of purpose, and a determination that never flags, goes on and on in her heartless work of deceiving the gullibles, having been defended repeatedly by Light of Truth, the Organ of THE WORST GANG OF UNHUNG TRICKSTERS THAT EVER AFFLICTED ANY CAUSE.

Only a few months ago she was completely exposed, her artificial toggery captured, her tricks laid bare, and the facts published from one end of the country to the other, yet soon after a venerable personage of California rushed to the Fraud Organ of Chicago, with a communication exploiting her before a disgusted world, and dragging SPIRITUAL ETHICS ON A LEVEL with artificial toggery, cheese-cloth, illuminated paint, etc., used to counterfeit one of THE MOST GLORIOUS OF ALL TRUTHS!

This medium's trickery, her methods of deception, her insatiate gall, and artificial toggery, ever concealed on her own person or that of a confederate to aid in carrying on her nefarious work, are all exploited by the secular press in every part of the United States—millions upon millions have heard of her, and connected her with Spiritualism as a promient leader, whereas she is one of ITS WEAKEST LINKS, and by that the general readers of the secular press judge our Cause in a great measure at the present time.

SPIRIT RETURN, EXPLOITED IN ITS PURITY, AND HERALDED BY THOSE WHOSE ETHICAL STANDARD IS HIGH, IS TRULY ANGELIC—an agent that can redeem the world, if freed from its weak links—ulcers that fastened themselves on its very vitals, and which assume to represent Spiritualism.

A FAMILY CONVERTED.

The Result of a Little Quiet Missionary Work.

To the Editor:—You will remember that some time ago I sent you a subscriber from Arcata for The Progressive Thinker and Letters From the Spirit World as a premium, to N. C. Borrickson.

This party and family never knew anything of Spiritualism until I approached them on the subject during a visit I paid them at the time they subscribed, about the latter part of June last.

Last week I was surprised by a letter from Mr. Borrickson of which here is an extract:

"I wish, Mr. Ferguson, you would come over very soon, because I have a lot of gospel news for you. That book, Letters from the Spirit World, is worth more than its weight in gold. Come over as soon as possible and stay a few days, because we have lots to talk about. We have had many fine experiences since you were here," etc., etc.

Upon the strength of this kind invitation, I went over and stayed two nights. It was not only a pleasant visit, but a most happy surprise to me, and proud I am to have it to say that according to my simple instructions to them as to how to proceed to investigate and receive spirit manifestations, I have to state that at their very first sitting or circle they got all the proof desired, and it resulted in regular sittings ever since. The lady and daughter are both mediums, and get writings and wonderful pictures drawn on paper from their own spirit relatives, and other manifestations too numerous to mention. The writings are in their own native language which is Danish, and full names.

These people are sincerely honest and respectable. Through these manifestations Mr. Borrickson was already cured of the tobacco habit. He does not know how to express his gratitude for this one act from his spirit friends.

Fortunately or otherwise as the case may be, it leaked out in their innocence among the neighbors and relatives that they were practicing Spiritualism. Lo, and behold! their former church's Mr. Preacher called upon them with very sad news to them, after his close questioning. He, as is usually the case, told them that they were controlled or rather possessed of the devil, who was personating their friends. He tried hard to frighten them out of their spiritual experiences, but happily it did not work favorable to the minister of the old gospel of devil and hell, with variations of hell and devil. He found Mr. Borrickson now a firm believer in science and philosophy, rather than a mythical, rusty gospel. Mr. B. and wife are now as firm as the rocks of St. Peter—the very gates of hell can not prevail against them. So Spiritualism is surely gradually growing in spite of fakes and gospel frauds.

AN IMPORTANT LETTER.

From the President of the N. S. A., in Which He Makes Some Plain Statements that Will Interest Spiritualists Everywhere.

To the Editor:—In a recent issue, I note that the names of the members of the committee on the president's message, at the recent National Convention were given incorrectly. In the interest of fact, permit me to name that committee in full: J. S. Maxwell, Minnesota, Chairman; C. D. Pruden, Maryland; R. F. Little, Washington; Mrs. Carrie H. Mong, Indiana; Mrs. Sophia B. Selp, Oregon. Both Mrs. R. S. Lillie and Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing found plenty to do upon committees equally important, in other departments of our work.

In my missionary report, I note an elision that makes my reference to my receipts from my labors in Kansas very grotesque indeed. The words "eight dollars and" are omitted from before the words "fifty cents" in the paragraph in which I refer to two Sunday lectures I once give in that state. The sum of eight dollars and fifty cents was the true figure which amount was the largest received at any point outside of Sterling. No doubt both of the above errors were typographical, due, possibly, to the penmanship of the writer.

I have been criticised, and even now am occasionally chided for referring to our speakers as I did. I meant no disrespect to any one of our noble workers now in the field. My contention was and is that there are no young men and women of scholarly attainments now offering themselves for our ministry. This is a matter of grave importance to all Spiritualists. As a matter of fact, there are not twenty-five speakers upon our rostrum to-day who are under forty-five years of age! At this moment, I do not recall who are under thirty years of age.

I claim that this is a matter of serious import to every true Spiritualist, and should inspire him to find the cause of the trouble. It is not hard to find as I view the situation. It is the meagre salaries offered by local societies. A speaker or medium must live, especially if he or she has a family to support. No man or woman can support himself or herself upon five dollars per Sunday for two lectures, and the Spiritualists who ask or exact him or her to work for that sum are too exacting altogether—almost criminally so. Other causes may be adduced, but to my mind, this is the main source of our trouble. No one has a higher regard for the workers now on duty than have I, and I again disclaim any intent to cast reflection upon them.

About the convention? Well, my friend Dr. Wilkins, characterized it about right when he said that it was a talking—not a working convention. There was plenty of work for the committees, and they all acquitted themselves nobly, yet some of the members of the most important committees deliberately dodged all meetings of committees, and either went sight-seeing about Chicago, or remained on the floor with their fellow delegates, possibly in search of a "test."

I personally know that the president and vice-president, likewise the secretary and stenographer, all worked hard from the opening to the close. Possibly all members of the convention did their best, according to their understanding, hence no one has a right to judge them.

It does seem strange, however, that delegates would or could present themselves on Tuesday morning, have their credentials accepted, themselves duly seated, and then deliberately remain away from the convention until Friday afternoon, when they knew that the election was to take place. Some ten or twelve delegates, all of them from the East, were in the audience, listening to the lectures and messages, on Friday night when the vote was taken as to the place of meeting of the next convention. They cared more for the lectures and messages than they did for the business of the convention. Some of them have been Spiritualists forty or fifty years. No wonder they were not in the business meeting!

In the interest of economy, the convention voted to unite the offices of Editor-at-Large, Historian, and Missionary-at-Large in one person. This is one thing that the convention did do, and the trustees will have to obey its behests. The outcome of this radical change will be eagerly watched by not a few interested parties. The convention also voted that at least two grand mass-meetings should be held each month throughout the year at such centers of population as may need a spiritual revival. This is likewise an important change, and the results of this work will be read with keen interest by all friends of the cause. There were other things done, but these two are the most vital points that suggest themselves to mind at this writing, hence I will refer to some others at another time.

The delegates did not solve the financial problem, as it was hoped they might. If every reader of The Progressive Thinker would take hold of this question practically, it would solve itself. The Progressive Thinker is read by at least 50,000 people. If each one of this great army would send one dollar to the secretary of the N. S. A., the financial independence of the N. S. A. is thereby secured, and the future of Spiritualism made certain. There is not a Spiritualist in America who is so poor in purse as to be unable to give a dollar to this worthy cause. Readers of The Progressive Thinker, Spiritualists of America, what say you? Shall we, one and all unite in sending one dollar each to the N. S. A. in order that it may do its proper work? Let us try it. Send all money to Mrs. Mary T. Longley, Secretary N. S. A., 600 Pennsylvania avenue S. E., Washington, D. C., who will promptly receipt for it.

Yours for progress,
HARRISON D. BARRETT,
President.

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER

We Remind you that the SPIRIT OF THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER NEVER SLEEPS! There is need of a WATCHMAN and WE ARE IN THE TOWER and ON DUTY for the best interest of TRUE SPIRITUALISM!

200--Important Notice--200

Dr. Andrew Jackson Davis' Remarkable Works Are Out of Print.

Are there 200 Spiritualists in the United States who will take a full set of his books when published, paying promptly therefor, $30, and cheap at that price? If so we think it possible to make arrangements with a responsible party to bring them out in accordance with a plan that will receive the cordial endorsement of the Doctor. O. F. Brand of Faribault, Minn., will take one set. G. J. Willett of Milwaukee, Wis., will also take a set. Let us hear from others at once. Dr. Davis himself will be the one principally benefited financially, in the republishing of his works, if sufficient funds can be secured. The cost of getting out the 29 volumes of his works will not be less, probably, than $8.000.

MEMORIAL SERVICES.

Held as a Well Deserved Tribute to the Life of Rev. Dr. James O. M. Hewitt.

As a proper testimonial of esteem for their late brother and friend, Dr. James O. M. Hewitt, the Society of the Psychic Forces and the members of the Independent Order of the Mystic Brotherhood, together with many others, met in memorial services in Wilcox Hall, corner of Forty-third street and Champlain avenue, Sunday afternoon and evening, October 28. The afternoon service was devoted to short but sincere and heartfelt remarks by Dr. George B. Warne, Mr. Jas. E. Coe, Mr. Thorwald Holmes, Dr. Geo. A. Bishop and others.

At the evening gathering, at which the members of the Independent Order of the Mystic Brotherhood were present in a body, the speakers were Mr. Herbert F. Arnold, Dr. H. A. Cross and Dr. J. H. Randall. Mr. Wm. Pierce and Mrs. Carrie Crawford Pierce rendered a duet entitled, "Oh, Morning Land." Mr. Chas E. Coe sang the well-known song, "The Old Musician and His Harp." "The Better Land" was sung by Mr. Arthur Hooper, and "Rock of Ages" and "Paradise" were sung by Miss Gilda McCoy.

Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley, owing to an engagement elsewhere, sent her regrets at not being able to be present, and the following words of tribute to Brother Hewitt, over her signature, were read: "He was unostentatious, he was kind, he was true. His tongue was never a traitor to his brain. He was faithful to his duty and our grand cause; he will ever live to do good."

Dr. Hewitt was born in New York, January 26, 1831. The religious influence environing his life led him into the Baptist ministry, which he served faithfully for 15 years. He joined the Masonic Brotherhood in 1866, in which order he steadily advanced to its highest degrees, preserving exceptionally pleasant relations with it throughout his life; having been called many times to give lectures before the order, because of his deep and earnest convictions that it was a grand institution, and because of his knowledge of the history of its profound and impressive cememonies in teaching men who join it the true principles whereby the Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man may be exemplified by man in this world of mortality.

Being imbued with the spirit of progress he advanced into the ministry service as an Independent, and for more than 20 years preached regularly, finding support from Unitarians, Universalists, and Spiritualists, always interpreting the spiritual features of the Bible, and theology from a lofty, humane and scientific standpoint. He was by nature a sincere Spiritualist, and for many years accepted its phenomena as God's natural and only rational process of conveying to mankind the proof of the continuity and integrity of individual life after death.

For some years he gave careful study to the formation of an order which should have for its object the moral improvement of men and women; the encouragement of the investigation of psychic and spiritual forces; cultivation of fraternity, combined with beneficiary features. This work culminated about one year ago in the organization of those who know him but to love him, of the Independent Order of the Mystic Brotherhood, which ever since has held regular meetings and made such a steady growth that at present indicates that it is founded upon principles that insure its permanence. The distinctive characteristic of it being a Brotherhood and Sisterhood, in which all the higher qualities of character of both sexes may be brought into association for work, and the benefit possible to be derived therefrom, for growth in usefulness and goodness of the human family, be secured.

At the last regular meeting of the I. O. of the M. B. a committee was appointed to formulate a suitable resolution, expressive of its appreciation of him, to be reported at a future meeting. The following is the report of said committee:

Whereas, In the Great Course of Nature, Divine Intelligence with its own Love and Wisdom has called from our number in mortal life our good brother, James O. M. Hewitt, long associated with us as an instructor, counsellor and guide.

Resolved, That in appreciation of the exceptionally useful life of Brother James O. M. Hewitt, realizing as we do the great passion of his soul in his declining years to establish the Independent Order of the Mystic Brotherhood, and the crystallization of his work so that it may be carried forward, and knowing him as its father and founder; and believing with him that the times are ripe for the upbuilding of such an institution wherein may be cultivated, and impressed upon men and women the great principles of Truth, Brotherly and Sisterly Love and Relief, as never before; and that these principles extend into our individual existence after death, we shall ever hold him in grateful remembrance;

Resolved, That we hereby tender to his widow our sincere sympathy and condolence; and while we know that mankind generally have been taught to fear death, we remember that Brother Hewitt taught that "God is Love;" that He reflects brightness in all the paths laid out for our existence; therefore, with joy, and not with sadness, we should hail his birth and advancement into that grand spiritual assembly of the world's workers and saviors gone before us; and in testimony of our pleasant remembrance of his life among us, these resolutions be spread upon the record of our order and a copy of the same be sent to the Spiritualistic press with the request that they be published.

AN AUSPICIOUS EVENT.

In Commemoration of One Who Had Ascended Higher.

To the Editor:—On the evening of October 29, a goodly number of friends, in response to a cordial invitation, assembled at the hospitable home of Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Wells of this city, to commemorate an auspicious event, it being an anniversary of the advent into mortal life of one who having passed through the vicissitudes of earthly environments, has been reborn into spirit life, and is a denizen of that "beautiful land where our dreams come true." It is impossible to state numerically the anniversary just celebrated, as marked by the hand of time on the dial of life as mortals compute it, as the one for whom our joy was expressed is of the "gentler sex," and is therefore naturally very sensitive. The subject of our sketch who bears the euphonious cognomen, "Butter Cup," is one of the bright, witty and entertaining controls of that noble, fearless and able exponent of the beautiful philosophy of the continuity of life and spirit return, Mrs. Anna L. Gillespie. Of what may have characterized her life when in the mortal, we are ignorant; but that her mission now is to "scatter seeds of kindness" and pour consolation into wounded hearts, and to cheer, encourage aid uplift all who hear her voice and come within her influence, must certainly be conceded.

Our generous hosts served a most delicate, delicious and sumptuous repast, during which the banqueters were greatly amused and deeply interested and edified by the many bright, quaint and brilliant scintillations of "Butter Cup." We are all deeply indebted to Mr. and Mrs. Wells and Mrs. Gillespie for a most enjoyable evening. When the time arrived, all too soon, for us to reluctantly separate, we could not take our leave until after we had not only voted Mr. and Mrs. Wells "royal entertainers," but had unanimously expressed the hope that "Dear Little Butter Cup" and her estimable sensitive, Mrs. Gillespie, may have innumerable and inexhaustible anniversaries, and that each may be more pleasant and fraught with more pleasure and happiness than the preceding one.

ATTENTION, LYCEUM WORKERS.

To all lyceums and their noble band of workers, we send a loving greeting: We feel that in order to further the grand work begun by our friend and brother, Mr. John W. Ring, we must get into line, and be counted. I earnestly ask the secretary of each lyceum, or any society desirous of forming a lyceum, to write me fully the condition of their school—how many pupils, the average attendance, the text book used, the song book, and method of carrying on sessions. There are three standard Lyceum Guides—Andrew Jackson Davis's, Emma Rood Tuttle's and the British Manual. Which of these do you use? Tell me also who among your children are the best fitted as leaders and missionaries in lyceum work? I want to meet them, if only on paper. I want to know what is most needed, and what they can do. Let me hear from you soon.

"Lyceum, Lyceum, march, march ahead.
Never dead, file ahead!
Come, come, come!"

Prof. Stiver's Heavens.

A Glowing Historical Portrayal of Heaven, Interesting, Impressive and Instructive, and Would Have Been a Perfect Symposium Had He Given the Well Known Facts as Presented by Spiritualists, Who Have Actual Knowledge of That Locality, a Locality often Visited by Seers.

As stated in the last article [as set forth in the Globe-Democrat], the conceptions of heaven portrayed in the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments are the most spiritual and consistent, on the whole, with rational thought upon this subject, but they are too gross and material to be accepted as statements of fact for all time and for thoughtful people. A development was traced in the use of words and in the expression of thought entirely consistent with the facts of evolution as found in everything else. Our concepts of everything, REAL OR SPECULATIVE, ARE CONDITIONED BY THE STATE OF DEVELOPMENT OF THE HUMAN MIND. This is true of the individual, the nation and the race as a whole. As the thought of the mind expands, enlarges, refines and uplifts, everything about which we think goes with it. Newer and higher individual impressions of everything invade the thought of the race and enlarge and improve it.

There is a general tendency to unity and congruity of thought among men. This overrides, on the whole, all divergencies and differences. We are tending all the time toward cosmopolitan forms of thought. Because the race is one, its germinal ideas are alike. They are modified by environment and growth. If a human being were isolated entirely, assuming that it remained normal, it would have the idea of heaven, and its ideas of heaven would suffer change from mere development in maturity of being. This is a subjective process entirely, or would be if isolation were perfect. But isolation is not usual, and never perfect. Objective influences are always at work.

THE EXTERNAL WORLD OF SENSE ACTS UPON THE MIND TO UPLIFT AND ENLARGE IT. The heavens declare the glory of God and the firmament showeth his handiwork. Day unto day uttereth speech and night unto night showeth knowledge. There is no place where the voice of God is not heard. If men were silent, the very stones would cry out. But man can not be silent. His influence is the highest form of God's voice in the environment of man.

Mind acts upon mind. Truth is mighty and will prevail. Higher and better forms of thought on every subject must displace the lower and the poorer. Heaven must become more heavenly as the ages roll around. Hebrew ideals must pass away and CHRISTIAN IDEALS MUST TAKE THEIR PLACE. CHRISTIAN IDEALS MUST BE PURIFIED AND ENRICHED AND SPIRITUALIZED AS THE CENTURIES COME AND GO. Wherever the highest culture is found, there will be found the best conceptions of heaven. What heaven is to any individual, or to any branch of the human family, or to any age, is largely a measure of its culture. It is a human thermometer of mind. Along with many other things, it is a safe and accurate measure of the relative position of an individual or people among men in general.

Embodiment of Longings.

It is also true that the state and the place of heaven for men, in particular and in general, is an embodiment of the unsatisfied longings and aspirations of the mind. For men living in the cold regions it has been located in warmer regions; for those living in very warm regions it has been placed in colder regions; for those in dry places, in regions with living streams of water; for those living in damp and unhealthy regions, in dry and salubrious localities; for those living in valleys surrounded by mountains, across these mountains, and for those living on this earth, where there is pain and sorrow and disappointment, in elevated places above the earth and in a condition under which all these unpleasant things of life cease to annoy us —where "the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest." In fact, if each soul could go to such conditions in the future life as it longs for or aspires to here, it could be well said that "IN MY FATHER'S HOUSE ARE MANY MANSIONS," and the tax upon the inventive genius of heaven would be very great. Sweet solitude would be the fate of every individual life, but solitude would, in its turn, become anything but heaven.

Heaven must then be a mixture and a compromise in thought. We must get together in idea if we wish to associate with each other in heaven, as we must, to be happy. Conceptions of heaven have always been compounds, compromises and conventions of thought. For all it has always been a question of assorting and assembling the best things of an age and a state of culture. For the people of culture IT IS SOUGHT WITHIN, AND IS THE RESULT OF FINDING AND WALKING IN THE BEST AVERAGE WAY OF LIFE WITH PRACTICAL AND IDEAL ASPIRATION AND ACHIEVEMENT.

There was wisdom in the prayer of Solomon: "Give me neither poverty nor wealth." "Having food and raiment, let us be therewith content." "An overabundance for the day is the evil thereof." "Seek first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness and all other things shall be added unto you," even a position in some place pleasing to us beyond this life unknown to us.

Unenlightened and unfavorable conditions in this life have materialized or intensified the general concepts of reason, but in all concepts of heaven, from the lowest to the highest, are found the fundamental elements of one and the same thing. The movements of the human mind are everywhere in the direction of making heaven AN INWARD STATE RATHER THAN AN OUTWARD PLACE, and a present reality rather than a future one, but it must always have all these elements in combination and in proper proportions.

Cannibalistic Idea of Heaven.

When we turn to the concepts of heaven outside the literature of the Jewish people and formed prior to the close of the New Testament canon we find that they substantially agree with those outlined in the last article concerning the Jewish people. Those of the lowest races are very gross and sensual and would be anything but heaven to enlightened people. For some cannibals, their idea of heaven is that it is a place where their gods feast on the souls of those human beings devoured by them on earth—these souls being something like material duplicates of bodies on earth, but subjected first to roasting all the same. It seems to be a remnant of this idea of heaven which has projected itself into human thought and CONVERTED ITSELF INTO THE CHRISTIAN HELL, IN WHICH THE SOUL IS ROASTED BUT NOT EATEN. It is amazing that such a thought should have found its way into the literature of any Christian people, and more amazing that it should have been entertained even as a concept of hell by some otherwise very good men down almost to the present time. To such depths will a slavish adherence to the mere letter of an unenlightened and metaphorical literary age lead men.

To the North American Indians, and to Indians and other peoples everywhere in general who subsist chiefly by the chase, heaven is the "happy hunting grounds," and the favorite and best conveniences and utilities for hunting here are deposited in the grave with the dead body to serve the spirit in the world to come, even to slaying the dog and the horse of the hunter. Of course war and other main occupations of the savage are necessary to a happy life in the world to come for them.

The ancient Scandinavians and other peoples of a similar grade of intelligence, habits and occupations made HEAVEN A PLACE FOR HEROES ONLY WHO DISTINGUISHED THEMSELVES HERE FOR PROWESS AND SLAUGHTER, AND WHO THERE CONTINUED TO INDULGE IN FEASTING AND FIGHTING. The unheroic were not well provided for by such peoples in the future world, and were left to some indefinite resort where they would undergo the appropriate fate of the unheroic.

Polygamous nations have pictured heaven in ancient times as a great harem and have had their favorite wives killed at death to accompany them to the world to come. Traces of this are found still among such peoples as require a widow to sacrifice her life upon the funeral pyre, or to remove herself from earth in some other way soon after the death of her husband. Even among Jewish and Christian people a remnant of this remains in the hard and harsh conditions attached to widowhood.

The heaven of the Mormon is a sensual one.

Sun worshipers place heaven somewhere in the course of the sun and always toward the east, or the place of the rising of the sun. For them the employments and enjoyments of heaven are such are found upon earth, but of a higher type and in a more ethereal place.

Fire has played some part in the worship and in the torments of almost every people in the past, and to some extent, it does in the present. Purification by fire is largely practiced still by many unenlightened peoples. Among the Jewish people in their early history burnt offerings and sacrifices were a large element in their worship, as it has been among all other ancient peoples. To David, the Psalmist, this was felt to be unnecessary. In one of his prayers he plainly states that such things God does not require, but that he does look with favor upon a broken and contrite heart.

Heaven Placed in Higher Regions.

The Babylonians and other Mesopotamians, hemmed in by mountains on almost all sides, felt the longing of every mind to see beyond, and they fixed heaven beyond these mountains and toward the east, which would be in the region of China and Japan. The people of China and Japan were, at the same time, locating heaven in some higher region also, and towards the north and west.

The Babylonians made the entrance to heaven a "mountain of meeting" spoken of in Isaiah 14:13. The latter does not compliment them much on this idea and prospect, and states that they will all land in hell instead.

The Persians, who dwelt in a higher region and in purer atmosphere in Mesopotamia than the Babylonians, considered heaven to be among the mountains to the east, but to BE THE ABODE OF THE PURE AND GOOD. TO THEM IT WAS A PARADISE, OR PLEASURE GROUND, AND EMBRACED SOME OF THE ELEMENTS OF THE GARDEN OF EDEN, which has been located in the past by sacred geographers and commentators in the region of Persia.

The concept of a paradise, or happy hunting or other garden or ground, runs through the literature of all peoples and comes out strongly in sacred and profane writings. Men are still delighted with beautiful natural or artificial parks and play grounds. Whether St. John improves upon this by making heaven a city with streets paved with gold, and with only one tree in it and no grass, may be questioned, but to a poor man shut up in a cave, surrounded by darkness, and with but a scanty bill of fare, it would seem quite natural to esteem a city, of gold and precious stones, a supernatural light not dependent on the sun and stars, and a tree near at hand bearing all manner of fruits, ripe at every season of the year, as quite agreeable and likely sufficient. To this he adds a stream of water of life, and a lot of good people, but not more than 144,000. He had some conceptions not unlike the modern world's fair expositions illuminated by electric light, and not unwilling to accept golden treasure at every turn if the visitor wished to contribute to it.

It is quite amusing to endeavor to realize in fact the conceptions the best of men have had in ancient times of the place and state of heaven. It would be quite difficult TO FIND A PEARL BIG ENOUGH TO MAKE A GATE, BUT MODERN SCIENCE CAN MAKE JEWELS OF ANY KIND ALMOST EQUAL TO THE NATURAL and doubtless there are many firms which would contract to make pearls sufficient in number and size to serve as gates of the New Jerusalem. Brother Dowie's new Zion City was founded upon somewhat more practical lines, and for a time rose to the value of twenty millions, but at present the people there seems to be in need of the necessaries of life. The Old Jerusalem, sacred city of the ancient Jews, is to-day deserted almost by the ancient people of God, and is largely under the control of the "unspeakable Turk." It seems as though the idea of a city for a New Jerusalem would have to be abandoned, and we must get up higher.

The ancient Hindoos did get up in their conceptions of the location of heaven to a considerable elevation, but still they did not wish to leave the earth entirely. They placed paradise on a mountain 2,000,000 MILES IN ELEVATION FROM THE CENTER OF THE EARTH. This is about 2,500 times its actual diameter. They were bordered on the north by the highest mountains upon the globe, and their upward gaze at these seems to have made them a little giddy. It is not to be wondered at that, in their theories, after a sufficient number of transmigrations of the soul in animal forms to refine it, including the body of the sacred ox with its deep hazel eyes and far-away look, the soul was supposed to reach its highest refinement and most exalted bliss in Nirvana, or practical nothingness, on the top of this high mountain. It is quite a transcendental view, and, in this respect, is quite above modern transcendentalism.

If the world was made from nothing, as has been the orthodox theory up to date, we find here the kindred thought that in the last sublimation of being we return to nothing again. It is quite easy to observe that such Christian and such pagan, such ancient and such modern ideas have sprung from minds affected with the same species of germ.

In all ancient philosophies of heaven it is located in an upper region. The ancient Greeks placed it on Mount Olympus, one of the highest mountains of Greece. The Druids, who were the earliest historic inhabitants of England, located the souls of men in the sky after some series of transmigration on earth. All words for heaven in any historic language signify something elevated or vaulted. In some cases the idea of something released and about to come, but not arrived, is associated with the derivation of the word for the future state and place. Elysium has this significance. The idea of an assembling of people for the new state in a sort of preliminary or anticipatory state and place is also found. The purgatorial idea is always present. We must be prepared for the new conditions by some sort of inner and outer metamorphosis. It is assumed everywhere in some crude form that evolution is necessary.

Greek Conceptions Most Definite.

Upon the whole, the ancient Greek and Roman conceptions of the state and places of the good in a future condition ARE THE MOST DEFINITE AND INTERESTING. They are found fully set forth in many books on the subject, but, as such are not accessible to all readers, it will be proper here to give a brief outline of this subject to bring the matter down to the end of the period of the close of the New Testament canon or literature received by the Christian world as inspired and received direct from God.

The study of the numerous and beautiful myths of the Greeks and Romans has resulted in a system of learning called mythology. So extensive is this that it requires volumes to unfold it and much study to understand and digest it. It is a system of theology and it is scattered through a number of writings of these peoples as numerous and as important, in many respects, to the scholar as the books of the Bible. These ancient peoples were very able and imaginative and poetic in all they thought and wrote. For native talents they were the equals of any people ever found upon the earth. Except that they were polytheists, they were profound philosophers and great thinkers. Their polytheism is so mixed up with their views of everything that it makes an entirely new system of thought from that of the Bible, but in it are found all the primary ideas of the Jewish people. In the best among them they stood at the threshold of monotheism as well as on the general foundation of polytheism. Out of their polytheism would have developed, in the course of time if let alone, a true monotheism. But the providence of God hastened this by the conquest of Palestine and the scattering of the Jewish and early Christian monotheists all over the Roman empire. The early apostles of Jesus were so fully imbued with the new philosophy of which monotheism was the center and which was charged with the command and energy of propagandism and missions, as to carry it everywhere against all opposition and without regard to personal suffering and death.

To the Greeks there were two regions on earth which approximated heaven. Directly north of their country the Hyperboreans dwelt in eternal spring and everlasting bliss. THEIR HOMES WERE INACCESSIBLE BY LAND OR SEA. THEY WERE EXEMPT FROM DISEASE, OLD AGE AND DEATH. THEY WERE SO VIRTUOUS AND PURE THAT THE GODS OFTEN VISITED THEM AND ENGAGED WITH THEM IN GAMES AND FEASTS. The following poem sets forth the usual conceptions of this heavenly land and people.

I come from the land in the sun-bright deep,
Where golden gardens grow;
Where the winds of the north, becalmed in sleep,
Their conch shells never blow.

So near the track of the stars are we
That oft on the night's pale beams,
The distant sounds of their harmony
Come to our ears like dreams.

The moon, too, brings her world so nigh
That when the night seer looks
To that shadowless orb, invernal sky,
He can number its hills and brooks.

To the sun god all our harps and lyres
By day, by night, belong;
And the breath we draw from his living fires
We give him back in song.

South of the Greeks, near the boundaries of the river Ocanus, which was supposed to surround the earth, dwelt the Ethiopians, who were a similarly favored people. They enjoyed the favor of the gods and were often visited by them to share in their innocent delights. There are also the isles of the Blest. With some the "isles of the Blest" and the "land of the Ethiopas" the same, but in other conceptions the former are separate and distinct regions. Those who found favor in the sight of the gods were transported without tasting death to these beautiful regions and enjoyed everlasting bliss. These islands had a sun, moon and stars of their own, and were not subject to the cold winds and storms of the north, or of Greece. A translation and metrical adaptation of lines from Pindar are here given in description of these isles:

The isles of the Blest, they say,
Are peaceful and happy, by night and by day,
Far away in the glorious west.

They need not the moon in that land of delight,
They need not the pale, pale star;
The sun is bright by day and night,
Where the souls of the blessed are.

They till not the ground, they plow not the wave,
They labor not, never, oh, never,
Not a tear do they shed, not a sigh do they heave,
They are happy forever and forever.

Approximation to Revelation.

It will be seen that this is quite a close approximation to the idea of heaven in Revelation, and yet it is a conception which long antedates that book of the Bible.

This is the best conception of the ancient Greek and Roman theology, but it locates heaven on the earth and in some favored position or positions. The other conceptions of the future state of these peoples come rather under the head of what is known in Christian theology as purgatory, or hades and hell, and will be treated at another time. They stand related to the underworld and are located in the bowels of the earth.

Above these earthly heavens of these people there was only the abode of the supernatural beings—those purely deified or those who were partly the offspring of gods and, partly of men. To such abodes the spirit of men did not go—purely human beings. But of the wholly divine and partly divine there was a sufficient number to make up quite a company, and these went about on wings in quite a free way, visiting the earth or the abodes of the dead or the isles of bliss much at will, but more or less under the control of Jove, their supreme divinity, a term allied to the Jewish Jehovah.

Spectacles Can Be Abandoned

"Actina," a Wonderful Discovery That Cures Afflictions of the Eye and Ear Without Cutting or Drugging.

There is no need for cutting, drugging or probing the eye for the cure of most forms of disease, for a new system of treating afflictions of the eye has been discovered whereby all torturous methods are eliminated. There is no risk or experimenting, as hundreds of people have been cured of failing eyesight, cataracts, granulated lids and other afflictions of the eye through this grand discovery, when specialists, they state, termed the cases incurable.

Mr. A. O. T. Pennington, special agent Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Co., Kansas City, Mo., writes: "Having used Actina for several years, I cheerfully recommend it for the cure of eye, ear and throat affections. It cured my mother, of cataracts."

Susan Cardwell, Lincoln, Kan., writes: "I am 78 years old. I was so blind I could only know persons by their voices. After using Actina I can now thread a needle without glasses."

Rev. W. C. Godwin, Moline, Kan., writes: "My honest opinion of Actina is that it is one of the most marvelous discoveries of the age. It cured my eyes, and cured my wife of asthma."

Hundreds of other testimonials will be sent on application. "Actina" is purely a home treatment and self-administered by the patient, and is sent on trial postpaid. If you will send your name and address to the New York and London Electric Association, Dept 342B, 929 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo., you will receive absolutely free a valuable book, Professor Wilson's Treatise on the Eye and on Disease in General.

An Earnest Plea

Made For Woman and the Purity of the Home.

The Los Angeles Times of September 27, 1906, headed a two-column article with the caption:

"Startling Figures Regarding Divorce. Report Shows Golden California in an Unhappy Light. Legislature to Be Urged to Amend State Laws."

The gist of the article is that twelve Evangelical denominations have formed an interdenominational commission on marriage and divorce.

The ultimate object of the commission as stated is: "To secure the enactment of such amendments to the Constitution and Statutes of the United States as will establish uniform laws regarding marriage and divorce in all our states and territories, according to the form of purity given in our Lord's words."

The Rt. Rev. William Moreland, Episcopal Bishop of Northern California, and Bishop Hamilton of the Methodist church, have agreed to take up the fight jointly at Sacramento during the next term of the Legislature and everything will be done to put California in line with other states for more rigid divorce laws.

Delegates have been appointed by the commission to search court records and gather other data. This they have done, and the Times says, "The report is the most sensational document in the annals of the anti-divorce movement." The most sensational item given in the report is that more than 4000 divorces have been granted in Los Angeles county during the last ten years, and that 948 applications for divorce were filed in this county during the year 1905, and the greater part were granted.

This is indefinite as to the number of divorces actually granted during the past year, but that is not a matter of importance. The important consideration is whether the condition of the divorced parties was improved or made worse by the decrees granted; whether society in general was affected deleteriously, or profited thereby; whether the purity of homes suffered more by the divorces granted than if they had been denied. No allusion whatever is made in the report to these considerations.

Another writer, a churchman, says that the increase in divorces during the last few years is truly appalling, but he offers no remedy, excepting to make it more difficult to obtain divorces.

The truth is, it is woman who is most vitally interested in divorces. Almost invariably it is the rights of woman that are most deeply involved. It is her freedom, growing with the enlightenment of the age, that is encroaching upon the domain claimed by theology.

It is contrary to the teaching and precepts of the Christian religion to admit the equality of woman with man, but unless her equality is fully established, she cannot be free, neither can she by or under the present system of theology, establish her right to the control of her own person.

Throughout all Christendom the following admonitions have stood diametrically opposed to her freedom:

"For the man is not of the woman; but the woman of the man. Neither was the man created for the woman; but the woman for the man."—I. Corinthians, xi:8, 9.

"Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands as unto the Lord.

For the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the head of the church; and he is Savior of the body. Therefore, as the church is subject unto Christ, so let the wives be to their own husbands in everything."—Ephesians v:22, 23 and 23.

"Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands, as it is fit in the Lord."—I. Colossians iii:18.

In the light of the twentieth century these injunctions are pronounced by many as abominable, but Theology says, "Bible." It is fair, however, to the anti-divorce workers, to state that the sentiments quoted are not viewed with pride, but are held in the background. It is nevertheless a part of their religious faith; their theology is grounded on the writings of Paul, the author thereof, and the twelve Evangelical denominations selected to aid in the work to be presented before the next California legislature cannot be considered as competent jurors to pass upon the rights of woman in the marriage relation.

Any attorney would object to them in toto on account of the basic faith of their religion, and any court of justice would sustain the objection. Yet, in a measure, the rights of woman to her own body will be on trial before the next California legislature, and the suit is now being prepared and pressed forward by this interdenominational committee.

The religion of a people is often responsible for gross injustice against innocent people because of real, or fancied wrongs committed by their progenitors.

Throughout all the Christian era and throughout all Christian lands the Jew has been singled out for hatred; a marked antipathy exists against him; an epithet of opprobrium hurled at him has been "Christ Killer." To this day he is ostracised from the society of Christians; and among the more ignorant, hence, more bigoted races, the hatred has developed into tragedy. We note the recent bloody massacres of Jews among the Russians, which were unprovoked and can be accounted for on the sole ground of the deep-seated antipathy that has been fostered by a religion.

In like manner, woman's condition of servitude dates back to the religion based upon the Biblical account of creation.

The first man was created from the dust of the earth, the breath of life was breathed into him and he became a living soul. Woman was created from one of his ribs hence was his inferior. Paul, the great theologian says that "Woman was created for man," that "man is the image and glory of God, but the woman is the glory of man," and as a mark of her inferiority Paul enjoins her to keep her head covered and to keep her silence in public. But to return to the Creation, the mythical first man and woman were placed in a mythical garden with a mythical tree of knowledge, the fruit of which they were forbidden to eat. But it was whispered into their ears that eating of the fruit would give them knowledge of good and evil and make them as Gods, and woman, whose enterprise has always been conceded by man, was first to get there. Her more conservative, or possibly more cowardly spouse, did partake of the fruit, but the woman plucked it for him, was all to blame and has been marked for slavery ever since.

Woman has become mother of kings, generals and statemen; of philosophers, scientists and poets; she has directed the movements of armies and led forces to battle; she has lifted her voice for the freedom of millions of slaves and her power has been recognized; she has always thrown her influence on the side of public morality and the advancement of the race; she has been first and foremost in works of charity and her tender heart and gentle hand have soothed and comforted the suffering and the dying. As if in recognition of the God-like qualities, the inestimable worth of his beloved daughter, the God of nature has conspired in her behalf to remove the stigma attached to her unequal creation and mythical fall.

The six days of Bible creation have been rolled along into the eternities; into six ages of unknown duration not yet terminated and the mythical Garden of Eden has been buried in the debris of an ever-changing, growing universe. Nevertheless, the deep-seated prejudice born of a religion still exists in theology and hangs like a pall over woman. She cannot be entrusted with the purity of the home, but must be bound with stronger chains. But bind her more closely and make it more difficult for her to gain her freedom when grossly wronged, and you are only adding more homes to the charnel-houses of hate; homes that may be justly described by the withering invective hurled at the Scribes and Pharisees by the great teacher: "For ye are like whited sepulchers, which indeed appear beautiful outward, but are within full of dead of dead men's bones, and of uncleanness."

If you would have a free race, you must strike the shackles from woman. Give her a voice in all matters pertaining to her own children and to the welfare of the race.

The most stable, grows weak with time; the indispensable, to-day, fails to reach the requirements of the progressive to-morrow; the Gordian knot of the King of Phrygia could not be undone; the laws of the Medes and Persians could never be changed, but Alexander cut the Gordian knot, and the edicts and laws of the Medes and Persians have ceased to be of interest, have almost passed from the memory of man.

Theology dreads to see her chosen God discredited or his edicts set aside, but Love is the God who in the present human enlightenment rules the heart, whose commands are obeyed and who is fast gaining control of human destinies.

Backed by public opinion when right, and held in check by the same powerful court when wrong, the average American woman would not go astray if permitted to choose her own home, or terminate her marital relations when they might become unendurable to her.

The strongest hold priestcraft ever had on the people was through ignorance. The closing words of the marriage ceremony, "What God hath joined together, let not man put asunder," is good advice, but every woman should be informed that the God who has joined her in marriage, is the God within, to-wit: Love and her own conscience, and if the sacred privileges of the home are trampled upon, her love desecrated, and her conscience releases her from her vows, no man should hold her in the worst, the most degrading form of slavery that has ever existed, and such laws should be enacted that she could become free. It is well, too, to bear in mind the fact that children cannot be well born without love, and criminals are born in the prison houses of hate.

The mission of woman is to build up a noble race.

Unfetter her hands!

To instill love, which is of God, into the hearts and minds of man.

Aid her work!

Worship at the shrine of Womanhood, and your worship will make you noble.

She has passed through ages of shadow and darkness, but the illumination from the character she has builded has lighted the pathway of mankind.

She is to-day the fairest flower that is growing in the Garden of the Gods. Her wisdom, the brightest gem in the diadem encircling the brow of mankind, and her love, the most precious jewel that is encased in the human heart.

Love, trust, shield and protect her, and you will shield and protect the purity and the honor of the home.

A TIMELY WARNING.

Burglars Revealed by Spirit Warning.

New York, Oct. 29.—Mrs. May S. Pepper's private secretary is authority for the statement that a "tip" from a friendly spirit enabled the "medium" to detect a burglary in her Brooklyn residence last night, and also that fear of the spirits caused the burglars to flee without their expected booty.

Mrs. Pepper was conducting her usual Sunday night seance in her church and had just answered a query signed by four persons that the person they suspected of stealing a purse at a euchre party was the guilty one, when, she says, the spirit who was talking handed her a little "tip on the side" in this wise:

"You'd better look out yourself. Some one is robbing your own house this instant."

Soon after receiving this startling information from spirit-land, says the medium's secretary, Mrs. Pepper hastily closed the meeting and seizing her secretary by the hand, told her of the warning.

Reaching the Pepper home the two women found it brightly illuminated. They had left it in darkness. The rooms were in disorder, as though carefully ransacked.

Careful search is said to have disclosed that absolutely nothing had been taken; although in a casket in plain sight were some of Mrs. Pepper's jewels, valued at $1,000, a $50 bill and several smaller bills.—Chicago Examiner.

Song Books

New and Enlarged Edition of
C. P. LONGLEY'S
Choice Collection of Beautiful Songs,

Containing ninety charming songs for home, camps, circles and meetings—words and music, including "Only a Thin Vail Between Us," and its companion piece; also beautiful words set to choice music, from the poetical works of Lilian Whiting. Of the latter, Miss Whiting writes Prof. Longley her pleasure at his setting to her poems and declares herself honored at the dainty music he has given her words. President Barrett of the N. S. A. writes that wherever he goes he finds the songs of Mr. Longley sung at meetings and by the friends and he affirms it as his opinion that Longley's musical compositions have ennobled the world. Price per copy, 50 cents bound in boards; 75 cents in cloth. wholesale rates made to societies, and dealers.

Maxham's Melodies.

Arranged for Solos, Duets, Quartets, Also Six Poems.

This is a song book adapted to the popular spiritualistic taste, and is eminently fitted to do good service in the lecture hall or family circle. Price, 15 cents.

SPIRITUAL SONGSTER.

By Mattie E. Hull. Thirty-eight of Mrs. Hull's sweetest songs, adapted to popular music, for the use of congregations, circles and families. Price, 10 cents, or $7 per hundred

THUMBSCREW AND RACK.

Torture implements employed in the 15th and 16th centuries for the promulgation of Christianity, with pictorial illustrations. By George E. Macdonald. Price, 10 cents.

FROM SOUL TO SOUL.

By Emma Rood Tuttle. This volume contains the best poems of the author, and some of the best popular songs with the music by eminent composers. The poems are admirably adapted for recitations. 225 pages, beautifully bound. Price $1.

THE WIDOW'S MITE, AND
OTHER PSYCHIC PHENOMENA.
BY ISAAC K. FUNK.

A remarkable book, of intense interest to all, whether Spiritualists or Materialists, investigators or believers.

The author has embodied in this book an account of his wonderful personal experience, and has culled from other sources the experiences of others, including scientists of world-wide repute, making a volume of great value. 588 octavo pages. Price, cloth, $2.

Psychic Light.
BY MRS. DRAKE.

Important Addition to Our Literature.

Mrs. Maud Lord Drake has a national reputation as a medium. The manifestations given through her mediumship have been most marvelous. She has written a book with this title: "PSYCHIC LIGHT—THE CONTINUITY OF LAW AND LIFE." It is a ponderous volume of 600 pages. It will hold your attention from the beginning to the end. It is chockful of stirring incidents. Price of this large volume, only $1.50 postpaid.

A. SCHOPENHAUER ESSAYS.

Translated by T. B. Saunders. Cloth, 75 cents. "Schopenhauer is one of the few philosophers who can be generally understood without a commentary. All his theories claim to be drawn direct from facts, to be suggested by observation, and to interpret the world as it is: and whatever view he takes, he is constant in his appeal to the experience of common life. This characteristic endows his style with a freshness and vigor which would be difficult to match in the philosophic writing of any country, and impossible in that of Germany."—Translator.

General Survey.

The Spiritualistic Field—Its Workers, Its Work, and General Progress, the World Over.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper. Please bear this in mind.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

THIS GENERAL SURVEY DEPARTMENT IS ONLY INTENDED TO CHRONICLE THE ENGAGEMENTS AND WORK OF SPEAKERS AND MEDIUMS. A REPORT OF WHAT THE VARIOUS SPEAKERS SAY WILL NOT BE PUBLISHED, AS WE HAVE NOT SPACE SUFFICIENT FOR THAT PURPOSE.

The Song Cards for sale at this office at $4 per hundred, are the help you need in society work.

Albert Booth writes from Rockford, Ill.: "We had Mrs. Georgia Gldays Cooley with us last evening and quite a large audience greeted her. The messages were fine."

Bertha Hansen writes: "Dr. Geo. B. Warne addressed the Progressive Spiritual Society Sunday evening, October 25, at its hall, 183 E. North avenue. He delivered a very convincing lecture on Spiritualism, to an intelligent and appreciative audience."

An eastern paper speaks as follows of R. F. Churchill, president of the Spiritualist society at Greenfield, Mass.: "Mr. Churchill is highly respected by the people who find in him a man of good judgment; and one who is capable and obliging. He is a man of wealth and was unfortunate in having property destroyed in the recent disaster at San Francisco. He was the owner of a business block in Bush street, and two dwelling houses in Dupont street. His property was insured and he has been informed by the insurance adjusters that a satisfactory settlement will be made in the near future."

The Psychical Research Society of Rockford, Ill., sends greeting to all the associate spiritual sicieties of Illinois, with a challenge to engage in an earnest attempt to excel all of them in numbers of worthy members in search of truth for the current lecture season. The glorious mass-meeting of a week ago set the ball rolling, and Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley, a universal favorite, gave a new impetus to it on the evening of the 28th ult. Her lecture was well received by a half-filled audience, and her messages which followed, all save one, were gladly welcomed as truthful revelations from the other side of life. At the close of the entertainment and an nouncements, Mr. Booth, a zealous laborer for the cause, presented the claims of The Progressive Thinker for the patronage of Spiritualists, which was followed by President McDougal, who related the fact that he had been a patron of the paper from its first number; that it is unquestionably by far the ablest and best conducted Spiritualist paper now published, and that no lover of the cause can afford to be without its weekly reading. Mrs. Alice C. Barry, of Clinton, Iowa, is engaged to minister to the society for November.

Excellent results are following the dedication of Brother Austin's Temple at Rochester, N. Y. He writes: "We have Sunday evening audiences ranging from 500 to 800 since dedication, collections running from $20 to $30 a Sunday, and two papers reporting my lectures. Frank T. Ripley is here as test medium for a time."

Mrs. A. A. Averill writes from Lynn, Mass.: "The Lynn Spiritualists Association gave a Hallowe'en party at the auditorium at Unity Camp, on Tuesday, October 30, which proved to be a very successful and highly enjoyable form of entertainment. The pavilion was profusely decorated with cornstalks, autumn leaves and jack-o'-lanterns, and presented a very fine appearance when illuminated with the electric lights. The large floor space of the auditorium was nearly filled with merry dancers; many more who wished to dance not finding room in which to do so. The corners of the room were adorned with cornstalk booths in which the 'witches' connected with the society did a thriving business in fortune-telling. Old-fashioned pumpkin pies, gingerbread, doughnuts, home-made candy, cornballs, apples, etc were on sale, and found ready purchasers. Miss Abbott of Lawrence, Mr. Furbush, of Lynn, and others contributed to the general success with readings, vocal and whistling solos. Quite a substantial sum was added to the treasury of the society. Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn, Prof. R. A. Macurda and Mr. James S. Scarlett, have been with us as speakers during the month of October, and have all done their usual fine work. Mrs. S. C. Cunningham is with us November 4. Owing to the removal of Dr. Fuller to New York, his place on 9th will be filled with some good test medium, probably Mrs. Abbott of Lawrence; Mrs. Cunninghom on the 18th, and Mrs. A. J. Pettengill on the 25th."

AS A GENERAL RULE, IN THIS OFFICE WE PAY NO ATTENTION TO ANONYMOUS COMMUNICATIONS. THE NAME AND ADDRESS OF THE WRITER SHOULD ACCOMPANY ALL MATTER, OF WHATEVER KIND, SENT TO THIS OFFICE.

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

ALWAYS GIVE YOUR FULL NAME AND ADDRESS WHEN SENDING NOTICES AND COMMUNICATIONS FOR PUBLICATION, OTHERWISE THEY WILL FIND THEIR WAY TO THE WASTE BASKET.

Correspondent writes: "Mrs. Lora Holton of Chicago delivered two interesting lectures, October 7, at Centreville, Michigan, followed by psychometric readings and musical messages. Many tests were given. Let us all strive for more light, and closely follow the example of the life of Christ, our elder brother. Mrs. Holton held meetings at the homes of S. Dill and Mrs. Wm. Luscombe, the former doing a good work by giving a free lesson in singing, and teaching the true philosophy of right living, right thinking, at a lyceum every Sabbath morning at his home. Mrs. Holton will lecture there again on Nov. 11."

Eva L. Stewart writes: "The Hyde Park Occult Society enjoyed a fine talk on the 21st by Dr. Randall. He will be with us again on November 18. Mrs. McIntyre was our medium and every message was recognized. Mr. Hillis being present, gave a number which were also recognized. Our circles are well attended. Mr. Fraser and Mr. Hillis gave tests. On the 28th we were entertained by a talk from Dr. J. A. Marvin; he gave great satisfaction. He is to be with us on Nov. 4 and lecture on 'Joan of Arc.' Mrs. Lillie Bell and Mr. H. S. Fraser both gave very convincing messages; they are good message bearers. The latter led our circle last Tuesday night and they were so well pleased that he will be with us at the other Tuesday circles, as well as Sunday evenings. Our first dance was well attended; our next one will be on Nov. 15. We have the same orchestra that we had least year, and it gives entire satisfaction. We are very glad to hear that our medium, Mrs. Guckert, who has been very sick, is some better, and the doctor has hopes of her recovery. Mrs. Dr. Caird will be with us on November 11, to give messages. She is a fine medium and many will be glad of the opportunity to hear her."

G. H. Brooks writes: "I am now and shall be during the month of November, in Northern Wisconsin, in the interest of the State Society. I am now holding a series of meetings in Superior. I will visit Chippewa Falls, Eau Claire, Augusta, Vermillion, Neillsville, Sparta, Leon, and several other points ere the month closes. For December I go to Pittsburg, Pa., where I serve the First Spiritual Church. I also desire to state that Miss Louise Loebel, the secretary of the State Society, has changed her address from 189 Lloyd street, to 202 North avenue, Milwaukee, Wis. Please take note of the same."

Mrs. N. P. Raleigh, secretary of Paw Paw Valley Spiritual Association, writes: "We had with us October 28, Harrison D. Barrett, of Canaan, Maine, and H. L. Chapman of Marcellus, Mich. Mr. Barrett's lectures were intellectual feasts. The afternoon lecture was on 'Five Points of Calvinism, and Seven Points of Spiritualism.' The evening lecture was by request on Tennyson's poem, 'The Holy Grail, which was a masterpiece. Mr. Chapman's poems on subjects taken from the audience, were appreciated by all. The music by Mr. Mallory of Bangor, Mich., was beautiful and impressive."

Zetta H. Prettyman, secretary, writes from Parkland, Pa.: "Nearly one year has elapsed (Oct. 29) since the Parkland Progressive Lyceum, organized by a few friends and children banding themselves together for spiritual, mental and physical unfoldment. But through the generosity of members and others interested in our work we are now fully equiped. The books, Hudson Tuttle's Lyceum Guides, were donated. We have purchased flags, dumb-bells, badges, etc., and still have a good sum in the treasury. From the small beginning we now have between sixty and seventy. The lyceum is increasing in interest. Our worthy conductor, Mr. Geo. W. Breisford, and his wife (as guardian, are efficient workers. Our physical culture class, conducted by Miss Lillian Greenlee (13 years old), we are justly proud of, for the children are improving rapidly, and all are interested. Our lyceum during camp did not cease, but met every Sunday under the camp canopy, but owing to the lecture hour our time was limited. Mrs. Emily S. Ewers (whom some may remember) passed to Summerland this summer from Parkland. She was known in Philadelphia, where she resided, as the 'Flower Woman.' Mrs. Dennis, her daughter, donated liberally a memorial flower fund in memory of her mother, as a permanent Memorial fund to purchase flowers for any child that might be sick, to comfort and cheer. The lyceum accepted with thanks. So many of our members are leaving for their winter homes, it casts a sadness over us to part with them, but those that remain in beautiful Parkland will work with renewed energy, and look forward to advancement and accomplishing much good during the winter."

Gustav L. Willms writes: "The members of the North Star Spiritual Union, 1546 Milwaukee avenue, had the pleasure of greeting quite a large audience last night, Oct. 28, consisting principally of skeptics. Sister C. Mueller and Bro. Vanderhoogt gave fine lectures. Sister Koofer closed with a short address. Sister C. Mueller then gave readings of articles and reading questions. The rapidness and correctness with which these messages were given was something exceptional, and many tears were wiped away and sunshine brought instead. President Hassmann thanked the visiting mediums for their kind assistance, hoping to be able to greet them again in the near future; also gave an invitation to all strangers who have not been acquainted with spiritual teaching heretofore."

Mrs. E. L. Nicholson of Seattle, wife of the president of the State Spiritualists Association, was not only one of the hard-working delegates at the recent N. S. A. convention, serving faithfully on both committees and floor during the meeting, but on the following Sunday made an excellent impression at the Rockford, Ill., Mass-Meeting by the modest and sincere manner in which she gave messages from the platform. She is one of the growing mediums of the Pacific Coast, and much will be heard of her in the days of the future. Her personality bears the stamp of honest devotion to a sacred cause.

Virginie Barrett writes from Bonfield, Ont., Canada, where she has been doing a good work for the last five months. She will soon leave there for new fields towards the South. Address her at once for engagements at the above place.

Mrs. Gusta S. Wagner writes: "Allow me to thank you on the good qualities of your paper, and the stand you have taken for pure Spiritualism. It seems as I am lost when I miss a copy."

Mr. and Mrs. A. Scott Bledsoe of Topeka, Kansas, will be in Louisville, Ky., the last three Sundays in December, and will be glad to correspond with any society there needing the services of good speakers and mediums. Terms very reasonable. Address them at 507 Horne street, Topeka, Kansas.

Mary B. Hill writes: "The Band of Harmony will hold its annual bazaar, Dec. 6, 1906, in Masonic Temple, Room 512. Meals will be served from 12 until 2, and from 5 until 7. There will be on sale many beautiful and useful articles, and if members and friends who live in other parts of the country wish to contribute in any way, they may send contributions to either Mrs. Hattie Peet, 874 W. Madison street, or to Mrs. Mary B. Hill, 320 Flournoy street. We hope every one will bear in mind, and come and help make this the most successful bazaar the society has ever had."

Dr. J. H. Randall lectures Nov. 11, for Golden Rule Society, at O'Donnell's College Hall, Paulina street, near Washington Blvd.; Nov. 18 and 25 for Church of Psychic Forces, Wilcox Hall, 43rd street and Champlain avenue. He will make arrangements for future dates. Address, 1058 Washington Blvd., Chicago.

Mrs. Annie Throndsen, the well known lecturer, has resumed her work in Indianapolis, Ind.

W. O'Halloran writes from Cincinnati, Ohio: "I am much pleased at the attitude you assume in relation to the frauds that live under the guise of our glorious cause, and claim to be Spiritualists. We have many of such here, that are supported by Spiritualists who swallow any statement that comes through a tin horn."

Mrs. Alice C. Barry, Speaker for the Clinton Spiritualists' Society, will occupy the platform of the Psychic Research Society, Rockford, Ill., for the month of November. She will arrange for meetings during the week, and answer calls for funerals within reasonable distance.

Mrs. Helen Stuart-Richings is to lecture the first two Sundays of November at Meadville, Pa. Between time she will entertain the insane patients of numerous state hospitals located in Cleveland, Warren, Pa., Rome, Ogdensburg, N. Y., Danville, Pa., etc. Mrs. Richings permanent address is 319 E. High street, New Philadelphia, Ohio.

B. F. Austin will lecture to the people of Little Valley, N. Y., Nov. 19 and 20. Subject, "How and Why I Became a Spiritualist." Second subject selected by the audience.

Committee writes: "Saturday evening, November 10, 1906, the Golden Rule Pleasure Club will hold a card party for the old and a dance for the young, and an oyster supper for all, both great and small, at O'Donnell College Hall, 43 S. Paulina street, between Park avenue and Washington Blvd. Bring your friends and have a good time. Music by Kirkland's orchestra."

Reporter writes: "Mrs. Georgia G. Cooley's opening meetings at Howard's Hall, corner Grand Boulevard and 47th street, last Sunday afternoon and evening, were a success. The social afternoon consisted of singing, silent prayer, words of welcome by Mrs. Cooley, a poem entitled 'The Scandalmonger,' by Dr. T. Wilkins, a short enthusiastic address by Dr. Geo. B. Warne, messages by Mrs. Weaver, Mrs. Thompson, Mrs. Lichtig and Mrs. Cooley. In the evening the audience was larger, and the meeting opened with a poem entitled 'Let Us All Be Large,' by Dr. T. Wilkins, followed by a grand and uplifting discourse by Mrs. Cooley. Mrs. Cowan's messages were given under a great physical strain, but some were recognized, and all of Mrs. Cooley's were fully recognized and highly appreciated by all. These evening meetings will be continued through November and December. Afternoon social first Sunday afternoon in December. All are cordially invited."

Correspondent writes: "The best of good feeling exists among our societies in Detroit, four of which were represented at the late Chicago convention by the following persons: Earnest Workers, Rev. Mary Stein, pastor; Church of the Soul, Rev. Laura Crawford, pastor; Union Church Spiritual Science, Rev. Sarah Lewis, pastor; Central Church of Spiritual Science, Rev. Lauretta Avery, pastor, (not represented), and the Central Spiritual Union, Rev. C. W. Burrows, M. D., pastor. The Doctor was ordained by Rev. Moses Hull ten years ago, and recently given official sanction by the National Association is undoubtedly justly entitled to be called 'The Father of Mediums' in Detroit. He has done a grand work for the cause of Spiritualism as the above fine societies are a part of the outgrowth of his labor of love."

E. Shaw writes from Queensland, across the ocean: "I may say in passing that The Progressive Thinker IS THE BEST PAPER IN THE WORLD, and if every reader followed my example, it would be read by millions instead of thousands, for I must have sent fifty new subscribers to you, since I became aware of its existence. Life to me would be burdensome without its companionship, and I shall continue to advocate its circulation to the end of life's chapter, which cannot be so very far ahead, as I am in my 79th year, which I think you will say is not bad, and yet I am only a child in the kindergarten of spiritual experience."

C. L. Hatch writes from Appleton Hall, 9 Appleton street, Boston: "The First Spiritualist Ladies Aid Society met as usual with the president, Mrs. M. E. A. Allbe in the chair. Business meeting was held at 5 p. m. Supper at 6, and a social was held in the eening. A general good time of visiting was enjoyed. Next Friday a meeting will be held at 7:45, and Friday, Nov. 16, a memorial service will be held in memory of our arisen sister, Mrs. Sarah A. Byrnes. Good speakers will be present. Admission free to all. Be sure and come."

Prof. J. McLane of Los Angeles, Cal., is now in this city, and will remain here for some time, and hold meetings. He is an able lecturer and excellent test medium. He is now located at 1344 Jackson Boulevard. He holds special circles on Tuesday and Friday evenings, at 8 o'clock.

Correspondent writes: "The Golden Rule Spiritualist Society had large audiences both afternoon and evening. The afternoon meeting was addressed by Prof. John McLane and followed by messages by Mr. Travels, Mr. Smedt and Prof. McLane. The evening services with the usual large audience to listen to Mrs. E. J. Hansen, with her grand, good work, followed with messages by Mrs. Susie Thompson, Dr. C. A. Burgess, Prof. McLane and Mrs. Nora E. Hill, all giving convincing proofs of spirit return. It was like an old-fashioned home feast, judging by the smiling faces as they said good-night. Sunday, evening, Nov. 11, Dr. J. H. Randall, will be our speaker, afternoon, with short talks and messages. All welcome at O'Donnell College Hall, 43 South Paulina street, between Washington Blvd. and Park avenue."

Mrs. Lora Holton is now located at Vicksburg, Mich. She is a musical test medium.

On Sunday, October 28, Oscar A. Edgerly concluded a very successful engagement with the First Temple Spiritualist Society of Newport, Ky. On Sunday, Nov. 4, Mr. Edgerly will begin a two months' engagement with the Ladies' Temple Fund Society of Cleveland, Ohio. Address, 18 Buettner Court, Cleveland, Ohio.

ATLANTIC CITY WRECK PREDICTED BY WOMAN.

Many Allegheny People Declare Mrs. Josephine Werner Foretold the Disaster Three Weeks Ago.

To the Editor:—No doubt you have heard of Mrs. J. Werner, and the wonderful demonstrations given by her at Lily Dale last season. The enclosed statement was published in two of our largest city papers, and it is causing great excitement in the public. Will you kindly remember her in your next edition, as I think she deserves to be known the world over. This is only a drop in the bucket, but it just happened that the city editors heard the prediction made, and thought it wonderful. For the cause of Spiritualism and this medium, kindly remember her next week, as she predicted it before an audience of 147 people.

DR. G. LEONARD LE-VAN.
Allegheny, Pa.

Statement by Two Papers.

Many persons in Allegheny are excited over the strange prediction made by Mrs. Josephine Werner, of No. 609 Sandusky street. A score of persons this morning were willing to testify that Sunday night, October 7, Mrs. Werner predicted the Atlantic City wreck, at a meeting held in the G. A. R. Hall, East Diamond street, Allegheny. It is said the correct date was given. Mrs. Werner declared she could see the trains going into the water of the Thoroughfare.

Frederick Schell of Fountain street, Allegheny, says Mrs. Werner also predicted the hurricane which recently struck Florida. This prediction was made at the same time, he says. Last Tuesday night, he called Mrs. Werner by telephone and told her that one of her predictions had come true and there remained three days to see whether the other would. Mrs. Werner told him she felt sure it would.

Mrs. Melissa Scott, of Wig street, Allegheny, was present at the meeting, October 7, and told Mrs. Werner she wondered if the railway disaster would come true. Mrs. Werner told Mrs. Scott she saw a casket on her, and Mrs. Scott has died since then.

A daughter of Jacob Brown, who is employed in a steel mill in the South Side, was at no 609 Sandusky street, Sunday, October 21. While playing the piano Mrs. Werner interrupted her and warned her to tell her father to be careful as she thought a shaft was going to fall while he was at work. While sitting in the mill last Saturday Brown looked up and saw a shaft falling. He jumped and it struck within two feet of him.

Other predictions of Mrs. Werner are recited by residents of Allegheny. Among the score or more who testify to the prediction of the Atlantic City disaster are Alderman A. J. Brinker, of East street, Allegheny, and John Hessert, of Bellevue.

The New Mediumship.

The new mediumship spoken of by the Spirit Franchezzo, in No. 877 of The Progressive Thinker, is timely for all progressive thinkers that wish to prove the immortality of their own individuality, by the unfoldment of their own individuality on the plane of their spiritual senses, which reveals the false doctrines that the finite animal senses are educated or hypnotized to believe. As long as mortals are living in their five finite animal senses, without unfolding their own infinite or spiritual senses, to reveal the truth, they will call on the man-made gods, and spirits, to guide them, not realizing by their finite animal senses, that the Infinite Intelligence is lying dormant within their own undeveloped infinite or spiritual senses, which the new mediumship Franchezzo speaks of will unfold. This is the work The Progressive Thinker is trying to do, to lead its readers up onto the plane of spirituality, above the fogland of the finite animal senses, where they are hypnotized by both mortals and spirits to believe whatever the hypnotizers will them to believe.

The finite animal senses have always been hypnotized by both political and Christian leaders, and will be until they unfold their infinite or spiritual laws to their spiritual understanding; then the finite senses will be reincarnated into the spiritual senses, or born again, not of the flesh, but of the spirit, and be Spiritualists.

AN EARNEST APPEAL.

For an Organization as Planned by Dr. Caird.

To the Editor:—I was deeply interested in the two articles in the last number of your paper, on Fraternal Organization. I think our able brother, Mr. Tuttle, must have mislaid his glasses when reading what has been published on the subject, for I fail to find anything in any article that I have read that implies that the new organization should have any pass-words, signs, grips or any secrecy whatever; or, at least, any more than is already observed in all spiritual societies; business meetings for members only are in one sense secret, outsiders not being admitted.

All societies, local, state and even the National, have secret business meetings, and I presume that an organization founded on suggested line, members, or applicants for membership would be admitted and obligated in the presence of members only, as at the present time.

The idea of some different form of organization than at present prevails, has appealed to me for a long time, and I have been much interested in the proposition under discussioon from the first, and have given it much thought, and can see many reasons why something of this nature is needed.

I have been secretary of a Spiritual society for nearly twelve years, and one of the hardest of my duties has always been to try and keep the membership up, which in this time has varied all the way from forty to two hundred.

And why is this?

Some neglect to pay their dues, promise to do so soon, but never do; others refuse to pay because they do not like the president or some other officer; others because we have too many test mediums, and others because we do not have enough.

And the reasons for joining are as varied. As many as ten joined the society, (or paid their dollar) at one time because a medium promised all who would join, a private sitting, which was very kind in the medium and much appreciated, but hardly one of them ever attended a business meeting or ever paid their dues a second time.

Can any one doubt that the membership of a society would be much more permanent and much better work could be accomplished if no one was admitted unless they could honestly avow a belief in Spiritualism, and solemnly promise to live according to its teachings and to the obligation to which they had taken oath?

Another advantage is in having traveling or transfer card. If a person should go to Chicago and wish to fraternize with the members of some society, what have they to prove that they are Spiritualists in good standing in any other place? And fakes or tricksters can come among us and claim membership in any local or state society, but let them show us their transfer or traveling card or an honorable dismissal from some society, and we have something that we can believe in, and can be in a certain degree protected from frauds.

Brother Morrison has presented many good reasons why such an organization should be advantageous to the cause, and I see no reason why any true Spiritualist should wish to oppose it.

Any movement that may tend to the advancement of the cause should be welcomed. There is certainly room enough for much more work to be done, and if in this way some can be gathered in who will not affiliate with societies as organized at present, we ought all to be glad and to do all in our power to assist it.

HOW JESUS APPEARED.

The Same as Other Spirits Appear and Disappear.

To the Editor:—I am really surprised at some of the articles in The Progressive Thinker, especially those pertaining to the different beliefs in regard to Christ.

I will tell you what I believe about Christ. I believe that He came into the world in the natural way, just as you and I did, and all others of mankind; and in regard to Christ's ascending from the grave, it is erroneous, for the Bible says that he was here on this earth forty days after the resurrection. Now, if this were true, why was he not seen by the people, and where did he stay while here. A man of flesh and blood must have some place to stay, and would be seen by the people where he stops, but such is not the case with Christ. He was not seen by any person except His disciples, who had been with Christ so long and lived the life Christ had lived, and in so living had become clairvoyant and could see them with their spiritual eyes, the same as any clairvoyant sees those of to-day that have passed out.

In regard to Christ's coming where his disciples were, the Good Book says that he appeared and disappeared. Now, if he had a body as you and I have, His disciples could have seen Him coming, but the Book says that he appeared and He disappeared. The disciples were sitting in a room with the doors locked and the windows barred, and while there holding a seance, Christ appeared, just the same as our loved ones appear to us if we make the conditions right.

While in that chamber, Peter came and rapped o nthe door. One of the party in the room said, "Peter raps, and wants to come in." One of the disciples said, "No, it is his spirit," they believing that he had been killed, as he had been in jail, but the disciple answered and said, "No, it is Peter himself, "so they opened the door and let him in. Now, when Christ came, he did not knock and ask admittance. The Book says, Christ appeared, talked to the disciples and then disappeared. Now if Christ had His physical body, He would have come in the door as Peter did. No one ever claimed to have seen Christ after the crucifixion, except His disciples, and they saw Him clairvoyantly, the same as I now see people who have passed over.

One trouble with our people here on this earth, they will not give in to the spirit friends who do come to them. I have heard different people say that they have felt the presence of their spirit friends. One lady in particular, that I will mention:

She lost her boy, and she told me that she felt him place his arms about her neck and kiss her. Then I said to her, "Did you give him to understand that you knew he was present?" Why, she seemed surprised that I should ask such a question, for she really thought she had imagined it, but I told her that she did not imagine it, but that it was really his presence that caused her to feel him, and I told her that the next time she felt his presence, to tell him that she knew he was present and that she was grateful to him for coming, and to invite him to come often. Now, friends, when you feel the presence of your spirit friends, welcome them and they will come again.

Friends, just stop and think a minute. Were you to go and call on a friend and he would not talk to you and welcome you, would you call again? Very few would. Now, can you expect your spirit friends to continue to come if you do not give them to understand that you know they are present, and appreciate their presence? Invite them back again, and they will surely come. The oftener they come the easier it is for them to come.

Were my spirit friends to leave me, I would feel very lonely indeed. I do not fear them leaving me, for they know I trust them. They never lead me wrong. I always rely on them for help. No matter what I undertake, they help me through. Without their help, I do not know what I would do. In fact, I do not know whether I could do anything without this help, as I depend upon them entirely to help me through with my undertakings. There are a great many people here who say, "When S. Burd undertakes anything it goes through every time." It is because my spirit friends help me to carry it through.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

October 15, James W. Clark of Rockland, Maine, aged 63 years and 5 months, gladly vacated his mortal tenement, and entered another not subject to dissolution and decay.

Brother Clark had been a true and faithful Spiritualist for more than fifty years, and the knowledge he possessed of the truth of spirit communion was the magic staff upon which he leaned and from which he derived that inspiration which made his whole life one of noble endeavor. Business honesty and a well wisher of humanity in general, his desire to go quickly and easily was gratified. He leaves a wife and three children and a large number of relatives and friends.

FREEMAN W. SMITH.

Nancy M., wife of Edward S. Dart, passed to the beyond at her home in Gaines, Genesee Co., Mich., October 16, 1906, after a sickness of two weeks' patient waiting for her summons. Dr. Sarah Allen of Flint, officiated. Interment made in Glenwood Cemetery. OLIVER DART.

Passed to spirit life, October 20, from her home, 2321 Detrert street, Cleveland, Ohio, Mrs. Helen M. Whitnall, aged 72 years. She was a prominent Spiritualist, a member of the Good Samaritans and other Spiritualistic societies. Her earnest life as wife and mother was that which makes the world better and purer. She leaves two sons and two daughters to mourn the seeming separation, but the blessings of the knowledge of the life she now enjoys with her early companion and friends, allay their grief. Brother I. W. Pope officiated. COR.

Passed to spirit life from her home, 4911 Fourteenth avenue, Milwaukee, Wis., October 25, 1906, Mrs. Jane M. Strong, aged 70 years. Mrs. Strong was a Spiritualist and possessed fine mediumistic powers. She leaves one brother and two sisters, Mrs. Mary E. Van Horn and Mrs. Julia F. Cook of this city. We grieve not as those do who know not the truth of Spiritualism. MRS. MARY E. VAN HORN.

Richard D. Cox, 27 years of age departed this life, October 23, after several months of severe suffering. His mother being a Spiritualist and medium, called upon the writer to officiate at the funeral which was held at his home, 710 Warren avenue, Sunday, October 25, and was largely attended, the gospel of Spiritualism affording the sweet consolation of a future life in which mother and son, with all other friends will be united.

A Spirit Message.

The soul gives life. The attainment of soul life gives thought to mind, conceives the highest spirituality, governs the life that is, and prepares for individualized life hereafter. The impressions made upon the soul are indelible truths; each act in life impresses the soul for good or evil. Thoughts are keys upon which the mind develops soul—the pure melody, harmony. The perfected chord vibrates and mingles with the subconscious life that takes on the deific, the source of life, the great, wonderful, limitless love compassion which enters, and is a part of all created life—the great thought life—the harmonious affinity—life intermingled with the life—no dividing line between.

The germ of Infinitude breathes and lives. The heart of the flower is nestled within the breast of life—the unfolding leaves betraying its birth.

All nature controls, and in all the kingdoms of life organic is found the perfect setting. The dew-drop portrays the baptism of soul. The dew of love penetrates the flower as the love of the source of life penetrates the heart of man.

A NEW CATECHISM

BY M. M. MANGASARIAN.

Fourth Edition—Six Additional Chapters—360 Pages, Bound in Cloth, $1.00.—Containing Likeness of the Author.

"A New Catechism" has enjoyed a remarkable sale both in America and England. George Jacob Holyoake, in his introduction to the English edition of "A New Catechism," says:

"A New Catechism" is the boldest, the brightest, the most varied and informing of any work of the kind extant. The principal fields of human knowledge, which the churches have fenced round with supernatural terrors, the Catechism breaks into, cherishing what is fair and showing what is deformed. The notes, of which there are many, both ancient and contemporary, are as striking as the text. The book is a cyclopedia of theology and reason in a nutshell.

MORALITY WITHOUT A GOD.

With letter to Right Reverend Bishop Anderson, of Chicago. Price, 10 cents.

JESUS CHRIST A MYTH.

A New Book.—Price 25 Cents.

This book examines the evidence for the historical existence of Jesus, and finds it quite insufficient to prove that such a man as Jesus ever lived. It is a most important contribution to Modern Thought. It is prefaced by a letter to the Christian Clergy, and concluded by an answer to an editorial in one of the Chicago morning papers, attacking Mr. Mangasarian's position. Send your orders at once, as the first edition will soon be exhausted.

Prof. Lockwood's Books.

Store your mind with the great but demonstrative truths found in consecutive order only in these writings.

Prof. Lockwood is the only writer, thinker and lecturer in this country who affirms that the evolution of the soul of man is in strict accord and agreement with the evolution of the soul of nature; and that the only proof of immortality inheres in an analysis of nature's fundamental principles and the co-relation of cosmic elements and energies.

These great truths are explained and demonstrated from the plane of the Spiritual Philosophy founded on Nature itself.

The Molecular Hypothesis of Nature and Its Relation to the Philosophy of Spiritualism. A scientific demonstration of the invisible principles and attributes of nature and Modern Spiritualism. A mint of scientific truths as the basis of its phenomena. Price 25 cents.

The Infidelity of Ecclesiasticism—A Menace to the American Civilization. The entire hierarchy of Ecclesiasticism arraigned as infidels for subverting the scientific demonstrations of universities and colleges, by substituting the immoral phantoms of the Mosaic Hypothesis. It is a hot shot. Price 25 cents.

Historical, Logical and Philosophical Objections to the Dogmas of Reincarnation and Re-Embodiment. A concise and masterly review of the historical origin of Reincarnation as an ancient dogma. Its illogical claims and inconsistent assumptions. Its glaring defects and dogmas dissected. Price 25 cents.

The Spiritualism of Nature. Modern Spiritualism has its basic truths in nature, and is proven not by the bible or any sacred cosmogony, but by an analysis of nature's self-existent principles. Price 15 cents.

Continuity of Life a Cosmic Truth. The greatest book, and the greatest truth of any age; a book of 212 pages with several telling scientific illustrations. Continuity of life and the association of spirit realms demonstrated to be in scientific accord with principles of the Co-relation of Force, and the Conservation of Energy. The greatest book ever written in the defence and support of Spiritualism. Price $1.

The Relation Science Holds to Natural Philosophy and Its Conflict with Every Phase of Religion. In this essay the author shows that science is not a thing—a corporation or individual, but a process of inductive and deductive reasoning. Its acceptance means the death of Theurgical religions. Price 15 cents.

All of Prof. Lockwood's publications are on sale at The Progressive Thinker office, Chicago, Ill., and at the rostrum when he lectures. These treatises contain the wealth of a vast historical and scientific research.

THE SOUL: ITS NATURE, RELATIONS AND EXPRESSIONS IN HUMAN EMBODIMENTS. Third edition now on sale. Price $1.00. This is one of the best books given by the guides of Mrs Cora L. V. Richmond. They are really lessons, published primarily, as a book of reference for those who have been members of the classes receiving them. This volume is a careful compilation from reports of lessons, containing the bases of the teachings.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

M. W. H.: Q. What is atonement? If a man injures another wilfully or unintentionally, physically or spiritually, what will be the nature of the atonement he must make?

If a man claims he is conscious of and remembers the details of past incarnations, and substantiates this by reading your past life, although a stranger, how do you explain the fact?

A. Atonement in its theological signification means that Christ by his suffering on the cross paid for the sins of all who believe on him. That is, he cancels such sins. So far as one person being able vicariously to pay for the sins of another, it is impossible for his own. Physically, to illustrate, a person carelessly handling a pistol, shoots a friend, inflicting a wound that maims for life; is there a possibility of his atoning for this act? He cannot restore the body, nor offer an equivalent. If the shot is intentional, the same impossibility exists. The law may punish, but there is nor can there be restitution. A spiritual wrong, teaching of error, and degrading thoughts, may lead its victim to ruin, and the teacher cannot atone for his work, whether it be done for good or evil.

Those whom we wrong may forgive us—that is, hold no thought of being avenged by reprisals, but that is a state of mind only affecting the wronged and not the wrong-doer. The only possible atonement is the change of character which will prevent repetition. A man may grow out of and away from sin, the effects of his sins cannot be overcome in that way. The benefit is all to himself. Even if an error, crime, blunder or misfortune could be canceled after this manner, the loss of having passed that way, having wandered in the wrong path, can never be fully repaid and we shall not be able to retrieve, or reach the spiritual goal as quickly.

I know it is taught all experiences are necessary for full development, and because these cannot be gained in one earthly life, repeated incarnations are essential. That all experiences are essential, really is an unsupported and gratuitous assumption.

For spiritual unfoldment, we require spiritual experiences, as we require physical for the development of the body, but the spirit may, instead of being perfected by the experiences of the body, may be debased. The appetites, desires and passions, held in spiritual leash, for the purposes for which they are designed cast no soiling shadow on the spirit, but when allowed to rule, the "experience" is degradation, and repetitions instead of purification, would be festering corruption and spiritual death.

It is assumed as evidence of a past existence reincarnated in the present, that one person is able to tell the fortune of another, who is a stranger. This because the two knew each other in some one of past existences. If this be true, would not the memory of such past life be so closely related with the personality as to make that also remembered? How is it that this personality is so completely obliterated and yet the past remembered? And this past is not of a preceding life, but of the present.

Such reading of the past life may be from spirits who know, or it may be from clairvoyant receptivity which is capable of reading the mind of the subject.

When descriptions of past existences are given, instead of the past in the present existence, as it is emphatically stated that there is no memory of such passing from one to the other, such descriptions cannot be acquaintanceship in such states, but must be derived from some other source.

Has the Appearance of Truth.

Cruel Finger Grips on Girl's Neck Made by Ghost—Young Woman Tells of Hacked Spirit's Nightly Tours—Marks of Blood—Red Wreath Rings Neck of Visitor, Showing Against Unearthly White.

Night after night for many weeks confronted with ghostly visitors in their home at 2035 South Broad street. At first they tried to say that it was all a fancy, and this failing, the two young women attempted to laugh it off. But the ghost, they say, was still on hand, as weird, uncanny and strange as ever.

Finally the Taft sisters called in their friends, and when these persons, too, heard the noises and saw the sights, it was decided that the apparitions are too mysterious to be explained as natural phenomena. Since the last attempt to trap the ghost the manifestations have taken a most alarming form, and a crisis has been reached which has excited the whole neighborhood.

On Saturday night Miss Sadie Taft, the younger of the two sisters, was wakened from a sound sleep by consciousness that the ghost was near. She opened her eyes just in time to see a strange white object, glimmering with faint light, float from the hallway through another room and into her own.

The object became stationary over the foot of the bed, and remained there, moving only slightly for some moments. Miss Taft had an opportunity to closely scrutinize it, making out the shape of a human head, which had evidently been roughly hacked from the body, as if with an axe. About the short piece of neck beneath the head was an appearance of moisture, as if the blood was not yet dry.

No Outcry as Ghost Hovered Ner.

This vision was sufficiently gruesome to have frightened a less strong-minded woman, but Miss Taft made no outcry; for she had seen something of the kind many times before. All she did was to wake her sister by punching her in the side with her elbow. This signal had been agreed upon by the two girls, it being further understood that there was to be no further talking on these occasions.

But, although Miss Fannie Taft opened her eyes wide, she did not see the dancing human head. She has never yet seen the ghost, but has always felt its presence. This time, as before, she felt the ghost, but could not make out its form in the air. Miss Fannie Taft had the typhoid fever about a year ago, and since then has not been able to use her eyes as well as formerly.

Suddenly the head disappeared as silently as it had come. It vanished where it had been last seen by Miss Sadie, and did not go back through the other room and out into the hall in an orderly manner, as it made its entrance into the apartment. In spite of their nervousness the two sisters in the course of an hour dozed off to sleep.

The exit of the vision happened about 1 o'clock Sunday morning. At 3 o'clock in the morning Miss Sadie Taft felt a strong grip upon her throat, as if a big man had her by the neck. The girl sleeps lightly, and was awake in an instant, in time to see a singular dark object gliding from the room.

Finger Marks on Her Throat.

In the morning, Sunday morning, Miss Sadie Taft's neck was still aching. On looking in the mirror she found on her throat the marks of five fingers, the imprint being black and blue and showing where she had been clutched by a cruel hand. This was the first time the ghost had exerted his muscular powers, and naturally the two sisters decided that it would not do to tempt such fate any longer. They hurried out to friends, and last night did not sleep in the apartments which seem to be so singularly haunted.

Among those to whom Miss Sadie Taft has shown the mark on her neck is Mrs. Blair, of 1933 South Sixteenth street. Mrs. Blair is an old neighbor and friend, as the Taft sisters lived at 1929 South Sixteenth street up to two years ago, when their mother died at that number.

"More truthful girls than the Taft sisters do not live," said Mrs. Blair yesterday. "Sadie came here early in the morning and showed me the mark on her neck. It was certainly made by the grip of a hand, and it was a savage pinch. I don't want to be silly and believe in ghosts, but I don't know how to explain it. My boy Edwin went to the house and remained all night when the girls first heard the noise. He slept in the bed in one room and they on the couch in the other room. He is about 20 years old, and he went to sleep and slept soundly all night, just as a boy would, and he says he did not hear anything.

"But my boy is about the only person who tried it and not heard anything. A number of persons, women friends of the Tafts, have gone there, and they have all heard the noises, and none of them can explain them."

Story of an Old Murder.

It was found that throughout the neighborhood yesterday a story was being told about a murder being committed in the house where the Taft sisters live. This rumor is that a man was hacked to death with a knife, and later the body was found in the cellar of the house. But the head of the corpse was missing, and has not as yet been found. This report has not as yet been verified by the police, but the policemen near the house are young men, and were not there twenty years ago.

Both the Taft Sisters are members of St. Elizabeth's Protestant Episcopal Church, at Sixteenth and Mifflin streets, and have been since they were children. The Rev. Father McGarvey, the rector, speaks of them in the highest terms and as among his most worthy parishioners. It is recalled that when Miss Sadie Taft first noticed the noises she sought her rector at once. On this occasion, the Rev. Father Hayward, assistant rector, volunteered his services, and went to the rooms where the sisters live, and held prayers in each apartment.

Although in this religious ceremony there was no intention to exorcise the ghost, matters quieted for several days. Then the creakings in the floor, the knocks in the wall and ceiling, the distant rumbles and the other queer sounds began again.

Clergymen, physicians and others who are acquainted with the facts have in vain tried to account for the visions and the noises. The Taft girls have been the object of inquiry, but their reputation for probity cannot be questioned. Miss Sadie Taft is employed by the Pennsylvania Dental Manufacturing Company, where she is trusted with executive authority and has proved her worth for six or more years.

One Sister Does Not See Ghosts.

After the death of their mother the two sisters moved to the house at the southeast corner of Moore and Mole streets. They saw no ghosts there. Just after they moved Miss Fannie Taft was sick with typhoid fever for many weeks, and upon convalescence was removed to the home of friends in the country, where she remained five months regaining her strength. But this young woman is not the one who sees the ghosts, but she has felt them frequently, and says she knows that her sister is not stretching the facts in the least. Miss Fannie says that if her eyes were better she knows she could see them, too.

Owing to Miss Fannie Taft's illness, Miss Sadie moved into the rooms at 2035 South Broad street alone. Her sister had been with her on the day the rooms were selected, and afterward while they were cleaning. At this time, while Miss Fannie was sweeping, she felt instinctively that a man was standing behind her. Turning quickly, she saw no one. Again she began sweeping, and the presence came back. Turn as quickly as she might, she could not get a glimpse of the fleeting spirit that she now believes was behind her on this occasion.

"If Fannie had told me of that," says Miss Sadie, "we would have been saved all this ordeal. We could have then given up the place and gone somewhere else, but she kept still about it for fear of frightening me."

It was while Miss Sadie Taft was alone in the rooms, and her sister away in the country, that she first detected the wraith-like visitations. She heard the creaking at nights, mostly between the hours of 1 and 3, and, while she did not believe in ghosts, she could not help but think that her sister might be worse.

One day, in the broad daylight, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, Miss Sadie Taft was seated alone in the rooms. She was in a rocking chair, and her lap was full of work, as she was darning her own and her sister's hose. Suddenly there was a regular creak, creak, as if she was rocking the chair. But the chair was perfectly still.

Makes His First Appearance.

Miss Sadie glanced up, and, to her horror, saw the ghost for the first time. A head poked in at the door, and a form like that of a man, but white, as if dressed for the tropics, stepped boldly into the room. Miss Sadie was startled, but she had presence of mind enough to rise to welcome the intruder, letting the darning drop on the floor. But before she got halfway to her feet there was a disappearance that betrayed the unearthly character of her visitor. The man—head and all—gone. The form did not go back to the door and then drop out of sight, but, rather, was instantly dissipated just where it stood.

For months the Misses Taft kept their secret, not mentioning, except to to the priests at St. Elizabeth's, and to some dear and trusty friends, the mystic happenings in their apartment. But finally the ghost became too troublesome to be longer tolerated. The story was told to a doctor, who got one of the women from St. Elizabeth's and a boy to remain in the rooms with him all night. They heard the creaks, the hissing, the rumbles, but saw no ghost. Later the other friends of the girls were informed, and in turn braved the ghosts. Some of these were more fortunate, and by this time at least a dozen persons are ready to testify to seeing the strange moving and disappearing figures that have created such a neighborhood excitement.

Lately the Taft sisters have been a bit unnerved. Several times, when the thumpings and groanings were more than ordinarily disturbing, the two young women rose together in the night, and at 2 o'clock in the morning fled the house. They went usually to the home of their washerwoman, in Juniper street, not far away.—North American, Philadelphia.

A Critic Criticised

"Prejudice, bigotry and the frown of Mother Grundy are among the chief obstacles in the way of spiritual advancement. It is certain that the scientists who oppose Spiritualism are imprudent and precipitate in their conclusions."

To the Editor:—A problem that stands out before the world, that has never been solved, is this: Why do men being equally intelligent, having equal opportunities to investigate, and being equally honest and sincere, come to opposite and even antagonistic conclusions on the same subject?

The answer to this question requires a knowledge of the human mind. In all mental operations, there are but two elements involved. They are force and the consciousness of its action. That is to say, every mental operation is a sensation in consciousness.

The characteristics that distinguish man from all sentient beings below him are the moral sentiments and spiritual aspirations. These are properly named the Psychic Force. The action of all forces is manifested in phenomena. This we see in the physical world. The falling of an unsupported body is a good illustration. That force is gravity, and the phenomenon is the motion of the body. For thousands of years this force was unknown, even unsuspected.

In the mental world as regards human conduct, the same relation of cause and effect exists. There is a force giving rise to a series of phenomena we call human conduct. Natural law is simply the mode of action of a force. It is the same in the mental world as in the physical world. That force in the mental world is sensation, that is, feeling in some form of desire, emotion or passion. In these, the psychic force is manifested in consciousness—the seat of the intellect, discrimination, judgment, reason, knowledge, the effects of a cause.

Herbert Spencer calls these two primal, fundamental elements of the mind, the Knowable and the Unknowable. They are cause and effect; but it is better to call them the Known and the Unknown. They stand in the relation of cause and effect; that is, the Noumenon and the Phenomenon.

Where there is an effect there must be a cause. Newton discovered that in the falling of an apple. He said: The apple is a body, and the earth is a body. There is an attraction existing between them. From that starting point he extended his observations and experiments until he demonstrated the fact that all bodies attract each other, directly in proportion to the quantity of matter in each, and inversely as the square of their distance apart.

Here was revealed the noumenon, Spencer's Unknowable; but really the hitherto unknown. All physical science is founded on the recognition of the relation of cause and effect. Mental science is only waiting for that recognition, as physical science has waited for thousands of years.

We will now come back to the question above stated. All opinons are sensations in consciousness; that is, they are conscious sensations. Sensation is feeling, essentially, life itself; it is in the individual; it can be nowhere else. That feeling gives rise to the seeming of reality in what is felt. This may seem a very simple assertion. So it is. All things are simple when fully understood. We think what we feel; but the world has it, we feel what we think, reversing the logical order of the elements. To use a trite saying, we put the cart before the horse. The horse is the noumenon—the cause—the cart is the phenomenon—the effect. The cart cannot pull the horse.

The reason why men of equal intelligence, equal means for investigation and equal honesty and sincerity, come to different conclusions on the some subject is because they have different feelings on that subject. Their feeling give rise to the seeming of reality in what they feek. What seems to them is what they feel. They take that seeming for reality. This fact passed into a proverb long ago. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." "The thinketh in his heart" is what seems to him, because he feels that way. The seeming is the conception of the feeling. This he takes for the reality. He fails to grasp the relation between the cause and effect, and he takes the conception for the reality. This simple explanation will suffice for every mental operation when it is fully comprehended.

Now for the criticism. In The Progressive Thinker of October 6, there is an account of a trumpet seance in which a voice was heard as one drowning, calling for help; the one calling being recognized as a relative, the writer calls for an explanation.

The associate editor of Suggestion, E. E. Carey, has given his explanation in accordance with his state of feeling. He admits the fact of the voice in the seance, calling for help, and then proceeds to explain. He says, "We do not know why grass grows, and cannot explain the forces which cause the growth." The fact that it grows is sufficient for us to know because we have nothing to do with the modus operandi of growth, though we can furnish the best conditions for its growth. That is sufficient for all practical purposes. We know that heat expands the vapor of water; but the reason why is an irrelevant question, because we have no agency in the process of expansion.

Our critic admits the fact of the phenomena, and because we do not explain the modus operandi to his liking he declares that there is no explanation, and consequently there is no spirit return and communion with mortals. Why does he not doubt the certainty of mortals communicating with mortals, since he can not explain the modus operandi of changing brain action into consciousness? This argument, if it be argument, applies with equal force to both. The reason is because we have no agency in the modus operandi. It lies beyond the scope of our own comprehension, and is therefore irrelevant. He might with equal propriety ask why does the sun shine? Why does gravity act? If we did know, it would do us no good.

He thinks everything operates in accordance with natural law; so do the Spiritualists; but he does not seem to be able to conceive anything beyond the domain of physics, and consequently there can be nothing supernatural. There never was a Spiritualist that ever conceived such an idea.

The final word with the scientist is: "Stop when you come to what seems to be an end of man; and for this imperative reason, namely, you do not claim that you have compassed him; you find in him that which you cannot explain—something that lies back of energy and function and is the cause or ground of a play of function. You admit a consciousness; you admit that thought depends upon tissue; it is not tissue nor the action of tissue, and therefore it may have some ground of action. You admit an impassable chasm between brain action and consciousness. What right has science to leap that chasm with a negative in its hand? Why should science object to attempts to bridge the chasm from this side? Physical science has left an entity—a something that it has felt but could not grasp, just as it has felt, but could not grasp the ether. May not the science that gave to physics the ether, try its hand at this unexplained remainder? Accept no negative assertion; this is the bigotry of science." (The Guiding Star, page 22).

Here is a lesson for our critic. He ignores the multitude of scientific men that could be named by the hundred—Crookes, Wallace, Lodge, Meyer, Sedgwick, Zolner, Hugo, Richet, and many others across the Atlantic, and Judge Edmunds. Prof. Hare, Senator Sprague, Gov. Tallmadge, Abraham Lincoln, Professors James and Hyslop, and many others on this side of the Atlantic, besides millions who have accepted this beautiful and soul-cheering philosophy including many eminent clergymen. Our critic would make them out to be the victims of delusion, while he is wise enough to escape it.

He tells us to study Binet and Hudson and read The Phantoms of the Living; thus depending on the opinions of others instead of a personal investigation where there are numerous opportunities. Why not advise us to read Crookes, Wallace, Meyer, Edmunds, Hare, Pierpont, James, Hyslop, and the vast literature now so abundant?

He says: "I do not wish to be quoted as having a theory to account for so-called occult phenomena." If he would investigate the subject he would not need a theory. His mental attitude clearly shows his unacquaintance with the subject, however laudable, ably and efficiently he is laboring to advance the cause of human weal. But what he says on this subject virtually denies the verity of the demonstration of men of acknowledged scientific attainment. This is the bigotry of science. The reason why he stands aloof is because he does not want it to be the way the Spiritualists have it. He does not feel that way.

If he felt a desire to know, he would investigate. He is satisfied with his opinion on the subject, and seeks to defend it. He says, "Personally, I think the solution of these questions depends upon laws and principles which cannot be wholly grasped by the human understanding." He has not grasped the relation of cause and effect in regard to this subject. Neither has he grasped the relation of cause and effect in regard to the force that gives rise to human conduct; but he does not deny that men converse with one another. There is as much reason to deny that mortals communicate with mortals, as to deny that they communicate with immortals.

Prejudice, bigotry and the frown of Mother Grundy, are among the chief obstacles in the way of spiritual advancement. It is certain that the scientists who oppose Spiritualism, are imprudent and precipitate in their conclusions.

THE INVISIBLE I.

Ah, who can see the I, am I,
Or who can view the thought?
Who can discern the motive why
That secret deed was wrought?

When walking on the crowded street,
The outward form I see
Of fellow mortals that I meet;
Their self is hid from me.

I meet the Demon steeped in sin,
And think him kind and good;
I know him not, I see not him,
His soul is stained with blood.

The vile deceiver fiend of hell,
The good, the kind, the true,
Are all alike invisible—
Their self is hid from view.

And so the true reality,
The self is hid from view;
The real, the actuality,
The we, the I, the you.

Our loved ones, though invisible,
Yet very near may be;
We feel their presence, catch their thought,
Their form we may not see.

O, loved one gone, my joy, my pride,
My light, my star, my crown;
I feel thee ever at my side,
Where thou art surely known.

And when with last and long drawn breath
I shall myself be free,
I'll join thee where there is no death,
Through all eternity.

THE PATHWAY OF THE HUMAN SPIRIT.

Or, the Pathway of the Spirit Traced.

By J. M. Peebles, M. D., M. A.

Did it pre-exist and does it reincarnate again into mortal life? When did it enter the body? What is its form—how does it relate to the soul body? Can it leave the human body and return again? Can it live in and control another mortal body? These questions and many others are asked and answered by the Doctor in this, his latest book, of two hundred pages. Price 75 cents; postage, 12 cents.

Our Fall and Winter Campaign Will Prove Interesting.

WITH THE PRESENT NUMBER THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER COMMENCES A NEW HALF-YEARLY VOLUME. IT IS OUR INTENTION THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER SHALL LOSE NONE OF ITS EXCELLENT FEATURES AS AN EXPONENT OF GENUINE SPIRITUALISM. IT WILL ABATE NONE OF THE FORCE AND VIM WHICH HAVE CHARACTERIZED IT IN ALL OF ITS PAST, AND FOR WHICH IT HAS BECOME NOTED THROUGHOUT THE WORLD, NOT ONLY AMONG SPIRITUALISTS, BUT SCIENTISTS AND INVESTIGATORS AS WELL. IT IS KNOWN EVERYWHERE FOR ITS FEARLESS COURSE IN PROCLAIMING AND DEFENDING THE TRUTH—ALL TRUTH—AS WE SEE IT, IN SCIENCE AS WELL AS IN SPIRITUALISM. EQUALLY IS IT WELL KNOWN AS THE FEARLESS OPPONENT OF FRAUD AND DECEPTION UNDER THE CLOAK OF SPIRITUALISM.

FOR THESE GOOD REASONS IT APPEALS WITH ESPECIAL FORCE TO THE SENTIMENT OF HONESTY IN THE HEARTS OF SPIRITUALISTS AND ALL WHO LOVE TRUTH WITHOUT ADMIXTURE OF FALSITY AND LIES. TO THIS CLASS THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER OWES ITS PAST AND PRESENT PROSPERITY—AND OF THIS WE ARE PROUD.

IN ORDER TO EXTEND OUR USEFULNESS, AND AS AN AID TO THE CAUSE OF SPIRITUALISM, WE DESIRE TO INCREASE OUR SUBSCRIPTION LIST. EVERY ADDITIONAL NEW SUBSCRIBER IS AN ADDITION TO THE STRENGTH OF OUR CAUSE, FOR BY READING THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER ONE BECOMES MORE INTELLIGENT IN REGARD TO SPIRITUALISM AND COGNATE SUBJECTS, AND BECOMES BETTER INFORMED CONCERNING ITS PHENOMENA AND PHILOSOPHY, AS WELL AS KEEPING IN CLOSE TOUCH WITH THE WORKERS, THE THINKERS, AND THEIR DOINGS, WHICH ARE OF ESPECIAL INTEREST TO SPIRITUALISTS.

IF YOU WANT A PAPER THAT WILL BE A MOUTHPIECE AND DEFENDER FOR THOSE WHO PRACTICE FRAUD AND DECEPTION—YOU DON'T WANT THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER—UNLESS IT BE TO CONVERT YOU TO A BETTER STATE OF MIND.

IF YOU WANT A PAPER THAT WILL STAND SQUARELY FOR THE HONEST AND GENUINE IN SPIRITUALISM, THAT WILL GIVE YOU THE SPIRITUAL NEWS FROM ALL OVER THE WORLD, AND THE BEST THOUGHTS OF OUR BEST THINKERS, THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER IS THE PAPER YOU WANT, AND THE ONE YOU SHOULD WORK FOR TO INCREASE ITS CIRCULATION.

Sun-God the Original Deity.

Modern Religion the Outgrowth of Astronomical Worship Among the Nations of Antiquity.

"THE IDEA OF THE GREAT SPIRITUAL SUN OF THE ANCIENTS, THE UNKNOWN AND UNKNOWABLE, FINDS ITS PERFECT CORRESPONDENCE IN THE GREEK ZEUS—THE GOD WHO DWELLS ALONE, AND FROM WHOM PROCEED, AS SUBORDINATE EMANATIONS, ALL THE IMPERSONATED POWERS OF NATURE, PLANETARY AND ASTRAL SPIRITS, WHO FIGURE IN THE FAMOUS PANTHEON. APOLLO, MERCURY, OR HERMES, BACCHUS, PROMETHEUS, AND ESCULAPIUS, WERE SUN-GODS, MEDIATORS, SAVIORS; CERES, PROSERPINA, AND PLUTO PLAYED THEIR SPECIAL PARTS IN THE ASTRAL DRAMA, BUT ALL DERIVE THEIR NAMES AND HISTORIES FROM THE SAME SOURCE. HINDOO, EGYPTIANS, ARABIANS, PARSEES, GREEKS, AND ROMANS, ALL DRANK AT THE SAME CELESTIAL FOUNTAIN, AND ONLY VARIED THEIR RITES, CEREMONIALS, NAMES, AND FIGURES TO SUIT THE IDEALITY OF THE LAND WHOSE AGE OR CLIMATIC INFLUENCE DETERMINED THEIR INTELLIGENCE."

The best philologists agree in attributing to the nations or peoples called Aryan, or Indo-European, the first linguistic records we possess.

Men do not invent names for things of which they have no idea. The Aryan name for God was Div, which signifies "the clear light of day"; and this word has become the root-word of all worship for untold ages, until we arrive at its modern equivalent, Deity. All accounts given of the most early historic people, classified as Aryans, assert that they kept fires constantly burning as their chief element in religious worship. When we trace the early conceptions of the Hindoos—that most ancient of contemplative men, those children of the spirit, who communed with Nature's God through the profoundest study of Nature herself—we find they cherished ideas so exalted of the First Great Cause that they ventured not to embody their thought of him in any form, symbol, or even to assign to him a name. The Supreme Being was with them the Unknowable, and only became typified as Brahm, which, interpreted, signifies "the Void," "the Silent Region" which cannot be pierced—the unfathomable which cannot be gauged or understood.

That the mind might rest on a providential scheme, the sages of India taught that there were three subordinate emanations from the First Great Cause, who embodied the Grand Trinity of his deific attributes. This primordial trinity consisted of Brahma, the creator; Vishnu, the preserver; and Siva, the destroyer and reproducer. Each of these deific emanations was so intimately connected in the Hindoo mind with the attributes of heat and light that the earliest Hindustance worship may, with light, be assumed to have laid the foundation of that stupendous system known, in later ages, as the astronomical religion.

A large proportion of the Vedas—the oldest of the Hindoo scriptures—consists of epics in praise of light; accounts of the miracles outwrought by the mighty sun-god; invocations to the spirits of the air, moon, stars, the sacred fire and different elements. Many of the prayers addressed to Indra, the starry-robed ruler of the constellated heavens, as well as to astral spirits of different departments of the universe. Fire was held sacred in every household, and employed in all sacerdotal rites. The very shape of the pyramidal temples and tapering spires signified the all-pervading reverence of the Hindoo mind for the symbol of the tapering flame.

In one of the most ancient of the Vedic hymns, addressed to the Heranyagarbha, occurs the following passage: "In the beginning there arose the source of golden light. He was the only born lord of all that is. He established the earth and the sky. To what other God shall we offer sacrifice?" The Vedic hymns are nearly all invocations to the solar and astral sources of light and heat; the Vedic philosophy, speculations on the origin of being, ever reaffirming the influence of solar and astral agency in creation.

The following passage, descriptive of the Hindoo's God, will convey an idea of his sublime conception of deity: "Heaven is his head; the sun and moon are his eyes; the earth his feet; space his ears; the air his breath. He is the soul of the universe, the sun of the luminaries. All creation derives light from him alone.

In the Egyptian and Persian theogony, the direct acknowledgment of one Supreme Being, corresponding to the sun and its attributes, is as marked as in the Aryan and Indian records. The elaborate woof of Grecian and Roman mythology partakes of the same golden threads of belief, and whilst ramifying into a complete system of polytheism, still refer back to the Indian and Egyptian idea of creation springing from one supreme source, and this a spiritual centre of heat or creative energy, and light or creative wisdom. In the Orphic songs, the one first Cause, celebrated as Zeus, is more completely associated with the Egyptian idea of a sun-god, a spirit "without parts or passion, sex or nature," than in the theories of later philosophers. Orpheus, the sage, to whom the introduction of Egyptian theogony into Greece is mainly due, chants thus of the Supreme Being: "Zeus is male, Zeus is female. Zeus is the spirit of all things, Zeus is the rushing of uncreated fire. Zeus is the king; he is the sun and moon. Zeus is the mighty power, the demon, the one mighty frame in which this universe revolves. He is fire and water, earth and ether, day and night. All things unite in the body of Zeus."

The Hindoos—the oldest nation that possesses scriptural as well as monumental records, dating back to the highest antiquity, even to prehistoric ages—believed in one Supreme Omnific Central Source of Being, and from him descended emanations corresponding in many respects to the mythical personages of the astronomical religion. The biographies of two of their principal avatars or incarnated god-men, Chrishna and Buddha Sakia, are closely accordant with the history of the sun-god. The births of these avatars through the motherhood of a pure virgin, their lives in infancy threatened by a vengeful king, their flight and concealment in Egypt, their return to work miracles, save, heal, and redeem the world, suffer persecution, a violent death by crucifixion, a descent into hell, and a reappearance as a new-born savior, are all items of the sun-god's history, which have already been recited, and maintain in every detail the correspondence between the Hindoo faith and the Sabean system. The feasts, fasts, seasons of lamentation and rejoicing, the reverence paid to fire, flame, heat, light, and even the minutest details of ceremonial rites practiced in the most ancient astronomical worship, are scattered through the varying forms of Hindoo theology, until the parity of the two systems cannot be questioned.

An equally faithful adherence to the Sabean legend is to be found in the story of the Indian Dionysius, subsequently repeated in Egypt, and forming the basis of the Osiric legend. Egypt taught the sun-god's history, and that in a series of myths and mysteries still more elaborate than those of India.

The stories of Osiris, Isis, Horus, and Typhon are direct transcripts of the astronomical scheme. The myths of the gods Zulus and Memnon, the worship of Heliopolis, the gorgeous order of the famous mysteries, and the mythical personages scattered throughout the wonderful woof of Egyptian theogony, are but elaborations of the zodiacal fable, and the worship of the powers of nature.

The sublime system of Zoroaster recites the history of the sun-god in that of Mithra; finds in Arimanes, the great dragon of the skies, and in all the sacred times and seasons, ceremonials, and traditions, a complete transcript of the astronomical religion. The Chaldeans, Ethiopians, Phenicians and the most settled of the Arabian tribes taught the same basic idea in their varied systems of worship. The disinterred ruins of the once mighty city of Nineveh are one complete inscription of the sun-god's history and worship. The most ingenious and varied symbolisms of astral and solar worship speak in unmistakable tones of evidence from the magnificent remains of Babylon, from the ruins of Tadmor in the desert, and in innumerable groups of once famous, though now unknown, vestiges of human habitation, scattered throughout Central Asia.

Even the Troglodyte remains along the Nile bear witness to the prevalence of solar worship, in rude carvings and grotesque imitations of the heavenly bodies. From the ruins profusely scattered throughout Asia Minor, from the land of the Phascanna, Iberians, Albanians, Phrygians, and Ionians, I have seen a large collection of photographic representations of planetary and solar worship. The Scythian nations generally worshiped fire, and preserved traditions of a crucified sun-god, and celebrated the Sun's birthday on the 25th of December.

The tartar tribes practice to this day all the festal ceremonies appertaining to the astronomical religion.

The religions of China and Japan were originally founded on the mythical history of the sun-god. Many additions and interpolations upon the basic legend have obtained in Chinese and Japanese worship, but the foundation is unique, and the feasts, ceremonial rites, and seasons of observance, all prove the parity of worship among the people with the Sabean system.

In the islands of Ceylon and Java, the Philippines and the Moluccas, various forms of solar and astral worship have existed for ages. The Druidical system of worship, though largely interspersed with other ideas, was firmly planted on the Sabean system with a complete zodiacal history atop with a complete zodiacal history in the incarnated deity they called Hesus.

The entire mythology of the splendid imagery of Grecian and Roman mythology, was but a paraphrase of Egyptian solar worship, enlarged, embellished, and beautified by the poetic mentality of Greece and Rome.

The idea of the Great Spiritual Sun of the ancient, the unknown and unknowable, finds its perfect correspondence in the Greek Zeus—the God who dwells alone, and from whom proceed, as subordinate emanations, all the impersonated powers of nature, planetary and astral spirits, who figure in the famus Pantheon. Apollo, Mercury, or Hermes, Bacchus, Prometheus and Esculapius, were sun-gods, mediators, saviors; Ceres, Proserpina, and Pluto played their special parts in the astral drama, but all derive their names and histories from the same source. Hindoo, Egyptians, Arabians, Parsees, Greeks and Romans, all drank at the same celestial fountain, and only varied their rites, ceremonials, names and figures to suit the ideality of the land whose age or climatic influence determined their intelligence.

The Jews, whose record of war, bloodshed, violence, laws, customs, dresses, upholstery, and cuisine the Christians hold sacred as the inspired word of God, worshiped a deity, who was only one of the Elohim or astral tutelary spirits of the Egyptians. Bel, Belus, Baal, Baalpeor, Moloch, Dagon, Jehovah, Jah, I Am, etc., etc.—these, and the names of the various other gods or tutelary deities worshiped by the various nations of Arabia and Asia Minor, including the Jews, are only so many synonyms of the one mediatorial sun-god, who, under every conceivable variety of form and title, reappears in the stupendous system of astral and solar worship, itself an external expression of the sublime and harmonious order of the universe.

India, Egypt, Arabia, the recesses of the mighty Himalayas and the giant Koh Kas, the lovely vales and smiling plains of Asia—vales blooming like glimpses of the fabled Eden—and savage wilds, deserted now, desolate and ruined—all bear witness to the unquenchable devotion of the early man to his religious belief and his worship of the mighty sun-god. In comparison with Egypt, Chaldea, Assyria and Hindustan, Judea was but a modern nation.

The nomadic tribes of the Jews had made no mark on the world's history when Egypt hoary with age, and India had recorded cycles of time, lost in the night of antiquity. The exoteric remains of solar and sex worship, together with all their signs and symbols, presented to the Jews only a dying vestige of faiths of whose resplendent maturity no historic epoch, however remote, can show an authentic record. We only know it must have been so. Maps of the heavens, and perfected charts of astral motions, involving intricate calculations which must have required thousands of years to arrive at were all handed down from prehistoric to the commencement of historic times, and that with a completeness which fully sustains the enormous claims of the Hindoos for the existence of their dynasty during cycles of time which baffle the human mind to conceive of.

How many times have the silent but most eloquent catacombs of the old earth, in the form of upturned plains, the beds of rivers, the depths of artesian wells, and the recesses of newly-discovered caverns, brought to light conclusive testimony that man lived, labored, wrought in clay, stone, pottery, and metals, tens of thousands of years ago, on the face of the earth! Philosophers and students have spent years in India, studying out that wonderful system of numerals which point to the antiquity of man, and the fact that he commenced astronomical calculations more than twenty thousand years ago.

Some of these silent voices indicate avial changes in this planet which could not have taken place in less than a hundred thousand years. And still your Bible tells you that this planet is only about six thousand years old! Others prove that the Hindoos clearly understood the precession of the equinoxes ages before the Christian era. About the commencement of that period, the colossal forms of the mystic Sphinx might have been found in long and majestic rows in the various temples of old India, and yet the mystery of the Sphinx could have been solved only by a people who had correctly understood the precession of the equinoxes. To effect a change in the position of the sun in the zodiacal path from one sign to another must occupy at least 2,140 years; and yet such changes had occurred, been fully calculated and recorded in the astronomical riddle of the Sphinx, a composite figure, designed to celebrate the sun's passage from the sign of the Virgin to that of the Lion, when the Jews were unknown as a people.

The remains of tropical plants now found amidst the awful desolation of the Arctic and Antarctic regions—the constant stream of revelation silently but surely upheaving its mystic writings from the superincumbent debris under which the earth of a million years ago lies buried—the stony voices that thunder through the colossal remains of ruined cities, and the swift but immutable footprints of the fiery squadrons whose march through the skies, the mind of man has followed up through ages of unrecorded time, all proclaim that the movements of the universe take place in spiral and ever revolving cycles.

Like the path of the sun on the Ecliptic, now ascending on the royal arch of the northern hemisphere, now descending into the southern bow, but ever moving in gyrating circles upward, typifying the march of planets, nations, ages of time and human souls, so that those who study the part may comprehend the whole—all these stupendous witnesses figure out the law by which cycles of civilization are born, grow, ascend to their culminating point of splendor, then turn the hill of time, descend lower and lower into corruption, degradation, death! And yet they rise again, and, Phoenix-like, spring from the funeral ashes of their pyre, to be reborn in nobler, higher forms of younger civilizations.

So has it been with man and his religious beliefs. Solar and sex worship, born of man's highest conceptions of the divine plan, rose into an almost perfect science, the science by which the antique man perceived the correspondence between the earth and the heavens, the creator and his creatures. This famous era of ancient civilization culminated, crossed the equinox of prophetic death, descended into the night of corruption and sensualism, and perished with the closing up of Oriental dynasties.—W. ORTHODOXY.

Its Nature Is Shown in Its Present and Past History.

To the Editor:—Here is a bit of news sent out by the Associated Press:

Odessa, Oct. 9.—President Dubrouvin, of the Union of Russian People, made a remarkable address here today. He spoke to a band of 300 armed members of the union who had carried him on their shoulders to the railroad station on his departure for Kiev, and said:

"'In the name of our beloved emperor, I bless you. The holy Russian cause is the extermination of rebels. You know who they are and where to find them. Clear the Russian soil of them. The Russian people want neither constitutions nor parliaments, but orthodoxy and autocracy. Go ahead, brothers, death to the rebels and Jews.'

"After his train had left the band of 300 rushed down the principal streets shouting, "Death to the rebels; death to the Jews."

All shops were at once closed, and the Jewish population was in a condition of panic and terror throughout the night. Measures taken by the prefect, however, prevented further disturbances."

And President Dubrouvin is an orthodox Christian, and the emperor and all the Russian plutocracy are 'Christians." Does a belief in Christianity tend to eliminate from Man gentleness, kindness, love for our fellow-man? It would seem so, for all down the ages for eighteen hundred years, nearly all the cruel, bloody monsters have been orthodox Christians. Rivers of blood have been shed by these men who have professed to be followers of Jesus Christ. Even in modern times and in the most civilized countries, the leading representatives of Christianity, stand for capital punishment, for war, for killing. The Czar of Russia, the Emperor of Germany, even our own President—all sound orthodox Christians—can be counted on that side. And is not our clergy in the main in favor of liberal blood-spilling? Is it not a fact that the more soundly orthodox a man or a church is, the more cruel and unforgiving he is? The great preachers of orthodoxy, the past century, were filled with the spirit of denunciation and cruelty. They have been the first to demand the hanging of witches, the persecution of opponents, of waging bloody wars, the dragging victims of their wrath to the dungeon or the scaffold. I believe the statement is substantially true, that, as a general thing, the greatest criminals are believers in orthodox Christianity.

Who have been during the past century, the conspicuous teachers of kindness, of love, of brotherhood? They have been the Thomas Paines, the Benjamin Franklins, the Victor Hugos, the Andrew Jackson Davises, the Swings and Thomases, and Theodore Parkers and Savages, and Bryants, and Emersons, and Ingersolls, and scores of other non-orthodox. Is it not a fact that even, to-day the Catholic and Protestant church favor capital punishment, and war, and killing, while the Spiritualists, the Quakers, the Theosophists, the Christian Scientists, the Universalists, the Unitarians and numerous other New Thought bodies, are teaching kindness, and love, and brotherhood, and arbitration? Even the Socialists, who do not profess to be a religious body, make kindness and brotherhood and arbitration, fundamental doctrines in their declaration of principles.

Did Jesus Christ teach what is now held to be orthodox Christianity? According to the New Testament he may have taught some of it, but much that now passes for Christianity he did not teach. Most of the fundamentals of orthodox Christianity came into it from Paganism. Jesus is reported by the writers of the scriptures, as saying contradictory things. Some passages in the New Testament represent him as fanatical, cruel and filled with indignation and hate. Others present him to us as mild, compassionate, forgiving and loving. It would be a great blessing to the world if the Scriptures were again revised and much of what is now in the bible, was cast out and thrown into the scrap pile.

Orthodox Christians, for nearly two thousand years, have vehemently opposed education, liberty, progress, and everything that makes for civilization. They have deluged the world with blood, and the human family has gone forward, step by step, only as the heterodox have triumphed over the orthodox. The battle for human rights and human liberty, for the abolition of capital punishment, and against religious persecution and war, has not yet been fully won, and will not be until that time when much that is now found in the bible is thrown out, or if not that, a different interpretation is put upon those writings. Those who are praying and working for the coming of an age in which slavery and ignorance, cruelty and war, will be abolished, and freedom, intelligence, kindness and love, are substituted, may not expect such a desirable condition of things will be brought about by orthodox Christians. No, no! The church must be pushed forward—forced forward—by influences outside of the church. Never a forward step has the orthodox church taken since it was paganized about the third century, and never a forward step will it take voluntarily until its pagan doctrines of an infallible bible, a changeable, wrathful God, a personal ubiquitous devil, an endless hell, the atonement through which wrong doers shall escape merited punishment through the shed blood of a god—until these false and pagan doctrines are repudiated, and in their stead is taught brotherhood, kindness, love, and "as ye sow, so shall ye reap." Orthodoxy must go, not only in Russia, but throughout the world. It is reeking with blood; it is black with the stains of cruelty, and ignorance and persecution and crime and bigotry. May every lover of his kind pray that it shall speedily vanish from the face of the earth.

SPIRITUAL EXPERIENCE.

A Lady Relates Some Interesting Occurrences in Her Life.

To the Editor:—You very kindly gave space in your good paper to my little account of the first spiritual manifestation that ever came to my knowledge, and if you consider my experiences worthy of still further expression through your columns, I would be happy to send them.

The second evidence of spirit control came to me through the mediumship of a young girl who was an inmate of my home for six months. She was a cousin, and one evening she, my brother, about 20 years of age and I had a sitting for development, not knowing at the time that she had any gift as a sensitive. After a few evenings of patient trial she was given automatic writing, and later drawing. The influence acted like the power of electric mechanism—being of a spasmodic, nervous nature. Some portraits were made upside down to the eyes of the medium, and finished by a few strokes of the pencil that would suddenly bring out the desired resemblance, when a few seconds previously the work seemed only a mass of haphazard curves and aimless lines.

She was able to give messages from souls who had passed away years before, unknown people to her, also at times gave correct report of markets in Chicago, we being in a far-away little town in Iowa at the time, and her prices of grain would be verified in the next day's papers.

One evening she drew a portrait of Beethoven that was a very true likeness as we found by comparing it with those in the musical biographies of him. She gave up her development when she married, as her husband was much opposed to our belief and said it was hurting her health.

The next message that came to me was through a dream which was given me on a Sunday night, just two days before my husband came home very ill. His death followed eighteen days after. He was a commercial traveler for several years, and was not strong in health for quite a while before. I know some who read this may remark that my knowledge of his state of health may have induced the dream to my own mind, but there was a part of it that my own mind would not have suggested, as the names of the men given me were not of friends in the least to him nor to me.

My dream was this: I thought I stood on the porch of my mother's house; in the west was a red sunset color, the clouds formed three large pictures; they took form and seeming frames of gold. In the first I saw myself with bowed head resting upon my arms on a table. In a doorway stood my eldest boy, about twelve years old.

The second showed a bier and over two bodies was drawn a white sheet. There was an adult, and a little child seeming to rest on the right arm of the older person. The third was an open grave and beside it, looking into it was myself and my two boys, the elder and the little one of five years old. Then I was told to go and awaken two men, their names given, and tell them to do the part given them the discharge of a trust placed in their hands. Both were comparative strangers to me. I was aroused to a waking state as I thought by someone standing by the bed, who said, "Do not forget this, it is a warning of coming events."

As I said before, my husband's death occurred in eighteen days after his return, and in a few months the little son followed him to spirit life, and his father's grave was opened to place the small coffin next to his own.

The two men whose names were given, were the ones appointed as trustees to settle the estate.

I believed then, and do still, that some spirit intelligence brought and impressed these pictures upon my brain.

"The Molecular Hypothesis of Nature." By Prof. Wm. M. Lockwood. Professor Lockwood is recognized as one of the ablest lecturers on the spiritual rostrum. In this little volume he presents in succinct form the substance of his lectures on the Molecular Hypothesis of Nature; and presents his views as demonstrating a scientific basis of Spiritualism. The book is commended to all who love to study and think. Price, 25 cents.

"Right Living." By Susan H. Wixon. The author shows a wise practicality in her method of teaching the principle of ethics. She illustrates her subject with many brief narratives and anecdotes, which render the book more interesting and more easily comprehended. It is especially adapted for use in Children's Lyceum. In the hands of mothers and teachers it may be made very useful. Young and old will be benefited by it. Price, $1.

OBSESSION IN A CHURCH.

Mediumship Developed in the First New Testament Church of Los Angeles.

I send clippings taken from our daily papers of recent date, showing which way the "wind is blowing."

For the last year or more, Rev. Joseph Smale, formerly a Baptist minister of this city, having drifted from his former charge, owing to his convictions, having found a new interpretation of the Scriptures, in the development of spiritual gifts (that have heretofore lain dormant) hence he gathered together a few of like mind, and established what he terms the New Testament Church. Meetings were held nightly, which partook of the holiness order, with its usual "praise the Lord," "Hallelujah," "Amen," "Washed in the blood, redemption," etc.; yet added to this was the new ministration of the spirit; that is, new to these seekers of spirit-powers. They sought earnestly the gift of tongues, regardless of St. Paul's admonition that it were better to speak five words with your understanding, so that all may hear, than one thousand and in an unknown tongue, for says he, "ye speak into the air."

However, the desired gift was forthcoming; each vied with the other, mediumshiplike, with the usual result, a division in the camp of the Lord. Dr. Henry S. Keyes, surgeon of our Emergency Hospital, his wife and daughter, a beautiful girl of 17 years, owing to her being controlled by the Lord, or God himself, and seeing fit to tell Pastor Smale in a message purporting to come direct from God, which she and her father carried to the pastor in his home, at eleven o'clock at night, informing him he was falling short of the honor and glory of God, inasmuch as he had sinned against the Holy Ghost. This message savored too much of what the pastor termed the devil, who, he says, is a twin brother to Spiritualism, so he openely denounced the young message bearer, and refused to permit her God to manifest through her in "meetin'." The result was a division, the doctor and his sympathizers taking refuge in another hall where the writer attended their first meeting.

The leader opened the service by reading scriptural proof of the gifts of the spirit, when suddenly his countenance changed, and lo! an unknown "gibberish," which lasted a few minutes, and which required a few seconds for a colored man to interpret. The pianist, an intelligent, refined-appearing woman, gave way suddenly to an unknown control as well as tongue, which likewise meant that the Lord was with her, as interpreted by the negro. Miss Keyes was next in turn; also in the unknown tongue, shuddering and passing through the same nervous conditions taken on by many of our mediums (my wonder was, why the Lord did not speak plain English): It again required the negro to give us the Lord's message, at which all smiled, and "amens" were profuse.

Feeling as a medium my time for ministration of the spirit had come, I asked permission to speak, which was granted. I said I rejoiced to see that the gifts of the spirits are being developed in our churches, but warned them of their receptivity, as even the elect could be deceived by the many assuming spirits surrounding us, and that it behooves us at all times to try the spirit, to see if it is of God, or truth, etc. While my own experience in these gifts of the spirit brings me into the spirit of one-ness with you, yet you are yet lacking the one and most beautiful of these, the discerning of spirits.

No "amens" greeted me, only the earnestness of their faces assured me they were thinking.

An elderly gentleman arose and said, "The first thing we know this will be Spiritualism. We don't want that; it's of the devil."

"So they said of Christ," I replied.

After all, my ammunition was not lost, as several have phoned me, desirous of an interview on the subject of spiritual gifts.

The power of truth works in various ways. My mission and desire are to not minister to those who need no physician, but to those who are in spiritual darkness in reference to death and the hereafter.

May the spirit of charity and patience be with us ever, and may our light of spiritual knowledge be ever bright, to illumine not only our own pathway, but the pathway of all others who likewise are journeying towards that goal of immortal existence.

The Progressive Thinker.

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 35 CHICAGO, ILL., NOVEMBER 17 NO. 886

DUTY OF SELF-FORGETFULNESS.

Death Does Not Kill a Mother's Love.

"I do not my own will but the will of Him that sent me."—Jesus.

"I never pray for myself, for the Gods know what is good for me better than I do."—Socrates.

I hope the thoughtful editor of The Progressive Thinker will bear patiently with me if I invite his attention to the general style and character of Spiritualistic journals.

I think it will be admitted that the female readers of such publications are far more numerous than the male readers and that although women are often scientific and philosophical yet their leading characteristics are love, gratitude, sympathy and tenderness in general, yet rather strange to say nearly all Spiritualistic periodicals deal almost exclusively in philosophical and scientific argumentation, which can have no or scarcely any interest for the majority of their lady readers.

Men of course possess tenderness of heart as a rule, but that tenderness is not as near to the surface in the male as it is in the female character. Their hard, practical business affairs draw off their attention from the more esthetic and sentimental, while the female life spent almost entirely with her children and home tends to increase her gentleness and love. She reaches out after sympathy, she loves to read of all which appeals to her tenderness but alas, although in the majority she seldom meets with in Spiritualistic journals.

It is the attractive gentleness of the Christian orthodox religion which gives it all its strength and tenacity. It is not its reasoning, its finely pointen pentences, its science or its philosophy which give the qualities of intensity and long endurance. Oh, no! it is its appeal to the gratitude, the love and its adaptation to the feminine idea. It suggests to the man or to the woman that there is affection in the human heart as well as philosophic thought in the human head.

All the successful organizations of the world are based upon sentiment. The most penetrating and scholarly reasoning cannot fill the place of affection or render permanent the unity of society, and without these there is immediate danger of weakness and death.

Why appeal always to the head and almost never to the heart? Noble publications have been issued in the name of Spiritualism, but they have gone down, societies have been inaugurated, but they have perished. Why? Simply because they were managed by "smart men" who could argue and debate and "use up" those who held different opinions from themselves. Oh, yes, they were all very "smart" but they lacked the one thing needful, "the power to appeal successfully to the female heart.

Every good man has, at least, a little of the female element in his composition, why not appeal to it as well as to "hard fact." Not to the laws underlying spirit return to a cold benighted earth, but to the undying love which prompted to its accomplishment.

Ah, Spiritualistic newspapers, editors and contributors, cease to fill whole pages with hard fact, wrangling and disputation, but if you possess the pure gold of affection in your hearts, show to the world that you do possess it and can control your tendency to self-laudation and egotism—for you will never win over the world until you do.

The love of money, of notoriety, or flattery ought not to induce men of mature age to yield up their better aspirations, and embrace self-love and self-laudation. It is true there seems to be a law in nature which urges young men and women who possess intelligence to make a display, but maturity overrules this weakness, or at least it ought to do so.

A sincere old priest who belonged to some eastern body of religionists, was a conspicuous object in the car one day, dressed as he was in the peculiar garb of his Hindoo or Buddhistic society. A flippant young man approached him and said in a tone of self-sufficiency:

"Well, father, if it should so happen that there is no future existence, what a fool you are making of yourself."

"Very true, my son," said the old priest, "but if it should so happen that there is a future existence, what a fool you are making of yourself."

It takes a whole lifetime to cure some of us of our self-esteem (myself amongst the number perhaps) and some who have not learned their lessons in this great school house of this world, will have to try again in another and perhaps a more severe incarnation.

It is his constituency and not the editor, however, who needs to be reasoned with. The editor must please his readers and if they demand sensational matter and take pleasure in antagonisms he as a caterer to the public appetite has got to comply.

The spirit of unity and love is what Spiritualists need, they should try to win over rather than to conquer. They need to spread the cement of universal love, not of individual assertion. Those who differ from us are as precious in the sight of the Infinite as we are, then why not love them as He does. The male element of Wisdom is not all in this world, there is also the female element of tenderness. And it is the latter which attracts and holds. When contributors bear this in mind, it is more than probable that editors will win fame and their papers will be more acceptable to the world at large.

This line of thought calls to my mind a circumstance which occurred several months before I ever heard or read the word Spiritualist. It speaks to me of a departed mother's love and of my own foolish self-sufficiency, of abiding love and evanescent egotism.

I was stopping at a farm house. I saw the farmer hitch up his team and I followed him to the field; he was about to harrow it, when I said, "I have been used to city life but I think I can harrow this field as well as you."

"Very well, go ahead; I'll go back and do something else."

I was full of health and had a good opinion of myself. I kept the horses almost on a trot. Finding myself on the wrong side, I ought to have passed around behind the harrow, but I thought I was "smart" and attempted to step across by placing my foot on one of the bars, but the young and powerful team were moving swiftly and my foot went down between the bars. Instantly I gave myself up as lost.

"Oh, heavens!" I cried; "I am ruined; my limb will be torn from my body. My foot was driven deep into the earth—one instant longer and I should have been a mangled body. But on the instant the horses came to a dead stand and I was saved.

I had great difficulty in getting my foot out of the heap of earth in which it was buried, but when I was free again, oh, how thankful I was, for I felt the presence of my mother as palpably as I had ever known it even when she used to press me in her arms as her only son. I was so overpowered by my sense of gratitude that I sat down on the drag and there, in that great field and all alone I covered my face in both hands and wept like a child.

My mother's love was trying to cure my over-weening self-esteem, and show me that others possessed reason and common sense as well as I. Truly "mother love" is like the love of the Infinite, it is eternal, death cannot kill it. Though all the vicissitudes of our lives, that love is ever present to protect and bless. It is the highest manifestation of the immeasurable care and affection of the Great Spirit.

At that moment how appropriate seemed to me that simple verse of Whittier:

"Yet in the maddening maze of things
And tossed by storm and flood
To one fixed stake my spirit clings
I know that God is good."

Yes, let the magnetism of unselfish love win men and women to the cause of the angels; let us appeal to the reason of our fellow-men in a spirit of kindness, and let gentleness take the place of confident assertion. Then shall the goodness of God and his agents, and the nearness of our angelic homes be apparent. The tears of bereavement dried, and all hearts beat in unison.

MORE LIGHT ON REINCARNATION.

In Reply to L. P. Wheelock, in No 881 of The Progressive Thinker.

Time! Who can measure eternity? Shall we strive to compress all within one cycle of experience? Whether we will, or no, eternity is not limited by time. Time is not measured by life, but by the matter which life uses. Now by matter, I mean all matter—both spirit and physical—all is one. The same law of change governs both.

We might as reasonably deny the possibility of the maple to bring forth its leaves when it fails to do so in the month of December, as to deny re-embodiment because our "Mother" is still in "spirit life."

There are people who believe that the day will come when we will have physical immortality. Recently we were questioned upon that point. Our reply was, —no. And why not? Because, that which has a beginning has an end, and we give the same reason against the acceptance of any theory, of philosophy, that teaches the immortality of any life expression. We know that the spirit body of a child has a beginning just as much as the physical body. We know also, that if the spirit body of that child is withdrawn, the physical body enters dissolution—while the spirit form grows to maturity. Absolute proof that the law of change governs both spirit and physical matter alike, for growth is change.

Is it not as inconsistent for man to claim immortality for spirit form as to claim it for physical form, when law of change governs both? And we must also remember that a demonstration of continuity of existence does not prove immortality. These forms that we see are but the shifting, changing dresses, or expressions, of immortal life.

It may take centuries, who knows, before the garments of "mother" and "the family" will have become worn out, but, as growth and decay are a part of nature when we deal with matter, we reason that the time must come when those garments, or bodies, must be put aside. Now what will life do? It is a law of being that life expresses. Where find expression, and now, without the use of matter? Why did we take these present earth forms? Nature's law. Life does not trouble much about experience, its law demands expression, and it is our expression, or personality, that frets at experience. Now if "There is no evidence anywhere over, above, or underneath the earth, to prove reincarnation," (of course we could not get much satisfaction in looking "over, above, or underneath) suppose our friend looks directly at the earth and strives to penetrate the folds of matter to Causation.

If we recognize the law of change in matter, where will be be able to find stability, except in life, and thus, step by step, come into attunement with the Infinite Power that rules the universe. Then we realize immortality of life, and become consolous that the garment of matter is but the dream of a day, or in other words, that re-embodiment is a divine necessity under natural law.

BLACKBOAD SKETCHES.

A Paper Read by Mrs. Elizabeth Schauss, of Toledo, Ohio, Before the Fourteenth Annual Convention of the N. S. A.

Andrew Jackson Davis tells us that children should be educated one hundred years before they are born. For this work blackboards would possibly not be of use, but since this has not been really possible we must do the best we can to educate our children, with the means at our command. There are various ways in which lessons may be conveyed to the minds of children, as for instance by reading to them and explaining ethical problems. Then, too, by holding before their minds' eye the example of the lives of useful men and women. But there is another way still and that is by the blackboard sketches. Children love to hear stories and they love to look at pictures; and usually show marked interest in knowing what the pictures represent. Therefore blackboard sketches are a great help in conveying objectively the lesson we wish to teach. For instance, draw the outlines of a hand on the board, place the word WATCH above it, one letter to each finger. You will find that each letter again stands for an important word. W for words, A for actions, T for thoughts, C for character, H for habits. To watch all these attributes will round out the life of any person into a beautiful example.

Remember always that THOUGHT IS THE CENTRAL FINGER AROUND WHICH ALL OTHER ATTRIBUTES REVOLVE. There are many words that can be used in a like manner.

There is another manner in which to teach lessons. Select the lessons, read the story and ask the pupils to draw sketches according to their own idea, illustrating some one point contained in the lesson. Thus a triple purpose is accomplished; first the development of the individual power of thought, second the training of the hand in producing art, and third a manifest interest in the lyceum work in general. My friends, let me tell you that while all of the various ways of teaching that have been and will yet be mentioned, the most effective lesson that can be taught to a child or any other individual is the LESSON CONTAINED IN THE EXAMPLE OF YOUR OWN LIFE.

DEAD FRIEND AT THE HOME OF MRS. WINN.

Mrs. Sarah Winn of South West Street, Says the Late Mr. C. C. Burroughs Appeared Before Her While She Was Sewing Wednesday Evening—He Said: "I Will Soon See Your Mother and Father."

Unusually strange and mystifying is the story told by Mrs. Sarah Winn of 208 South West street, who was a close friend of the late C. C. Burroughs, who died Wednesday evening at 9 o'clock.

Mrs. Winn says the deceased appeared plainly before her, even as plain as though in real life, and he said: "Mrs. Winn, I will soon see your father and mother." Mrs. Winn cannot account for the phenomenon. The peculiar incident happened about the time of Mr. Burroughs' death. Mrs. Winn was sitting before the sewing machine at her home and was doing a little needle work. Suddenly she was startled by the unaccountable appearance before her of Mr. Burroughs who was an intimate friend. He appeared like life and this was a great shock to her. Mrs. Winn says that it seems as though she were in a trance. Mr. Burroughs said in solemn and mysterious tones: "Mrs. Winn I will soon see your mother and father." The voice was solemn yet was mingled with joy and seemed sweet. The vision vanished suddenly and Mrs. Winn was left in a bewildered state of mind. —Rockford Daily Register.

Theosophy and Mediumship

Thoughtful Vibrations From the California Philosopher.

Phenomena have always been the strength and the weakness of Modern Spiritualism. Phenomena and mediumship have seemed inseparable to the Spiritualist. Mediumship means the use of a mortal organism by a spirit, and is, of course, the very essence of Modern Spiritualism and spirit return.

So much would seem to be without dispute were it not that the Theosophical Society proclaims and teaches that mediumship is a deadly foe of mortal man. That society also asserts that its members have all the advantages of spirit return without the risks and dangers of mediumship. The present writer has never seen that Theosophical claim discussed and refuted by the seers and prophets of Modern Spiritualism, so he will venture, as a humble lay brother among believers in spirit return, to examine the Theosophical claim and ascertain its truthful value.

I commence by asserting that Theosophy was founded, and to-day rests upon mediumship. Since Madam Blavatsky and Colonel Henry S. Olcott were the most important factors of the society,—at least on its mortal side—we are at the fountain head when we turn to the deeply interesting "Old Diary Leaves," published by the Colonel, and which constitute a biography of the movement, at least in its earlier stages.

We notice that it was the phenomena through H. P. B. which attracted and convinced the worthy Colonel, and thrilled the friends who gathered round her. Her philosophical teachings we will examine and discuss presently.

The Colonel's readers will all be impressed with his truthfulness and sincerity, and can hardly help realizing that H. P. B. was a wonderful psychic. I say "psychic" because the Colonel is specially anxious that we shall not count her as a medium. He claims that her phenomena were evolved by her own will power, whereas the poor medium is an instrument merely played upon by a stronger will than his own.

It so happens, as the Colonel tells us, that the phenomena produced through the celebrated English medium, Rev. Stainton Moses, known as M. A. Oxon, was, in many respects, almost identical with that of H. P. B. It had, we are told, "a curious resemblance." Here are some of the mutual phases. Each produced perfume, "either in liquid form, or as scent-laden breeze." To each alike fell small showers of gems, etc., "apports" as they are now called. Also each were accompanied by the now well-known "fairy bells" heard repeatedly in the open air as well as in the seance room. Both gave to the world the teachings of their unseen inspirers, and both alike were unselfishly devoted to their unseen friends, though H. P. B. called her "adepts", which included some still in earth life, while Mr. Moses believed his invisible inspirers all to be the spirits of once mortal men. But our worthy Colonel is ever ready to emphasize the vast difference, since, he declares, H. P. B. produced her phenomena at her own sweet will, while M. A. Oxon was a mere instrument played upon by stronger wills than his own. This is a distinction of such radical importance that it demands most careful analysis, since therein is asserted the great superiority of Theosophy over Spiritualism.

Accepting the "Diary Leaves" as strictly veridical, the phenomena through H. P. B. were, at times, astounding. She could, apparently will into existence anything from tobacco to diamonds; lengthen hair; precipitate letters and pictures, suddenly create grapes, restore an ink-spoiled dress, and even compel a downpour of rain to leave her untouched. These, and a myriad other exhibitions of such powers are recorded in the Gospel of Theosophy called "Old Diary Leaves." And if she did not actually do it she could make you believe she did.

Both Stainton Moses and H. P. B. were inspired writers, but I fail to find the one more individual than the other. M. A. Oxon had various invisibles writing automatically through his hand whole volumes of spirit teachings. He gave those he recognized certain names such as Imperator, Mentor, Magus, etc., and necessarily they are held responsible for what was written.

It was precisely the same with H. P. B., whose invisible writers had each his own name, his own style, his own handwriting, and, apparently, his own special knowledge of the subject. Yet, for some reason, those writers are not held responsible by the Colonel. Some he says are still in the body, but he calls them all "adepts" and claims they are therefore superior to the mere spirit controls of Stainton Moses. It seems to the writer a distinction without a difference.

The Colonel, when present could always tell which of these mentalities was then in control of H. P. B. And here I must make a strong inference founded on scientific facts. The Colonel says or insinuates that the controls of mediums when not the subconscious self, are "elementaries," and therefore inferior to the "Adepts" working through Madam Blavatsky. It is an acknowledged fact that all communication between intelligences must be by "vibrations," and for the time being the receiver and the transmitter must be on the same level. Now can we as sane investigators imagine the tobacco-soaked organisms of H. P. B., and the Colonel as used by a higher class of intelligences than those using the organism of the refined and gentlemanly M. A. Oxon? And if either be claimed as elementaries, which is more likely to attract the lower class of intelligences? Most certainly the Colonel is himself answering the question when he repeatedly tells us of the gross abuse of friends, the foul language and the untruthfulness of Madame Blavatsky. On some occasions, the Colonel tells us, (p. 188) "she would shout there were no Mahatmas, no psychical powers, and she had deceived us from first to last." Again we ask, which was likely to be the elementary at that time—the Adept shouting through H. P. B., or the wise, dignified and truthful Imperator talking and writing through Stainton Moses?

The Spiritualist attributes such material phenomena as that of the Madam to "earth-bound" spirits. But in any case why should the one be called the work of "elementaries" and the other the wondrous power of an Adept?

Of course the learned Colonel will tell us that Madam B. was subject to influences that were not Adepts, but if so, he faces the same problem as the Spiritualist when his medium, long proved genuine, is caught in carefully prepared fraud. Controls, both of Madam B. and spiritual mediums seem to resemble these of the little girl who "when she was good, was very, very good; and when she was bad she was horrid."

So with all due deference to the Colonel, and full acknowledgment of the remarkable psychical powers of Madam Blavatsky, we cannot discern the difference which makes him belittle Andrew Jackson Davis as "clairvoyantly drunk," and place the mediumship of the noble Stainton Moses or Hudson Tuttle, and a myriad others of our self-sacrificing workers, on a lower level than that of the mixed influences which dominated the Madam.

The present writer is far too much in sympathy with most of the philosophical teachings of theosophy to offer any criticism, further than to point out that so far as theosophy is a religion it, like every other religion, has been subject to a law of growth which seems to compel a commingling of flesh and spirit. The Mahatma guides when starting their religion in New York and dictating "Isis Unveiled" were ignorant of the doctrine of "Reincarnation." They did not discover it till the "founders" had reached India where it had been the essence of religious belief back to the very remote past. But all the same, if they have now given the world something better than the previous inspiration I congratulate them with my whole heart.

I make no complaint of the alleged "plagiarism" in Isis Unveiled, which I can understand in the light of a personal experience. On one occasion I saw clairvoyantly a printed page, which I read with deep interest. To my great dissatisfaction I have never been able to recall a single expression or idea. In the light of present teachings I believe my other self has it in celestial safe deposit and is retaining the key for future use. Now suppose in this, or some other article, I write that page down under inspiration from that sub or supraliminal self, am I guilty of plagiarism? I trow not. The fact might be proved, but but I should plead "not guilty" and cheerfully stand trial before a jury of first class controls, whether Mahatmas, or Archangels. So I don't ask where Madam got her raw material, or manufactured thought, but I do as, "IS IT TRUE?" And I carry the same question forward to her teaching of "reincarnation."

Personally I would believe "reincarnation" a natural truth—a law of nature—if I could, (though I don't like it) for it does attack and solve various problems of palpable divine or natural injustice (or non-justice) in our present life. But I cannot, in my present state of mental weakness, accept mesmeric healings by the Colonel, or the undoubted appearance of "apports" through the Madam, as logical proof of "reincarnation."

The believer will say what of the Mahatmas and their teachings? I can only reply, "I have talked, more or less, for 30 years with spirits whose teachings have sometimes been sublime, and then, as with Madam B., at other times have savored of the unclean. My highest class of visitors have never taught, but positively denied, reincarnation. Perhaps if I went to India it might appear in a burst of hypnotic glory. But there seems a chance, according to Colonel Olcott, that elementaries may be taking a hand in the game of control over there, and playing a winning card, whether "reincarnation" be attacked or defended. And most certainly, without their aid there will be no "apports"—no candy, grapes or tobacco to tickle the "mortal appetite."

When I look back through the recorded history of India, with its very foundation resting upon "reincarnation" I see its effect upon manhood, and I confess I shudder. I see a man—and millions of such men—a kind husband, an affectionate father, and a successful man of business, suddenly forsaking every responsibility to wife, family and country, and deliberately crawling into a hole to think for the rest of his miserable life. And all this is because he believes in "reincarnation," and is devoting himself to getting ready for his next visit to earth.

With belief in "reincarnation" comes its twin sister Karma, and to some of us even less fascinating. If it be that the misery, the sorrow, the suffering everywhere around us the effect of bad habits and conduct in previous lives, why should we work night and day to help the needy to a higher level? Every charitable act may help our own "Karma" but how is it to help the sufferer we aid? So the Hindu in his hole and his dirt, sacrifices everything and every responsibility in life for his own "Karma" sake. He will let his family and his country go on living in their present hell of debased manhood because he believes such is the "Karma" demanded as a consequence of their past lives, although every detail of that life is absolutely forgotten.

I make no comparison between one religion and another. I have no idea the Colonel is trying to build up a philosophy without soap in it. On the contrary, his devotion to his Mahatma belief as inculcating "universal brotherhood" wins my warm admiration. But the occult side to his philosophy which is to be taught only to a favored class of his followers, is a very different affair. If its result is to manufacture and hide cups and saucers, duplicate rings and mirrors, change names on handkerchiefs, and precipitate letters, it looks to me like "elementary" mediumship, which must wait for another Madam Blavatsky to outshine other low class mediums in that line. But if such phenomena is to be merely used as an aid to Hindu belief and astonishment, like the miracles of old, we will not criticise it unless when it loudly proclaims its superiority to the mediumship of a Stainton Moses, an Andrew Jackson Davis, a Hudson Tuttle and their equally noble juniors whose lives have adorned Modern Spiritualism.

TIME AND MATTER FOR LYCEUM LESSONS.

A Paper by Mrs. Emma Rood Tuttle, Read Before the Fourteenth Annual Convention of the N. S. A.

In response to John W. Ring's—National Superintendent of Lyceum Work—kind invitation, I submit my ideas on the topic suggested.

The entire session is intended to be a series of educational lessons, in various directions, all converging to the production of a well balanced human individuality.

The object of the Lyceum is to develop the best types of men and women; not to produce Spiritualists merely who will be bigoted supporters of their own ism and society only. The Church Sunday-schools are simply feeders for the various isms to which they are auxiliary.

The Progressive Lyceum starts on a broader basis and aims higher than the success of societies merely. It attempts to develop the young into persons who will be capable to take up any good work which will advance the progress of the world. It aims to graduate its pupils in love, will and wisdom. To make them fraternal, strong and intelligent. To make them competent leaders but not unreasoning followers.

A satisfactory lyceum session cannot be held in less time than an hour and a half or two hours, as it is necessary to engage the interested attention and intellectual work of both adults and children. The school is equally beneficial to both.

Societies will grow much more vigorously and be more permanent if the lyceum takes the place of one of the usual Sunday lectures. This gives time for complete work, affords all a chance to take part and although it may not be as financially profitable to the lecturers, it is much more conducive to intellectual growth and independent thought. That is the original lyceum plan, and if carried out it is the grandest part of society work.

This sublime plan was presented to mortals by the great Andrew Jackson Davis. It possesses the wonderful possibilities of cultivating at the roots and producing the blossoms of advanced spirit personalities. Rooted on earth it blossoms in heaven. This should be kept ever in the minds of leaders and pupils.

Long ago, when Dr. Davis was a young man, and the lyceum plan had not yet been given to us, he gave the basis on which it is formed in three propositions, which I give below. They are from the "Present Age and Inner Life," page 268:

First—Nature is designed to develop the body.

Second—The body is designed to develop the mind.

Third—Each mind is designed to develop enough different in structure from every other to establish the individuality and eternal duration.

In these propositions we have the untitemized curriculum of the Progressive Lyceum. Can any school be greater in scope? Is any system more worthy the attention of educators who desire to benefit the young and carry their work into the future? Do not dwarf it. Give it place, time and work. The lessons should bear on its purpose as clearly stated in the first Golden Chain Recitation in the Lyceum Guide:

What is the Lyceum?

The school of liberal and harmonious education.

What is its object?

The unfoldment of all faculties in their due order and degree.

How is this attained?

By first removing all obstacles to self development and then providing the expanding intelligence with the fitting food, which it can assimilate according to its needs.

What are the two great divisions of this study?

The physical and the mental nature.

How does it accomplish physical education?

By a series of calisthenics arranged so as to exercise every portion of the body.

In what way is mental advancement obtained?

By such instruction as calls forth the reasoning powers of the pupils through judicious information and careful discussion.

How are the artistic sensibilities appealed to?

By the badges, standards and banners with graceful marching and exercises.

Of what use are the recitations and responses?

They embody, in poetry and prose, choice expressions of great minds,—the truths thus impressed upon the memory awakening the understandings and gladdening the heart.

What is the chief principle of our system?

Harmony.

What is its particular manifestation?

Music and singing in which our unity of feeling and purpose is at once symbolized and expressed.

What is the invariable accompaniment of all our exercises?

Pleasure. That which is right is always delightful to the healthy spirit.

Which office is the most important?

That of the Leaders, since upon them devolves the responsibility of directing and encouraging the young whose plastic minds are susceptible to every breath of influence.

Recall the duties of the children.

Punctuality, order, attention, diligence and earnestness, subordination and obedience, kindness and self-restraint.

What distinguishes the lyceum method from other modes of tuition?

Its recognition of the intellectual rights, freedom and conditions of the young; its comprehensiveness, variety and tolerance; the scope it gives to individuality and its perfect accordance with the laws of Nature.

What is its most characteristic quality?

That it teaches a Religion of Reason, a creed without dogmas in a ritual whose only laws are Beauty and Truth and whose sole end is Goodness.

What is its glorious aim?

The spiritual, moral and intellectual elevation of its members and through them of the world at large.

Let us remember this and each recognizing the lofty standard of our commonwealth fulfill his and her part in faithful devotion. So shall we come to realize its superb ideal.

EMMA ROOD TUTTLE.

HE WANTS A FRATERNAL ORDER.

This Expresses the Full Intention of the Order.

We have been talking on the subject of Fraternal Organization for the past two years, and supposed we had made our proposition so simple that there could be no mistaking our meaning. We will not discuss the matter with those who misunderstand us, either wilfully or otherwise, but will try to make another statement that will be clear to all, and will state briefly some of the reasons why such an organization is needed.

It cannot be denied that it is impossible to get any large number of professing Spiritualists to unite and agree on any one thing, EITHER PHENOMENA, PHILOSOPHY OR RELIGION as understood; why not try and unite on fraternal lines? We do not receive the recognition of the communities in which we live, or of the courts, (where the fact of a person being a Spiritualist is usually considered proof of insanity) that we might receive if we were organized on a more stable foundation.

As societies are at present conducted, members are not required to make any statement as to their belief, nor to subscribe to any; pay your dollar, and take your receipt; that's all. We know of one society that boasts of its hundreds of members, that does not require even a membership fee. Any one who will sign the roll is a member as long as they live; no fees, no dues, nothing to remind them that they have joined any society.

In reply to Brother Tuttle's criticisms on gate-keepers, grips, etc., we would say that we have never at any time mentioned having a secret order or lodge. Our call was for the best we could gather from all orders, not the funny part, but that portion that shall cause persons to feel that they have obligated themselves to live up to their highest capabilities; this to be followed by charges or short lectures on the phenomena, philosophy and religion, as a matter of instruction, not as an obligation. Surely we all need to be instructed along these lines, to learn all it is possible of the philosophy, of the nature of the phenomena, if it is true, and what lesson is to be learned from it, and what portion of it is best suited for public use.

Our idea of a fraternal charge is one that shall include loyalty, friendship, fidelity, truth, justice, charity and all kindred virtues, and that members should pledge themselves to carry out the objects of the society to the best of their ability, using a form something like the following:

"I promise that I will to the best of my ability, aid the officers and members of this society in spreading the true principles of Spiritualism; that I will not knowingly, by word or act, injure any member of this organization; that I will aid and assist any member as far as I can without injury to myself or family, and that I will promptly warn any member of any threatening danger that may come to my knowledge; that I will not knowingly assist in, or be a party to, any fraudulent phenomena, on or off the platform, and should I know of any person practicing fraud or dishonest methods, or in any way deceiving those who are seeking a knowledge of spiritual truths, I will report the same to the officers of the society, that proper steps may be taken to bring them to justice."

This form of initiation could be adopted by any society in the world without conflicting with anything already in existence. The initiation service could take place in public, if desired, that all might learn what Spiritualism stands for. Sunday services could be held as at present, and regular employment given our speakers, a condition, we are sorry to say, that does not exist under the present order.

What we want is suggestions on the above as called for in a previous article. We want a charge that will be a credit to our cause and one that will not be lightly taken.

A system of transfer or withdrawal cards would cause members to keep in good standing with their society that they might receive an honorable discharge or transfer.

We hope this will make it clear that we are not planning a secret society or order, that the intention is to build a foundation that all societies may unite on, to the end that strong local societies will make strong state associations and strong state associations will make a strong National.

TO-DAY.

Only from day to day
The life of a wise man runs;
What matter if seasons far away
Have glooms or have double suns?

To climb the unreal path
We lose the roading here,
We swim the rivers of wrath
And tunnel the hills of fear.

Our feet on the river's brink,
Our eyes on the clouds afar,
We fear the things we think
Instead of the things that are.

Like a tide our work should rise,
Each later wave the best;
To-morrow forever dies,
To-day is the special test.

Like a sawyer's work is life,
The present makes the flaw,
And the only field for strife
Is the inch before the saw.

—Exchange.

A SMILE'S MORE DEAR.

Sorrow not for the day of dark,
Haunting the cold, dead past,
And ne'er a sigh for the graves that lie
In the gloom of life's desert vast.
Wreath them in roses sweet, if you will,
Garland them rev'rently o'er;
But weep not there, for the ways are fair,
And sweet are the dreams beforel

Naught may come of a vain regret,
Battles lost are lost;
Better to gird for the storm unmet,
One of a dauntless host!
Oh, breathe a prayer for a sin or a care,
But waft it up with a song—
For a smile's more dear than the bitterest tear
That falls where the red thorns throng!

SPIRITUAL PHENOMENA.

They Cannot Be Bartered for Money.

To the Editor:—A gentleman in the good old state of Illinois recently wrote me as follows: "I am, and have been for two years, deeply interested in Spiritual phenomena, but so far I am not convinced that after death we still live. We read about materialized spirits—I want to say that I will give any one twenty-five dollars who will cause any of my departed friends to appear to me and convince me that there is life for all beyond the grave."

I wrote him in reply: "Spiritual phenomena cannot be bartered for money; in my experience they are always spontaneous, and if they do not come, money cannot make them appear. No one, medium or otherwise, can compel your friends to appear to you, or to come—they must come of their own volition."

What the effect of the above statement will be, I cannot now say, but I am certain that we have ofttimes come in contact with persons who are just in the same position as my correspondent. I know that some may rise up in wrath against the man who wants to get a phenomenon for "twenty-five dollars," but before that wrath rises I would like to ask who is to blame for the widespread opinion that it only requires a certain amount of money to make possible the appearance of the dear departed?

While I stand firmly to the conviction that my reply is based upon scientific law, and is therefore absolutely correct, I realize that there has been fault with the Spiritualists at large—and perhaps with the organizations in general. We have not firmly enough presented to the public the impression that there is no financial basis for spiritual phenomena; that it requires more than the exchange of dollars to make possible the intercommunion of souls—incarnate and excarnate, and that the thing requisite to the best spiritual phenomena was individual spiritual development or exaltation.

With all due respect to the phenomenal aspect of Spiritualism, I feel as never before the need of a more thorough elucidation of the laws governing the production of such phenomena. I apprehend the greater growth of the spiritual movement will come only when every home is a laboratory of spiritual forces, and when every one who stands upon the platform labors more to convince by logic, ethics and reason, and less by abuse of contrary systems of religious thought. It is all right to point out the errors in the other systems, but let us first see to it that there are none in our own—then it's time to give attention to the other fellow.

I have no word of condemnation for the gentleman who is my correspondent; everything with which he has come in contact has, undoubtedly given him the impression that spiritual phenomena have a monetary value, etc.; that individuals can guarantee to give him the phenomenon he desires. Be that as it may, I think it is time we should awaken to the broader aspect of this movement, and begin to apply first principles.

When I see individuals who are reeking with tobacco, and whisky—as well as other drugs and narcotics—and hear them say, with the utmost sang froid, that "the use of these things has no effect whatever upon the phenomena—in fact (said one medium to me) "I always have tobacco in my mouth when I go into a seance," I am not surprised that the public has a wrong concept of Spiritualism, and that people are in the position of my correspondent.

The writer hereof does not claim "sainthip," nor does he even pose as a "good" man, but he does feel that it is time Spiritualists above all people should begin to demonstrate the knowledge they boast of having. I have met cultured Swedenborgians who had a higher concept of spiritual phenomena than many of the Spiritualists met in years of itinerant work—and settled work, too. Now, why is this so?

I know that some will rise up with the old-time "the laborer is worthy of his hire" argument, but that is threadbare; nor is it enough to lay all of these undesirable conditions upon "evil" spirits. I don't blame evil spirits (excarnate) half as much as I do liquid spirits (in man). What we want is something practical, scientific, and that can be applied in every day life. The Spiritualist should be a master of the laws of individual being, he should know more of himself than does the average person; he should be of use to the community in which he lives—in short of use to man.

We cannot be any of this as long as we sit by and see the conditions under which so many spiritual (?) phenomena are presented to the public, without a protest that Spiritualism does not endorse such methods of procedure.

I am reminded of a question asked me by an intelligent gentleman of this state, recently. It was: "What is the use of these phenomena, granting that they are true?" The gentleman had attended a gathering in which were incidents that repelled him. I do not wonder he asked, "What's the use?" I, too, have been in gatherings where the principal entertainment consisted of ribald jokes, moss-grown with age, and a few movements of objects. And I asked: "What's the use?"

But, Spiritualists, these things are not Spiritualism—if I thought they were, I would blot out the memory of Spiritualism from my mind forever. It is the sacred communion hours that I have had in my own home, where messages of love were wafted from dear ones gone; where instruction that would make us stronger was given, and where the spiritual essence of truth pervaded the very atmosphere, and where in all of twelve years' experience there has never been uttered one single falsehood from the other side; it has been truth, and only truth. These things count with all of us.

Let us go back to first principles, and abolish that system which has given rise to the flagrant abuses under which we have been tortured so long. Let us impress upon every one that to understand the spiritual philosophy—and live it—is to bring about the spiritual exaltation which will enable each one to receive from the "arisen ones" that which makes it possible for them to say: "I know there is no death; that my loved ones still live."

WHAT IS RELIGION?

The Opinion of a Man Who Has No Use for It.

Call religion by the name it has been know by since the history of religion began. If you work a problem in mathematics, you don't go into an argument as to what mathematics means; you don't reason whether two and two make four, five, or six. You don't give an opinion whether the character that represents two would not just as well represent three, and might probably be equivalent to the same quantity. If you did you would be excused from the class. Likewise, a man who thinks that Spiritualism might be equivalent to religion, does not know anything about either of them.

Religion is the synonym of faith, fear and ignorance, and its product is slavery, both mentally and physically to all who accept it. The first fabled priest in the same Garden of Eden commanded Adam that he should not eat of the fruit of the tree of knowledge that he might know good from evil, and then damned him for eating and becoming wise. Such is religion from that day to this. Fear God and keep his commandments has been the standing order on the religious bulletin board as far back as there has been any board. As a result we have ignorance, misfortune and despotism.

Spiritualism is the study of mentalism, the science of the mind. The characters we use in the multiplication table are tabulated mentalism, characters to represent quantities in thought. by this process we measure the height of mountains and map the heavens, and harness electricity as a beast of burden. And all to adorn and beautify and build a civilization that does progress toward and in time will approximate to man's highest ideals of happiness.

Religion is the black mantle of ignorance and despotism that relentless priestcraft in collusion with tyrants have ever woven around that element of immortality in man, reason, mentalism, to smother it and retard its growth and activity, that they might hold man to their service, their mental and physical slaves. Religion has baptized the earth with blood and sown it with the ashes of its unfortunate victims. Its sad votaries, in their selfish greed for wealth and power have cut off the heads and burned the bodies of the world's best and bravest men. They have burned the libraries of this world's ancient civilization, supposing thereby to better promote their hellish creeds of ignorance, superstition, bigotry and despotism, but that germ of immortality in man, mind, mentalism, reason, has fought its way through the bloody cordon that priestcraft and despotism supposed they had drawn around humanity to hold the masses in slavery, and to-day we have no headsman's axe, no martyr's fire.

Mind, electricity, as the life-giving active force of nature, shows its highest form of development in the form of mentalism, and the study of it is termed Spiritualism. There may be those who can not distinguish between Spiritualism, mentalism or religion. Others take their religion straight. Because some people don't know anything about Spiritualism and mentalism, that does not prove that they are not true any more than because a person does not understand astronomy proves that astronomy is not true, such a person should fall back on religion. Anyone who can't understand anything else can understand religion. It is a good thing there is a place provided for such people.

Now, Mr. Editor, this is as fine a dream as you ever got hold of. Will you please publish it, remembering that the great struggle of life is for the balance of power, control between what is termed good and evil. As religion has always represented hell and despotism here on earth, don't confound it with Spiritualism. The Spiritualist's ideal points to bliss, happiness, liberty.

SCIENCE A GREAT AID TO RELIGION.

Professor Charles R. Barnes of University of Chicago Decries Old Teachings.

To the Editor:—As set forth in the Chicago Examiner, in the November number of the Biblical World, which has just been issued from the University of Chicago Press, there appears an article on "The Contribution of Science to Religious Education" by Charles R. Barnes, a professor in the University of Chicago, in which he asserts that religious education should be supplemented by scientific research and discoveries, instead of having the "blind belief of everything in the Bible from lid to lid." He believes the ancient prophets and their contemporaries had a different way of looking at things than we have or ought to have. He says that religion should be taught in a modern way and not as it was taught centuries ago.

"Most conspicuous among the material used in the present religious training," says Professor Barnes, "is the study of folklore, tradition, history, poetry, wisdom, prophecy, biography and letters which make up the Scriptures. Many improvements can be made in method and in the choice and organization of material, profiting by suggestions to be derived from modern investigations in philosophy, psychology and pedagogy.

The teacher who, turning his back on reason holds to a theory of inspiration of the Bible which is sometimes expressed by the allegation, "I believe everything in the Bible, from lid to lid;' can, in my judgment, only do harm as a religious educator, for his every pupil will be forced, sooner or later, to a false choice between reason and blind adherence to dogma, miscalled 'faith.' And when there is a 'conflict' between religion and science the modern man chooses science."

Professor Barnes assumes that the attempt to reconcile Biblical accounts of natural events with scientific ones is simply a waste of time. Such stories as the Biblical story of creation, he says, should be treated as an early interpretation used to teach the relation of God to the process, as the writer understood it.

"To identify the 'days' of creation with geological epochs is absurd," he says, "and more likely to harm faith than to help it, as I can testify from personal experience."

Thus the world is steadily moving on. PROGRESS.

An Important Lecture.

Delivered From the Rostrum of The Progressive Thinker, by William John Ward of Mt. Pleasant Park, Clinton, Iowa, On "THE NEEDS OF THE HOUR"—Organization, Concentration, Unity of Effort.

"For the accomplishment of whatever is great and lofty, the clear perception of truths is the first requisite—truths adapted to the object desired."—Lytton.

For the success of any cause, whether it be a revolution or a reformation, three vital factors are absolutely necessary, viz.: UNITY OF PURPOSE, UNITY OF ACTION, AND LOYALTY TO LEADERS.

With these three factors alive, pregnant in every unit, the success of your just cause is assured, provided you have the requisite intelligence and numbers.

But with those qualities lacking, your cause is inevitably doomed to ignominious failure.

These three vital factors are necessary in all constructive work. Having them, you get the finished cathedral. Lacking them you get a tower of Babel, INCOMPLETE, UNFINISHED, WITH CHAOS RAMPANT AMONG THE BUILDERS.

If these premises are true, and so vital to success, then it behooves every loyal Spiritualist to examine into the meaning of these basic essentials, and then to actively apply them to the cause we have so much at heart.

Let us then examine into these factors, taking them in the order I have laid down.

What is the purpose of Spiritualism?

In reading Robert Louis Stevenson's "Familiar Studies of Men and Books," I very much admired his analysis of the function of the poet and the metaphysician.

He has put it so ably, employs such elegant diction, and it corresponds so much with the purpose of Spiritualism that I gladly quote it, not only because it is explanatory of the subject in hand, but because it is a valuable addition to Spiritualistic literature. He says:

"His (Walt Whitman's) notion of the poetic function is ambitious, and coincides roughly with what Schopenhauer has laid down as the province of the metaphysician. The poet is to gather together for men, and set in order the materials of their existence.

"He is 'The Answerer,' he is to find some way of speaking about life that shall satisfy, if only for the moment, man's enduring astonishment at his own position.

"And besides having an answer ready, it is he who shall provoke the question. He must shake people out of their indifference and force them to make some election in this world, INSTEAD OF SLIDING DULLY FORWARD IN A DREAM.

"Life is a business we are all apt to mismanage, either living recklessly from day to day, or suffering ourselves to be gulled out of our moments by the inanities of custom.

"We should despise a man who gave as little activity and forethought to the conduct of any other business. But in this, which is the one thing of all others, since it contains them all, we cannot see the forest for the trees.

One brief impression obliterates another. There is something stupefying in the recurrence of unimportant things.

"And it is only on rare provocations that we can rise to take an outlook beyond daily concern, and comprehend the narrow limits and great possibilities of our existence. It is the duty of the poet to induce such moments of clear sight. He is the declared enemy of all living by reflex action of all that is done between sleep and waking, of all the pleasureless pleasurings and imaginary duties in which we coin away our hearts and fritter invaluable years.

"He has to electrify his readers into an instant unflagging activity, founded on a wide and eager observation of the world, and make them direct their ways by a superior prudence, which has little or nothing in common with the maxims of the copy book.

"That many of us lead such lives as they would heartily disown after two hours serious reflection on the subject is, I am afraid, a true, and I am sure, a very galling thought.

"The Enchanted Ground of dead-alive respectability is next, upon the map, to the Beulah of considerate virtue.

"But there they all slumber and take their rest in the middle of God's beautiful and wonderful universe, the drowsy heads have nodded together in the same position since first their fathers fell asleep; and not even the sound of the last trumpet can wake them to a single active thought. The poet has a hard task before him to stir up such fellows to a sense of their own and other people's principles in life."

In brief, it is the function of the metaphysician to awaken to a sane theory of life, of enduring benefit to themselves and their fellows. A theory which will serve as an indisputable basis, an indestructible foundation, on which to build the system of social life, with a purpose—mark you,—and that purpose the promotion of happiness, the gradual accomplishment of the brotherhood of man.

Such, in my opinion, is the purpose of Spiritualism. There should be a bold and emphatic declaration, from the society to the world, as to this primary purpose, to this effect: WE BELIEVE THAT THE MISSION OF HUMANITY CANNOT BE FULFILLED TILL A SYSTEM OF GENERAL HELPFULNESS IS ESTABLISHED.

It is our primary service, therefore, to promote the happiness of mankind by inculcating the doctrine of brotherhood by advocacy and example.

That special motive would give us the right to exist. It would put us upon an enduring basis, for we should be in active co-operation with the evolutionary scheme, the design of the Great Architect, for which all the beneficent powers of nature are working.

Rallying around that standard, active in the noblest cause yet conceived, we shall become a BENEFICENT POWER IN THE WORLD, ALWAYS ADVANCING AND INCREASING, WITH ADDED IMPETUS, INVINCIBLE IN TRUTH AND RIGHT.

Spiritualism is to start on a new era. Hitherto we have paid much attention to the mere fact of communion with spirits, with all its attendant phenomena. But all that, important as it may be, is but a mere incident pertaining to the psychic department of nature; and the individual who allows his or her mind to constantly revolve around that one particular subject is very liable to incur serious results to himself. The mind needs variety, breadth and depth, to give it poise and proper proportion; and what is true of the individual is also true of the society as a whole.

What is necessary is, to digest, to apply, to improve and advance. TO REMAIN STATIONARY IS FATAL. That was the crime of the church. She refused to advance with modern intelligence. She remained stationary, and arrogant too in her ignorance, and to-day, as a consequence, she is little more than a "whited sepulchre."

It is the office of Spiritualism to take its place.

We are well equiped for the office so far as teaching is concerned. We have our purpose well outlined; we cannot fail to agree on that; but how about unity? Do we, as yet, possess unity of action?

Are we organized sufficiently to insure success?

The indications are, at present, that we are not.

THERE ARE JEALOUSIES; THERE IS FRICTION; THERE IS SELFISH AMBITION; THERE ARE THOSE WHO, HAVING SOME FAINT DEVELOPMENT OF PSYCHIC FACULTY AROUSED, POSE AS TEACHERS, GIVE A WRONG IMPRESSION OF SPIRITUALISM, TO THE SERIOUS DETRIMENT OF THE CAUSE. THAT CLASS OF PEOPLE SHOULD BE SEVERELY DISCOURAGED. THEY ARE VAGRANTS.

THEN THERE ARE THE FRAUDULENT MEDIUMS WHO PREY UPON THE CREDULOUS; VAMPIRES; THE WORST ENEMIES OF THE CAUSE. IF WE COULD LEAVE ALL THESE UNITS OF DISRUPTION TO TIME AND SILENCE WE WOULD BE SURE OF THEIR FIT PUNISHMENT, FOR NATURE HAS INDEED A TERRIBLE PUNISHMENT IN STORE FOR THOSE WHO VIOLATE THE LAWS OF THE PSYCHIC WORLD. BUT THE INTERESTS OF THE CAUSE—WHICH SHOULD BE SACRED TO US—COMPEL US TO ACTION; HEROIC IF NECESSARY. IT IS CLEARLY THE DUTY OF THE SOCIETY, IN JUSTICE TO ITSELF, AND THE PUBLIC-AT-LARGE, TO PROSECUTE IMPOSTORS, AND TO GIVE WARNING TO THAT EFFECT.

The result would be very healthy to all concerned.

If we mean to keep Spiritualism alive, if we mean it to be of benefit to mankind; if we want it perpetuated, then we must act with vigor to that end. We must have a thorough organization. "A house divided against itself cannot stand."

Take St. Louis, for example. In that city, taking in East St. Louis, too, there are enough people interested to form the nucleus of a central church, or perhaps two. But what have we got there? Numerous little classes, semi-priate, each working out its own little hobby, wriggling through some psychic gymnastics, and listening with painful awe to a pretended Pythagoras at one moment and an American Indian the next.

Such things should make us blush for shame. But what could we have in St. Louis under a right system of organization? We could have one, or two, central churches, well equiped with authorized teachers, or pastors, and with all that is necessary to sane management.

Such a central body, in a good church, would serve as a magnet to draw crowds in that populous city, and they would be fed with good food, and the good would redound with immense benefit to Spiritualism. All this could be accomplished, and I say that it is a lasting shame and disgrace to those pretended Spiritualists who in any way oppose it.

If a church or two, to propagate the tenets of Spiritualism, could be built in St. Louis, with the necessary music and conditions supplied, I am confident that it would amply pay for itself under Professor Peck's management. But St. Louis is only one example; these conditions prevail more or less all over the country. The question we must face, is, what can we do for thorough organization?

We have got to have focuses for centralization in every city, where we can be sure of employing the proper talent of teaching. That is all. Get your central churches, with your Elizabeth Harlows and your professors, established, and the rest will follow. AND IT RESTS WITH THE NATIONAL AND STATE SOCIETIES TO FORM COMMITTEES FOR WORK TO THIS END. There is no room for discouragement, we must work for unity!

And now we come to the last factor, loyalty to leaders. The most important function of our leaders or pastors, is, to advocate the tenets of Spiritualism to the public at large. He or she is for the moment the embodiment of the Cause. Because of their superior knowledge, and their ability to talk before an audience, we elect them to represent us in a measure, and to advance our cause into the world. To accomplish this purpose in a fitting manner, means a constant call upon all the resources of their nature; we do not sufficiently realize that fact. Indeed, from my observation, I doubt whether many even think about it. They should be the objects of our solicitude; we should strengthen them by every means in our power, and, above all, we should PROTECT THEM BY REFUSING TO LISTEN TO ANY SLANDER AGAINST THEM.

When the bile of envy or jealousy, or morbid hatred begins to spill, we should turn away and refuse to be touched by it. Adopt this, as an unwritten rule, throughout the society, and we shall take a great stride ahead.

How universally Washington is admired to-day! How we as Americans revere his name! How great seems the cause for which he fought and won, American liberty.

But how now when we read of that tremendous struggle that "tried the souls of men" and women, too, we blush for shame at the vexations that were needlessly caused him by Americans through laxity of effort, small jealousies and want of thorough loyalty! And so we as Spiritualists shall in the future turn back in shame, if we have done aught to stay the progress of one of THE NOBLEST MOVEMENTS EVER CONCEIVED TO BENEFIT MANKIND, PHYSICALLY, MORALLY AND SPIRITUALLY.

On every Spiritualist devolves the responsibility of doing his or her best according to capacity; if it is only to place the chairs in the hall, or placing the glass of water on the rostrum. You are doing what you can; you are serving the cause. And so, with each individual loyal to leaders, service and cause, we shall successfully fill our modest place in the great evolutionary scheme.

POEMS OF HOPE.

O. W. Barnard of Manteno, Ill., is the author of "Poems of Hope," gotten out in a book of 539 pages. The mechanical execution of the book is artistic throughout, while the poems are interesting and instructive. From time to time Mr. Barnard's poems have appeared in The Progressive Thinker and have been read with pleasure. He is a farmer, but one of the progressive kind, and is imbued with the true spirit of the poet. We make one selection, "The Angel of Light."

The Angel of Light.

An angel stood on a fleecy cloud,
That slept in heaven's blue—
With a voice of sweetest love endowed,
And words like pearls of dew.

His face shone bright as the noonday sun,
His raiment pure and white—
A radiance o'er his features ran
Of pure angelic light.

His thoughts like glittering diamonds sped,
To earth's enshrouded zone—
The darkness grim like a phantom fled,
And light supernal shone.

'Twas a light divine, whose ray is truth,
To bless man's dark estate—
'Twas a light of love for age and youth,
From heaven's shining gate.

He left his home so joyous and bright,
Far, far from earth's dark sphere—
He came on wings of love's delight,
Man's drooping heart to cheer.

Until now the world was draped in gloom,
While hope from man had fled,
And the shade of superstition's doom
O'er all the nations spread.

But now the beauteous light of truth
Streamed round the darkened earth,
Like the joys of ever blooming youth—
On this day had their birth.

To look upward now man soon began
This angel form to see,
Who was like a never setting sun,
That shone to make men free.

A zephyr came from the land of the sun—
The summer cloud passed by,
But soon came back the shining one
Left waiting in the sky.

To catch the sweet anthem rising above—
A chorus clear and loud!
From millions of happy homes of love,
To the angel on the cloud.

To his home in the realms of the blest
He passed with the speed of light,
From a world long by sorrow oppressed—
Now so joyous and bright!

When he had reached the radiant shore,
Angels welcomed him home,
With songs of rapture they all sang o'er,
That rose to heaven's dome.

He left his home of light for a while—
Lit up a world in woe,
Then returned again with joyous smile—
Shining with brighter glow.

J. CLEGG WRIGHT.

A Beautiful and Enjoyable Event in Washington, D. C.

J. Clegg Wright, the indomitable and eloquent lecturer, has been speaking for the First Association of Washington during the month of October, and under the influence of his lofty inspirers has given to the people a spiritual and intellectual feast such as they claim they have never enjoyed before. In the opinion of many, these discourses have been masterly in their elucidation of spiritual themes and in their educational work along the lines of scientific study of those questions that tend to elevate the mind and at the same time give a reason and a purpose for the esoteric and intuitive leadings of human nature towards the cultivation of soul power and the expressions of its consciousness through the mortal life. Our people feel that they have been illuminated by the teachings of Mr. Wright, and that they have immeasurably gained in spiritual lore and expansion by his presence with us.

A beautiful and enjoyable event in the experience of Spiritualists of Washington occurred in the evening of October 29, at the home in Anacostia, of Mr. and Mrs. Newell White, where a large number of friends congregated to pay tributes of love and respect to this devoted pair, it being the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage. Mr. and Mrs. White are staunch and faithful Spiritualists, who have lived the life of true Spiritualism for a great many years. The wife is herself a good medium who has given comfort and help to many mortals by the ministrations of her mediumship, "without money and without price," while the husband is a constant friend and helper to mediums and to the Cause they represent, without showing to the world the measure of his good deeds and thoughts. The golden wedding of which we write, was a happy event not only in the life of its celebrants but also for all who were privileged to attend; the evening was all that could be desired in point of weather, and the merry throng that journeyed to the pleasant home overflowed in spirited appreciation and enjoyment of the occasion. Bountiful were the gifts and floral offerings from relatives and friends of the happy couple, choice tokens of love and respect too numerous to mention in detail, though perhaps we may be allowed to speak of the beautiful golden brooch, with the inscription, "From Loving Friends," bestowed upon the youthful bride of fifty years, and the exquisite scarf pin presented to the equally youthful bridegroom, these gifts being a tender testimonial from the Ladies' Auxiliary of the First Association of Washington, and presented in a soulful and loving speech by Mrs. M. T. Longley in behalf of the Ladies' Society.

Another appropriate and beautiful gift, from Mr. and Mrs. Collins, was a shining marriage certificate of this golden wedding, framed in an elegant gilt frame; this was presented feelingly by Mrs. Collins who, at that moment and later in the evening gave utterance to the beautiful thoughts of her spirit guides while in their mystic influence.

Speeches of rare inspiration and beauty were made by J. Clegg Wright and Mr. F. A. Wood, president of the First Association, and other friends uttered their words of congratulation, respect and good cheer to the worthy pair. A bountiful and exquisite collation was also enjoyed to the full by the happy throng, all the choice fruits of the season, with creams, ices, cakes and other delicacies served to make a very banquet of the feast, while two mammoth, handsome cakes, white with their covering of glistening sugar frost, and adorned with beautiful sweet roses—one, a bride cake, the other a golden wedding cake—yielded generous slices to every guest.

After the rich spread an hour of social and merry wit and humor ensued, when "Nannie," the spirit messenger of Mrs. Longley, being called for, that little visitor appeared and gave loving greetings to the host and hostess from the other shore, including their spirit children and others near and dear, referring in tenderness to the loved mortal children who were far away but whose affectionate thoughts were centered on their beloved parents at this time, giving blessing and greeting to the one son who was present in body and who is making the declining years of father and mother a blessing by his presence with them, and concluding with an improvised poem on "The Golden Wedding Bells."

One beautiful feature of the evening occurred when Mr. White, in a sweet and tender little speech placed on the finger of his wife a new golden circlet which had been sent for the occasion by their daughters in Colorado, with the request that "Father place the ring on mother's finger on their golden wedding day."

All who witnessed this touching little ceremony and listened to the loving tones of the groom as he performed it and ended by kissing the bride, and to her tearful, loving response in faltering but eloquent words, felt that they were seated on holy ground where heaven reaches earth with sacred illumination.

We are glad to pay this tribute of love to a noble pair of life-long Spiritualists—would that the world was filled with the like. M. T. L.

THE JOY OF FREEDOM.

Oh, sweeter than sunshine or gladness,
Thy spirit envelops my soul;
Imparting its wondrous lustre,
And making me one with the Whole

Oh, joyousness, freedom and fragrance,
Refreshing my soul with its draught;
The nectar of life everlasting
Is offered and gratefully quaffed.

No more shall dark sorrow or sighing
Warm shelter or comradeship find.
No more shall their shadows disfigure
The pure, sacred precincts of mind.

On, on to the realms of the blessed,
Triumphantly singing I'll go;
God gave me the keys to His kingdom,
Now naught but rejoicing I know.

Each mansion I enter is broader
And jeweled in richer design,
And treasure eternal and fadeless
In bountiful plenty are mine.

THE PSYCHOGRAPH
OR
Dial Planchette.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than twelve years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.
Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive communications?
The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the
with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.
Capt D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."
Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

OUR ECLECTIC MAGAZINE

THE CREAM OF OTHER EXCHANGES

It is especially interesting to note what our Trans-Atlantic Brethren are saying in reference to the Great Cause that is now agitating the world. The two English papers, the Two Worlds and Light, are especially valuable exponents of our philosophy, and from time to time we will make extracts therefrom. The following is from Light.

"Another time, when looking into the crystal at the desire of a girl who had been introduced to her, Miss Angus descried a ship tossing on a stormy sea, with land in the distance. When this vanished, a little house appeared with steps leading up to the door. On the second step stood an old man reading a newspaper, while in front of the house was a field of stubbly grass, where some sheep were grazing. This spot was recognized by her new acquaintance as a place known to her in Shetland, which she and her mother were expecting shortly to visit. The sheep in Shetland, like the ponies, are remarkably small. The old man was apparently the schoolmasmaster. Both these cases were related to Mr. Lang a day or two after their occurrence and confirmed by other persons present.

"The next example is more curious. On Wednesday, February 2, 1897, Miss Angus, wishing to amuse some new acquaintances, asked them to think of something. Whereupon a Mr. Bissett inquired whether she could see anything in the crystal concerning a letter he had in his pocket. Miss Angus then described a large building, in and out of which men were continually passing, a place which impressed her as being abroad. 'Is it an exchange?' someone asked. 'It might be,' she returned. 'Now comes a man in a great hurry. He has a broad brow and short curly hair, hat pressed low down on his eyes. His face is very serious, but he has a delightful smile—the smile of Charles Lamb,' she added. In this man Mr. and Mrs. Bissett both recognized their friend the stock-broker, whose letter in Mr. Bissett's pocket had led to the query."

Crystal Vision.

The revival of interest in crystal-gazing reminds us that there is nothing new under the sun, for this art—so popular in modern society—is said to have been practiced three thousand years ago. Found among the most highly civilized nations of Asia, Crystallomancy (divination by means of transparent bodies) has also been traced to America, South Africa, Egypt, Greece, and Rome, while the Incas, Maories, and Ponlynesians seem to have been equally versed in its use.

Sometimes revelations were said to have been made by written characters seen in the "crystal"; at others, the spirits invoked were supposed to appear and answer questions. Moreover, the crystal globe is only one of many objects employed as a mode of obtaining knowledge otherwise than through the known channels of the senses. For example, the Romans were accustomed to look into water, the Egyptians used ink, the Maories a drop of blood; and precious stones—notably the beryl—the blade of a sword, or any polished surface, were all used by their respective votaries and regarded as equally efficacious. An elaborate ritual formerly preceded the ceremony.

In ancient Greece—according to Mr. Andrew Lang—supernormal knowledge was frequently acquired by means of a bowl containing oil or wine. Sometimes a vessel of water was surrounded by torches when a "daimon" was invoked, a boy being employed to observe its action upon the surface of the water; for the seer was usually a child innocent of sin, or a maiden—called variously a Speculator, Scryer, or Reader. Again, the seer might have his nails smeared with soot and oil and turned towards the sun, whose rays were supposed to to produce images representing certain things. Very curious was the observance known as Hydromancy, practiced at the Temple of Demeter, in Patrae. Before the Temple was a fountain, into which a mirror was let down by a cord until its edge touched the water. Then, from the images produced, predictions were made concerning the health of the person consulting the oracle. Mirrors are still used in India, when, after long fasting and prayer, the seer expects a revelation.

In Polynesia divination is customary in order to discover the whereabouts of lost or stolen property.

The Red Indians, it is stated by Lejeune, make their patients gaze into water, in which they see images of food and medicine likely to do them good. Hence, in common with other savage races, they seem to have discovered for themselves the principle of cure by suggestion employed by hypnotic physicians at the present day. In such cases it is not the remedies invoked that effect a cure, but rather the confidence in their virtue inspired by the doctor. Indeed, we need only read the accounts given by Charcot, Milne Bramwell, and others, of the remarkable results of suggestion, to see what the action of the mind over the body will do.

The belief in Crystallomancy, common in Europe during classic times, continued until the Middle Ages, when, owing to their condemnation by the early church, the Specularii—as they were called—fell into discredit. In the sixteenth century, however, the art appears to have received a new impetus under the auspices of the famous Dr. John Dee, to whom we owe the first attempt at any scientific analysis of crystal vision. His scryer, a man named Kelly, professed not only to see spirits in the crystal, but to hear them speak and to carry on long conversations with them! Sounds of different kinds were also heard, and apparitions reported, in the neighborhood of the famous Shew Stone, now in the British Museum.

That the faculty is genuine, its world-wide prevalence seems to leave no doubt, while the phenomena are occasionally of a nature to justify a belief in "spirit" intervention. Whether such intervention be possible, it is, however, beyond the scope of this article to discuss. In the opinion of the late Mr. Myers and other authorities, crystal-gazing is no occult practice, but is merely a method of establishing control over inward vision.

Recent experiment has further confirmed the fact that hallucinatory pictures are really seen by many civilized people in water, crystal globes, etc. To about one person in twenty, Mr. Myers believed, some experience of the kind might occur; while one in four hundred, perhaps, might develop the faculty so far as to obtain information inaccessible by ordinary means.

The reader who desires to become a crystal gazer may test his or her powers by looking steadily at some speculum or glass ball—an ordinary water bottle will do—so placed as to show as few reflections as possible. The eyes must never be strained, ten minutes at a time being usually long enough for observation. Experimenters must not expect to succeed at their first attempt. After three or four trials, however, they may be rewarded by the appearance of a faint bluish cloud or mist arising in the crystal, from which a picture will gradually evolve and grow clear.

For example, a face, a flower, or a sentence may be represented, or an event of the past, present, or future relating to the seer, or to some person or persons present or at a distance. Such visions change and fade, as do the phases of a dream, in which figures arise and vanish in slow or quick succession. Sometimes the figures are not descried in the crystal at all. Instead, they may appear life-sized in the room outside, or occasionally, when the habit is fully acquired, scryers may even obtain visions in the dark without the aid of any speculum whatever.

"But how," it may be asked, "is it possible for a picture to appear in a common glass ball?"

These pictures, psychologists assert, are really not in the crystal at all, but are merely the hallucinations of the seer's own brain, externalized. In such visions, memory, clairvoyance and thought-transference often play an important part, the knowledge existing in the percipient's sub-consciousness being brought to the normal consciousness by the aid of the crystal globe. In other words, the crystal acts like a pair of spectacles or a telescope, which enables us to read small print, or to discern objects at a distance hitherto invisible.

By some authorities crystal-gazing is said to be due to the action of hypnotic trance being frequently induced by looking fixedly at some bright object, such as a jet of gas, a piece of bright metal, etc. Moreover, by means of suggestion, a hypnotized subject may be led to imagine a picture on a blank card which; by certain guiding marks, he continues to distinguish after the card has been shuffled with others. Hypnotism may, therefore, be responsible for a certain proportion of hallucinatory pictures, for it is through the subliminal self that supernatural knowledge is acquired, and crystal-gazing helps it to obtain such knowledge.

It is, nevertheless, impossible to place this art under any formal category; nor can hypnotism satisfactorily account for anything like the number of phenomena that actually occur. To Miss Goodrich-Freer—to whose study of the subject we owe much of our knowledge of its history—the recent popularity of crystal-gazing is largely due. Many of her experiments published by the S. P. R. are highly suggestive and interesting.

For instance, on one occasion, having forgotten the address of a correspondent whose letter she had unwittingly destroyed, it struck her to test the value of the crystal, when "H—— House" (the entire name being given) appeared in grey letters on a white ground. On the chance of its reaching its destination, she accordingly despatched her communication. A day or so later brought her a reply headed in grey letters on a white ground, with the exact address so strangely supplied by the crystal!

Again, on entering a drawing-room, she saw in a mirror on the wall—printed as though upon a visiting card—a name for which she had long hunted in vain. Like most unusual phenomena, however, the representations in the crystal are "freakish," and although forgotten facts were often recalled in this manner, Miss Goodrich-Freer did not always see what she anticipated. One day, hoping to descry a figure that occupied her thoughts, she took up the crystal, when, to her annoyance a prim little bunch of daffodils appeared in its place. The posy, despite all her efforts to get rid of it, persisted in presenting itself again and again in a variety of different positions. Three days later, quite unexpectedly, she received as a valentine a painting on blue satin of a small bunch of daffodils—the counterpart of the bouquet seen in her vision. Meanwhile the artist had spent several hours making studies of the flowers in various positions on the very day they had appeared to the seer in the crystal ball! Telepathy seems the most probable explanation of this vision.

As examples of thought-transference, the experiences of Miss Angus may be commended to our readers. This young lady, a friend of Mr. Andrew Lang's—to whom we are indebted for the following account—was persuaded by the author to experiment with a crystal ball. At many of these experiments Mr. Lang was himself present, while they almost invariably took place amongst strangers whom the scryer had never met before, and of whose histories she was absolutely ignorant. Added to this she was in perfect health, and knew nothing of psychical matters.

In one of her early experiments, Miss Angus accurately described a race-course in Scotland and an accident that had happened the preceding week to the friend of a Miss H., a lady present, who had mentioned the subject to no one. Yet her sensations when the injured man was borne past on a hurdle, and her intense anxiety as to whether he had been seriously hurt, were all vividly realized and recounted by the seer. Curiously enough, the hostess, who possessed unusual magnetic powers, had tried vainly to influence Miss Angus by laying her hand on her forehead! Miss H., on the other hand, who knew nothing of crystal-gazing, and had laughed the whole matter to scorn, had, notwithstanding, unconsciously affected her.

Another time, when looking into the crystal at the desire of a girl who had just been introduced to her, Miss Angus descried a ship tossing on a stormy sea, with land in the distance. When this vanished, a little house appeared with steps leading up to the door. On the second step stood an old man reading a newspaper, while in front of the house was a field of stubbly grass, where some very small sheep were grazing. This spot was recognized by her new acquaintance as a place known to her in Shetland, which she and her mother were expecting shortly to visit. The sheep in Shetland, like the ponies, are remarkably small. The old man was apparently the schoolmaster. Both these cases were related to Mr. Lang a day or two after the occurrence and confirmed by other persons present.

The next example is much more curious. On Wednesday, February 2, 1897, Miss Angus, wishing to amuse some new acquaintances, asked them to think of something. Whereupon a Mr. Bissett inquired whether she could see anything in the crystal concerning a letter he had in his pocket. Miss Angus then described a large building, in and out of which men were continually passing, a place which impressed her as being abroad. "Is it an exchange?" someone asked. "It might be," she returned. "Now comes a man in a great hurry. He has a broad brow and short curly hair, hat pressed low down on his eyes. His face is very serious, but he has a delightful smile—the smile of Charles Lamb," she added. In this man Mr. and Mrs. Bissett both recognized their friend the stock-broker, whose letter in Mr. Bissett's pocket had led to the query.

This vision was succeeded by that of a young woman lying on a couch, with bare feet. A few days later, in answer to a question from a Mrs. Cockburn who had been present, a letter arrived from her married daughter fifty miles away, confessing that she had indeed been lying on a sofa in her bedroom with bare feet on February 2nd! Her reply, now in the possession of Mr. A. Lang, further expressed considerable indignation "on the abuse of glass balls, which tend to rob life of its privacy!"

The next acount is still more extraordinary, and contains details respecting which it is difficult to offer any adequate explanation. On February 6th, 1897, when with Mr. and Mrs. Bissett, Miss Angus described a lady and gentleman walking beside a river in a garden under a brilliant blue sky. The lady, who was fashionably dressed, twirled a white sun shade over her shoulder as she walked, in a curious "stumpy way." Her face seemed "drawn," as though from ill-health. Her companion, a broad-shouldered man, with a straight nose and a short neck, was in light clothes, such as are worn in a warm climate, and seemed to listen indifferently to the gay chatter of his companion. Miss Angus saw him afterwards alone, apparently overlooking some natives felling trees. From the description of the woman, Mrs. Bissett recognized her sister in India, Mrs. Clifton, whose peculiar walk was caused by an illness she had some years before; while in the gentleman, Mr. and Mrs. Bissett both recognized their brother-in-law. On being shown an old photograph of Mrs. Clifton, Miss Angus declared it "like, but too pretty!"

The next day, February 8th, Mrs. Bissett received a letter from Mrs. Clifton, saying they had just been to a great function in some gardens in a native State. She also mentioned that they were going to camp out until the end of February, one of Mr. Clifton's duties consisting in superintending the clearing of wood preparatory to the formation of the camp! Thus Miss Angus's vision was entirely confirmed.

Regarding such phenomena, it is impossible to dogmatise. The most reasonable hypothesis appears to be that of undulatory vibrations of the other created by our psychic force, which may be transmitted for hundreds of miles, until they become perceptible to some mind, or minds, in sympathy with our own. Miss Angus knew nothing of Mr. and Mrs. Clifton; neither were her acquaintances aware of their movements. Her telepathic impressions were, therefore, the more remarkable and unusual.

The powers of visualization possessed by Lady Radnor's friend, a young lady know as Miss A., are equally interesting. Indeed, in some respects, they seemed to transcend those of the scryers above mentioned.

Miss A., who is extremely short-sighted, can see objects in the glass far more distinctly than out of it. Her powers of imagination, too, are very poor; yet moving scenes, faces, views, etc., appear to her in a glass of water, a crystal, or even in a moonstone belonging to a bracelet. These visions are all as clear to her as though viewed through strong glasses.

Her attention was first directed to crystal-gazing by a vision of a golden key lying at the bottom of a tumbler of water. She then bought a crystal ball and soon descried a variety of things in it. She has also seen pictures in a mirror. Her method is to wrap the crystal in some dark material; leaving a little bit uncovered, or to hold the globe in the palm of her hand. In a minute of two a bright light becomes visible, which, after a few seconds, disappears. Miss A. cannot look long at a picture, however, owing to the brilliance of the light. In fact, "during a sunlit scene," says Lady Radnor, "her eyes frequently stream with tears!" On one occasion she saw and described Mr. B., a well-known author, searching for a paper in the drawers of his writing-table. He was using a peculiar pen, and ruffling up his hair with his hands until it almost stood on end. Suddenly a lady entered the room, and pointing to his head, burst out laughing. Mr. B., on being interrogated by Lord Radnor, admitted that this was absolutely correct. He was hunting for a paper to send by post; the lady who laughed at his hair was his sister, who lived with him—a fact unknown to Miss A., who was unacquainted with either of them.

Another time, when looking in the crystal at Longford Castle in the company of Lady Radnor, Miss A. saw, amongst other things, a large carved fireplace with a coat of arms in the middle and curious serpents entwined. Then, touching one of the serpent's heads, a secret passage seemed to open, which led her out to a river, beside which figures were walking down, dressed after a fashion of the olden time. The name, Edwyn de Bovery—spelt in an unusual way—followed by the word "White Webs," appeared in the crystal. Curiously enough, a few days afterwards, when looking at an old book in the library, Miss A. discovered accidentally that one of the coats of arms she had scried in the crystal belonged to an heiress—a Miss Smith; while in a parish register at Britford Church the name of Sir Edward de Bovery was found. This Sir Edward, generally known as Sir Edward des Bouverie, died at the Red House, Cheshunt, Herts, in 1694. There was a place called "White Webs" in the neighborhood.

Sir Edward's grandson settled at Longford, 1707, and in 1718 married Mary Smith, daughter and co-heiress of John Smith, a governor of the Bank of England. Many secret passages led to and from the Red House at Cheshunt. Thus was the crystal vision fully corroborated! Several historical scenes, witnessed in connection with Salisbury Cathedral, were likewise seen and verified. With regard to these retrospective pictures, conjecture alone is possible. It may be that certain places are haunted, as it were, with the shades of the past, which make themselves visible to persons clairvoyantly gifted.

IRENE H. BISSON.

The Teacher's Comprehensive Creed.

Edwin Osgood Grover, a true friend to all school teachers, has set afloat the following "Teacher's Creed":

I believe in boys and girls, the men and women of a great to-morrow; that whatsoever the boy soweth the man shall reap. I believe in the curse of ignorance, in the efficacy of schools, in the dignity of teaching, and the joy of serving another. I believe in wisdom as revealed in human lives as well as in the pages of a printed book; in lessons taught not so much by precept as by example; in ability to work with the hands as well as to think with the head; in everything that makes life large and lovely. I believe in beauty in the school-room, in the home, in daily life and out-of-doors. I believe in laughter, in love, in all ideals and distant hopes that lure us on. I believe that every hour of every day we receive a just reward for all we are and all we do. I believe in the present and its opportunities, in the future and its promises, and in the divine joy of living. Amen.

The Pathway of the Human Spirit.

"The Pathway of the Human Spirit," by Dr. Peebles (Battle Creek, Mich., U. S. A.), has, for its sub-title, "Did it pre-exist and does it reincarnate again into mortal life?" Dr. Peebles' answer to this does not seem as decisive as of old. Reincarnation used to provoke him to the use of the fiercest specimens of his always fervid vocabulary, but he appears to have had a walk round to the other side of the shield, and to see a connection between the pre-existence to which he has always been friendly and the reincarnation which he has always abhorred. He says, indeed, "Pre-existence and reincarnation are by no means identical," but adds, "That there is an underlying truth, however, in the theory of reincarnation, few with a philosophic turn of mind will deny, but not as taught in the old Oriental books. . * Reincarnation considered in relation to involution and as the descending arc of the circle, is not only plausible but logically true."

In his Preface, Dr. Peebles says of the arguments on behalf of reincarnation that they "are growing in favor" with him; but then, as though still in doubt, he says, "Nevertheless, my final word has not been spoken upon this momentous subject"; and this, characteristically, strikes out from him the cry, "Aye—will—can this word final ever be spoken? I almost tremble at the word finality. Is there any finality except in God—the Immutable—the Infinite?"

We are perfectly content to leave it at that. Reincarnation is, at best, a theory, a guess, a hypothesis, utterly incapable of verification, and, though it may have its uses as a need of serious theosophic playthings to conjure with, it need not trouble the practical mind.

Past and Away From the Churches.

The late Professor A. B. Bruce, of Glasgow, once made a startling statement concerning the people who have drifted past and away from the churches. "I am disposed to think," he said, "that a great and steadily increasing portion of the moral worth of society lies outside the organized churches, not because of godlessness but by reason of exceptional moral earnestness."

It is a terrible suggestion, but there is truth in it, though it is exaggerated in outline and too highly colored. But, in so far as it is true, what is the reason for it? There are many reasons, and some of them, and these not the least potent, are difficult to describe. For one thing, it is certain that the organized churches have been too highly organized in the sense of being too separated from the work-a-day world. Then, as the inheritors and upholders of old-world imaginations and opinions, they have got out of touch with the living thoughts of living men, and have got to look too much like actors of ceremonials or dogma-grinders; and, added to all this, it is only too obvious that these churches have lost the actual grip of facts. All the ancient "signs" are wanting. They do not "speak with tongues; they do not heal; they only believe in miracles as ancient history; they scowl upon the real "communion of saints," and call all spirit communion demoniacal. What have they to offer? It would puzzle the bishops to say.

Dr. J. M. Peebles, World's Missionary-at-Large.

In a letter just received from Dr. J. M. Peebles, our veteran friend tells us that the National Association of Spiritualists of the United States recently appointed him "The World's Missionary-at-Large," and as he travels where "the spirit moves him," he intends to come to England once more. He will start from Quebec, Canada, on the 19th inst., after visiting Rochester, N. Y., to assist the Rev. B. F. Austin, on October 1, in dedicating the Plymouth Spiritual Church in Rochester which the Spiritualists of that city have just purchased from the Presbyterians. It is a splendid church edifice, valued at sixty-five thousand dollars, with a large organ and all the fixtures necessary for religious work. The meetings will last for a week, and a number of speakers and mediums will participate in the proceedings.

Forty Spiritualist Associations in Brazil.

The Message of Life (New Zealand) says:

"There are forty Spiritualist Associations in the Brazil Republic and nine periodicals devoted to the spread of spiritual truth. 'The Reformador,' published in the Portuguese tongue, fortnightly, at Rio de Janeiro, the capital of the Brazil Republic, contains a report of the annual assembly of the Spiritual Federation, from which we learn that the federation held one hundred and fifty-seven meetings during the past year; that it has a special fund of mutual beneficence and another for relieving the necessitous; that it conducts a school of secondary instruction in which the French, English and Portuguese languages are taught, and that it has a library of one thousand volumes.

A Reasonable Inference.

Thought transference, conscious clairvoyance and psychometry, and all other phases of the super-normal activity of the higher self—or of superliminal perception—indicate the possibilities of the awakened human spirit, and are stepping stones to the knowledge of that science of the spirit which recognizes the reality of the presence and power of excarnate humanity. If sensitives, while cabined, cribbed, and confined in the five-sense body can consciously employ these wonderful psychic powers, it is only reasonable to anticipate that when they are unfleshed by death they will be able to enjoy the exercise of their faculties with still greater freedom and success.

Phantom Animals a Reality.

The "Occult Review" for October contains several stories relating to apparitions of animals. The editor, in his "Notes of the Month," mentions the case of an apparition of a huge black dog, which, from the name of the man who first saw it, was known in the neighborhood as "Spalding's dog." The narrative is quoted from a book entitled "Ghostly Visitors," by "Spectre Stricken," to which the late Rev. Stainton Moses (M. A. Oxon) wrote an introduction stating that on inquiry "he found that the stories are authentic reports of actual fact." This book is in the library of the London Spiritualist Alliance.

In a further article on "More Glimpses of the Unseen," Mr. R. B. Span refers to the instance of ghostly dogs being seen and heard, recorded in "The Alleged Haunting of B—— House," by Miss Goodrich-Freer and the Marquis of Bute, and to the appearance of the phantom forms of a rabbit and a badger in the home of John Wesley at Epworth. Another "animal like a rabbit" was seen by Mr. Span's brother in the drawing-room of a house they used to occupy; it seemed to "run from under the sofa, across the room, and disappear into the wall," where there was no visible opening by which a real animal could have escaped from the room.

In a letter to the editor of the 'Occult Review,' Mrs. Spoer (formerly Miss Goodrich-Freer) relates some interesting experiences in answer to a question which had been raised as to whether there are ghosts of odors. It had been stated in a previous issue that the smell of stables and tobacco still persisted (to the psychically impressionable) on the spot where Queen Elizabeth's hunting stables had stood. Mrs. Spoer says that on one occasion she was asked to reconstruct the figure of some celestial buildings, and for that purpose was left alone in an open field near them. The scene of a celebration of the mass, with processions and music, was re-enacted before her eyes, but during the whole time—some fifteen or twenty minutes—she was "annoyed and sickened by the overwhelming smell of heated animals and neglected stables. It afterwards transpired that a private chapel, which stood on this spot, had been wantonly desecrated by Presbyterian soldiery, who had crowded it with their chargers." Mrs. Spoer also reverts to the phenomena at B—— House, saying:

"The owners, our predecessors, and ourselves, were all disturbed by the presence—ghostly, telepathic, what you will—of dogs all over the house. One of our dogs roused me constantly by her terror, and on one occasion I saw the paws of a black spaniel resting on a table. Many also heard steps and movements of the dogs alleged to have belonged to a former owner and destroyed at his death, and which, with their master, are said by dozens of persons during the last forty years to have haunted the house. The widow and sons, as well as the steward of the late owner, spoke to us frequently of the overpowering smell of dogs in the entrance hall, which we interpreted as the particular manner in which they received the telepathic impact, which, in the case of others, differently constituted, was otherwise externalized."

"Externalized telepathic impact," or what you will; the facts by any other name are just as interesting.

Life After Death Comprehensively Illustrated.

A very remarkable utterance by a German philosopher of the last century has just been made accessible once more to the English-reading public. This is Fechner's famous essay "On Life After Death," which originally appeared in 1835, and has been four times reprinted in German. An English edition was brought out in 1882, and has now been re-issued by the Open Court Publishing Company, of Chicago, and by Kegan Paul, Trench, Truebner and Co., Limited, of London (price 3s. 6d.). The author, Gustav Theodor Fechner, was born in Silesia in 1801, and was Professor of Physics at Leipzig University. He was the originator of modern psychological science, for he introduced exact methods of measurement and experimental observation, and discovered what is known as Fechner's Law as regards the relation between sensation and impression. Some of his works are humorous and purposely fantastic, but the one now under consideration forms the outline of a serious philosophical treatise which he called "Zend-Avesta, or the Things of Heaven and the Hereafter."

The little book on "Life After Death" is intensely spiritual in tone, authough the author attached little importance to phenomena as proofs of survival, and deprecated the appeal to this class of evidence. His argument was drawn chiefly from the trend of human development, comparing the birth into a higher life with the birth of the infant into this world of physical light and human inter-relation, saying:

"In the first stage (before birth) man lives in the dark, alone; in the second, he lives associated with, yet separated from his fellow-men, in a light reflected from the surface of things; in the third, his life, interwoven with the life of other spirits, is a higher life in the highest of spirits, with the power of looking to the bottom of finite things."

Though Fechner deprecates relying on phenomena, he fully admits spirit influence, saying that thoughts or moods coming into our minds are "the influence of spirits entering into us, thinking and acting in us from centers different from our own," such influence being more striking in clairvoyance or mental disorder, when we are passive under it. The higher spirits are bonds of moral tendency between those in whom they act, and sometimes whole nations are swayed by a single idea. The real meeting between the living and the dead, says Fechner, is in the memory of the living; "to direct our attention to the dead is to attract their attention towards us." Further:

"Whatever wakens the memory of the dead is a means of calling them to our side. At every festival arranged to commemorate them, they rise; round every statue which we erect in their honor, they float; to every song celebrating their noble acts, they listen."

The life after death is beautifully described, and stress is laid on the close fellowship between kindred spirits, and with those who have been their inspirers during earth life:

"Spirits united by their mutual ownership of some element or idea of the true, the beautiful, or the good, will remain united by this forever, sharing the same spiritual property. They will grow together into larger spiritual organisms, and as the roots of all individual ideas are in general ideas, and of these again in more general and universal ideas, so at last will all spirits be united, in wonderful organization, with the greatest of spirits, with God. Thus the spiritual world, in its perfection, may be likened to a living tree of spirits, with its roots in the earth and its crown reaching throughout the heavens."

The wonderful play of higher perceptions, to which we shall awake on the death of the body, is fascinatingly set forth, and so is the idea of interblended spheres, which, to the higher consciousness, are distinguished as we read the different sets of lines in a crossed letter. Sleep, the larger spiritual body, and the occasional "rifts in the otherwise closed door between this world and the next," are discussed in rapid, lucid, and convincing phrases. Phantoms are described as "hallucinations of the living, but, at the same time, real manifestations of the dead." If we believed that "in God we live and move and have our being," "we should look upon our own life as part of God's eternal life, and should consider the height of our future life above this present life as a higher step within God," enabling us to "comprehend the great whole of which we only form a part." This is the mystical conception of existence expounded with scientific precision.

The New Mediumship.

Mr. Edward J. Bates, in an article on "The New Mediumship," in The Progressive Thinker of September 1, protests against the continued exercise of trance mediumship and asks, "Why should the tenant of the body, the "I," have to continually move out of its house in order to accommodate a transient lodger?" and urges a better way—the way of the new mediumship—in which, without the loss of the consciousness of the medium, or inconvenience of any kind, the spirit will be able to make himself known.

The "New Mediumship," as Mr. Bates calls it, seems to be the attainment of the sensitive of such a condition of thought control that he can at will suspend his thoughts, while still retaining consciousness, and then become receptive and responsive to the thoughts and suggestions of the spirits who are sympathetically, or psychically related to him. This, Mr. Bates calls "the way of liberation." He says he does not wish to condemn the methods of the past and the present, but, "as they give rise to obsession and submersion of individuality," he thinks it is time that mediums should know that there is another and a better way of spirit control—through the mentality rather than through the nerves. "Spiritual circles," he says, "are not meant to endure for ever. Advanced teachers will understand the new mediumship and will gladly practice it," and then "mediums will be once more called by their rightful names—seers and prophets." In conclusion, Mr. Bates says:

"Let us widen the gulf between the extremes of mediumship, obsession and inspiration, by discarding that method of the nineteenth century known as trance, and in conscious suspension of thought receive the wisdom of our celestial teachers and give it forth again uncolored by a sordid nature and an impure heart."

It seems to us that Mr. Bates is in error in calling this the "New Mediumship," for there are many sensitives both in this country and in America who have been, for years, both speaking and giving clairvoyant descriptions under spirit influence, or guidance, while in a conscious condition. Neither is it true that trance mediumship necessarily leads to obsession and the loss of individuality. The fact is that trance mediumship, when carefully exercised, is beneficial and educational—mentally strengthening and spiritually inspiring—to the medium. How can it be otherwise when wise spirits co-operate with earnest and receptive mediums? Rightly used, unconscious mediumship leads up to conscious spiritual influx. But great care is needed in this direction, as in others, for the fact remains that the "outward and visible signs" of the presence, power, identity, and intelligent independent operations of spirit people are still indispensable. The world still needs evidence of a scientific kind, and Spiritualism claims to supply that need. Proofs of spirit action and identity are difficult to obtain at all times, and it is not well or wise to neglect, or to seek to close, any of the avenues along which the spirits may travel to give us demonstrations of their existence.

To those Spiritualists who have had satisfactory evidences through phenomenal mediumship, and who protest in favor of "normal," "new," or "higher" mediumship, we would say: Go up higher, as far as you please; grow in spirituality, intuition, inspiration, conscious self-unfoldment and response to "thought vibrations" from "master minds," all that you possibly can if such seems good to you, but do not ignore, despise, or deride the phenomenal evidences of spirit presence and identity which mean so much and are so necessary to others, and which, at one time, doubtless, were so necessary to you. The need of the world is still the same. Materialism and disbelief still demand "signs and wonders," and other evidences.

CHEER UP!

Cheer up! The rose is redder
Than the ones we saw last year;
The lark's gay song is sweeter
And happier to hear;
The grass is getting brighter,
And fairer yet to see—
The world is growing better
Than it ever used to be.

Cheer up! The sky is bluer
Than it was a year ago;
The very smiles are gladder,
And have a richer glow;
The raining and the sunshine
Are helping you and me—
The world is getting better
Than it ever used to be.

Cheer up! The rose is sweeter
The birds have newer songs;
We find more things to please us,
And dream of fewer wrongs.
There's always lots of honey,
So let's be like the bee—
The world is growing better
For folks like you and me.

MRS. IDA LEWIS BENTLEY.

All remember the charming stories (founded on facts) written by Mrs. Ida L. Lewis, while a resident of Bethel, Vt. Her name has been changed so it now reads, IDA LEWIS BENTLEY, now a resident of No. 323 W. Twenty-third street, Los Angeles, Cal. In changing her name she has lost none of her spiritual and intellectual vigor, but had the same augmented by genial companionship and surroundings. We expect soon to have another story from this gifted lady. Her writings are always read with great interest.

A General Lament.

Churches disbanding, church buildings being converted into theaters, machine and work-shops, some into tenement houses, and a general wail in the midst of unexampled prosperity that contributions are falling off as never before, not sufficient to meet current expenses; whilst the preachers are deserting their pulpits and engaging in other professions, or are being expelled for heresy. Such is the general lament of churchmen from all quarters.

A fellow feeling is said to make people "wondrous kind," so the most antagonistic Christian faiths are forming alliances to oppose Spiritualism and Agnosticism, which it is claimed cause the deep distress. Their romancers are projecting all manner of devices, hoping through the aid of some of them to regain their declining position. Stories it would shame a decent devil to repeat, they are relating to the prejudice of their innocent opponents, while those of a commercial character as prestidigitators, assume to be Spiritual mediums, and claim spirits are operators.

But fraud and trickery are not new accomplishments among our opponents, for Mosheim, the ablest, the most conscientious and truthful of the ecclesiastical historians, in his century 4, part 2, chap. 3, sec. 17, of the Christians of that period, says:

"The interests of virtue and true religion suffered grievously by two monstrous errors which were almost universally adopted in this century, and became a source of innumerable calamities and mischiefs in the succeeding ages. The first of these maxims was, that IT WAS AN ACT OF VIRTUE TO DECEIVE AND LIE, WHEN BY THAT MEANS THE INTERESTS OF THE CHURCH MIGHT BE PROMOTED; AND THE SECOND, EQUALLY HORRIBLE, WAS, ERRORS IN RELIGION, WHEN MAINTAINED AND ADHERED TO AFTER PROPER ADMONITION, WERE PUNISHABLE WITH CIVIL PENALTIES AND CORPOREAL TORTURES."

Such was Christianity during its early centuries, as told by its most reliable historian. Subsequently they have sacrificed millions of human lives in propagating their cruel creeds, and yet the marked decline, everywhere visible, denotes they must change front, denounce old-time dogmas, and reconstruct their creeds along new lines else ultimately disappear from history.

The Onward March.

The new religious law of Spain provides for state support of any member of a religious order desiring to renounce the vows taken; provides for the state to enter monasteries without ecclesiastical sanction; provides that no order shall hold property in excess of the objects for which organized; provides that no religious order shall receive any donations, bequests or legacies; and, if any such orders engage in trade, they shall be taxed the same as other business. This from the benighted country of the Inquisition certainly is remarkable. Thus says the Appeal to Reason.

Kings persecute persons, priests opinion. Without kings, men must be safe; and without priests, minds must be free.—Lytton.

Teaching Not What They Think.

The Progressive Thinker, in its issue of November 11, 1905, published the statement of Bishop Grafton, of Fond du Lac, Wis., in which he said:

"We of the clergy have been made by the church her ministers to teach, not what we think is true, but what she puts into our mouths to teach."

Reference has subsequently been made to this ruling of Bishop Grafton many times in these columns, but no one has controverted his position, though a whole year has passed, hence it may be received as a sort of common law governing all the churches. The preachers, then, are paid attorneys to speak for the church, the Bible is their law book, and their dictum on church affairs must be received as the production of an authorized attorney, not what they think is true.

The American Bible League is holding a three days' Conference in this city as we write. Prominent clergymen from all parts of the country are in attendance, and "a searching inquiry into the inspiration of the Old Testament" is going on. The allegory of Adam and Eve formed a part of the discussion, followed by the inquiry of "History or Myth?"

The great effort of the assembled clergy seemed to be to controvert the claims of the "higher critics." The assertion was made: "If these attacks are allowed to continue they will undermine Christianity."

Prof. Geo. F. Wright, of Oberlin Theological Seminary, is reported to have said:

"For us to permit the modern critics practically to erase the record of the Old Testament and substitute for it the vaporings of the much vaunted "spirit of 'modern times' would be as absurd and suicidal as for the keepers of the Sistine Chapel to permit the critics of the present day to erase from the wall the matchless figures of Michael Angelo and substitute in their place the vagaries of the impressionistic school."

Prof. Wright then declared, "many of the stories of the Old Testament most frequently received with incredulity are in full accord with physical conditions."

Of course the sun stood still for the space of one day; Samson's strength was in his hair. He caught three hundred foxes, tied their tails together two and two, with fire-brands between, and they ran off into the fields of standing grain and burned them; and Nebudchadnezzar really fed on grass like an ox for seven years; and there was a time when the waters covered the whole earth with the highest mountains, and all life was destroyed save that of a favored few.

All these impossible events and a thousand others, according to Prof. Wright, "were in full accord with physical conditions."

The churches have employed those preachers to pettifog their case, and this accounts for their silly logic. No man of brains can honestly and truthfully take these positions, and only ignorance will accept them when vouched for by the pulpit.

The attorney who instructed his student when he had no case, and the evidence was all against him, to exhaust his wit, genius, eloquence, and vituperative talent in showing the opposing counsel is an ignoramus, is in point. Indeed, instead of replying to our criticisms on the Bible, they parade the doings of the fake mediums as the acts of Spiritualists, and argue that all is false and vile because these tricksters are such.

In the light of Bishop Grafton's statement, we can understand how clergymen can stultify themselves, and occupy such absurd positions, but cannot on any other hypothesis.

Prof. B. J. Hobson of the McCormick Theological Seminary, in discoursing on "The Battle for Supernatural Christianity," said: "Any man who accepts the stupendous miracle of the incarnation, [that is a God being born of woman and clothed with flesh] should not balk at any other miracle simply because it is miraculous." No, no, a person who can swallow such a fake is a fit subject for cheese-cloth mediums to operate on.

Valuable Geologic Find.

A news dispatch from El Paso, Tex., of October 30, relates the fact that the geologists have made the discovery in Texas, showing the great desert in that state was once a jungle, inhabited by wild beasts, and they fix the period from 12,000 to 25,000 years ago. We quote:

"Walter E. Koch, a fellow of the Geological Society of London, and G. B. Richardson of the United States geological survey, in excavations here, have unearthed jawbones of two tapirs, supposed to have existed here 25,000 years ago, and an elephant's tooth, from an animal which probably lived about 12,000 years ago. The discovery of the bones proves, the geologists say, that this great desert region was once a jungle. Tapirs live on roots along river banks and elephants would not have been here unless it had been marshy."

While a student of geology many years ago, in conversation with a preacher, we controverted the Bible teaching that this earth is less than 6,000 years old, by citing evidences of fossil remains that indicated life had been on the globe millions of years. The good Gospel teacher insisted "God made those fossils, and surrounded them with indications of great antiquity to confound the wise." But such logic failed to convert the student to such a God-dishonoring theory.

An Error in Date and Number.

The printer made a serious blunder in correcting date and number of last week's paper. The date should have been Nov. 10, and the number 885, instead of "Nov. 15," and "number 880."

Lessons Come Thick and Fast.

They Are Furnished by a Gang that Ought to Be Behind Prison Bars, Where They Would Have Time to Reflect on Their Condition, and Learn to Realize this Important Fact, That Artificial Toggery and Bogus Spirits Have No Place in Spiritualism.

MRS. ELSIE REYNOLDS, OF LOS ANGELES, CAL., HAS AGAIN BEEN COMPLETELY EXPOSED, AND HOW MANY MORE SUCH PORTRAYALS WILL HAVE TO BE MADE BEFORE SHE IS LANDED BEHIND THE PRISON BARS, REMAINS TO BE SEEN. THE FIRST TIME MR. MAYBEE WAS DISCOVERED POSING AS A SPIRIT, DRESSED IN ARTIFICIAL TOGGERY, HE WAS ARRESTED AND SENTENCED TO THE WORKHOUSE FOR NINETY DAYS. THAT WILL BE THE FINAL OUTCOME, NO DOUBT, WITH MRS. REYNOLDS IF SHE CONTINUES HER NEFARIOUS WORK.

SPIRITUALISTS MUST REMEMBER THAT THEIR CAUSE IS BY THE OUTSIDE WORLD TO A GREAT EXTENT JUDGED BY ITS WEAKEST LINKS, AND IN MANY RESPECTS ITS ETHICS IS CONSIDERED ON A PAR WITH THE ARTIFICIAL TOGGERY USED BY MANY MATERIALIZING MEDIUMS WHEN PRESENTING THEIR BOGUS "SPIRITS".

THERE IS A GANG OF MATERIALIZING MEDIUMS, ROTTEN TO THE CORE, IN THIS CITY AND ELSEWHERE WHO CANNOT, UNDER ANY CIRCUMSTANCES, GIVE A GENUINE SPIRIT MATERIALIZATION, AND THEY HAVE BEEN INSTRUMENTAL IN FORMULATING PUBLIC OPINION, AND EVOLVING ETHICS IN HARMONY WITH THE ARTIFICIAL TOGGERY WHICH THEY USE IN EVERY SEANCE. IT SHOULD BE A LESSON TO SPIRITUALISTS EVERYWHERE, THAT BY THE OUTSIDE PUBLIC THE ETHICS OF SPIRITUALISM IS REGARDED TO A GREAT EXTENT AS ON A LEVEL WITH THE GANG THAT PRESENTS BOGUS TESTS AND BOGUS SPIRITS.

IS IT NOT EXCEPTIONALLY STRANGE, SPIRITUALISTS, THAT IF MRS. REYNOLDS POSSESSES ANY GENUINE MEDIUMISTIC POWERS WHATEVER, WHY IS IT THAT WHENEVER ONE OF HER "MATERIALIZED SPIRITS" IS GRABBED IT PROVES TO BE HERSELF ALONE DRESSED IN PARAPHERNALIA EXPRESSLY PREPARED BY HER FOR THE OCCASION—THE MANIFESTATIONS BEING FALSE THROUGHOUT—FRAUDULENT TO THE CORE, DRAGGING DOWN THE ETHICS OF SPIRITUALISM TO HER OWN MOST DESPICABLE LEVEL. HER EXPOSURES ARE PUBLISHED BY THE SECULAR PRESS IN EVERY SECTION OF THE COUNTRY—READ BY MILLIONS UPON MILLIONS, AND THE READERS FORM THEIR OPINION OF OUR CAUSE FROM SUCH MATERIAL FURNISHED.

AND AGAIN, IT IS A FACT THAT OF THE FIFTY OR MORE MEDIUMS THAT HAVE BEEN EXPOSED, THE GRABBED SPIRIT HAS PROVED TO BE THE MEDIUM OR A CONFEDERATE EVERY TIME. THIS FACT AFFORDS FOOD FOR REFLECTION AMONG SPIRITUALISTS GENERALLY WHEN CONSIDERING THIS LATE EXPOSURE OF MRS. REYNOLDS.

SPIRITUALISTS, SHOULD REMEMBER, TOO, THAT THESE FAKES HAVE AN ORGAN IN CHICAGO WHICH EXPLOITS THE ROTTEN ELEMENT THAT HAS BEEN, AND IS NOW, BRINGING DISGRACE UPON OUR CAUSE. IT IS DRAGGING DOWN THE ETHICS OF SPIRITUALISM TO A LEVEL OF THE MONSTROSITIES WHO USE ARTIFICIAL TOGGERY TO MAKE BOGUS SPIRITS.

A "spirit" who materialized in decidedly fleshy form, and a "medium" whose trance abruptly ended with the beginning of a merry free fight, were features of a seance at No. 743 South Broadway last night. A pair of plain-clothes policemen and two members of the Los Angeles Anti-Fakers Association gave those in the audience the worth of the 50-cent pieces, paid for appearance of their deceased relatives.

MRS. ELSIE REYNOLDS WAS THE CENTER OF A PANTING, FIGHTING GROUP, WHEN, PLAYING THE ROLE OF AN EXPOSER'S DEAD MOTHER, SHE WAS SEIZED. AFTER QUIET HAD BEEN RESTORED, THE OFFICERS HELD HER ON A BRILLIANTLY-LIGHTED STAGE, AND SHOWED HER TO THE AUDIENCE AS A FAKER.

Mrs. Reynolds says she is a "psychic medium," also several other things, intended to signify that she can talk with the departed and peer into the future. THIS "SEERESS" HAS MADE GOOD MONEY— GOOD ENOUGH TO EMPLOY A CROWD OF BURLY BOOSTERS. FOR, WHILE "BUSINESS" YIELDS GOOD RETURNS, THERE IS, WITH PEOPLE LIKE HER, EVER THE DANGER OF SUCH OCCURRENCES AS LAST EVENING'S. TO PREVENT THESE DENOUEMENTS THE BURLY ONES WATCH MEMBERS OF THE AUDIENCE CLOSELY. It so happened, however, that Officers Home and King, in plain clothes, weren't known to them. And King looks particularly unsophisticated.

King's Sad Story.

The president of the Anti-Fakers Association and the secretary of the organization helped the officers to lay the plot—in fact, they did much of the planning, knowing well with whom they had to cope. Equiped, as a result of these plans, with a letter of recommendation, which named him fictitiously, King took $1 the other day and went to No. 743 South Broadway. It is a somewhat pretentious old-time frame mansion, now used as a rooming-house. Mrs. Reynolds' sign adorns one of the apartments facing the street. She occupies rooms 1 and 2. To her went King with a sad story.

IT DEALT WITH A DEAD MOTHER AND A DEAD SISTER. ALL KING'S SISTERS LIVE AND HIS MOTHER IS DECIDEDLY IN GOOD HEALTH. To make things look good King had thrown into his story a missing will. It had dropped from sight, this piece of parchment, just after the sister died in Sacramento. King had missed the deathbed scene by five minutes. And he wanted, among other things, to know what were his sister's last words; also who had the will.

Now it is the custom of fraudulent mediums of all sorts to draw on the victim and glean from him all his family secrets. Usually this is done with a view to future profit. King had been told of this and he let the missing will, the dead sister, and then the deceased mother drop out one by one during the course of a talk with Mrs. Reynolds. The "medium" SWALLOWED EVERYTHING, EVEN THE WILL. She comforted King and told him to come again.

Last night King came back. A little later Home, who looks too innocent to be a policeman, entered the room and dropped a hard-earned 50-cent coin into the doorkeeper's receptive palm. The others of the party also attended.

"Spirits" Arrive.

The lights went dim. Mrs. Reynolds went into a cabinet. She had a trance. When she was well along whisperings started. To the uninitiated, particularly if he have a tinge of superstition and a few edged nerves, there is nothing more productive of chills up and down the backbone than whisperings in a darkened room. And Mrs. Reynolds, the police say, is a good ventriloquist. This continued several minutes. "Cappers" in the audience asked for departed spirits, and in quick response came vague, sibilant callings.

In the center of the dusky stage sounded faint rustlings. Of a sudden came each time something white. It seemed to grow out of the darkness; to take form; then to show—a thing in robes. Sometimes it was a woman, sometimes a little girl.

"Oh, send me little Effie, please," had come from the audience when this last appearance was manifested. 'Little Effie" is a member of Mrs. Reynold's stock company of departed spirits. The lady kneels on the stage when she plays "Little Effie." Incidentally a number of local celebrities came also.

And once there came a little baby.

Now when a mother asks to see the spirit of her departed babe there is, to put it mildly, something pathetic about her eager joy in the manifestation. When a man, be he ever so caloused, knows that the bereaved woman who moves awe-stricken to the stage and there kneels to kiss the dead child's ethereal self, is touching her lips to the phosphorescently-painted knee of Mrs. Elsie Reynolds, the thing is saddening.

These are samples of what happens at Mrs. Reynolds' meetings. Such things took place last night.

THEN KING ASKED TO SEE HIS "DEAD" MOTHER AND HIS "DEPARTED" SISTER. THEY CAME WHEN MRS. REYNOLDS GOT TIME TO EMERGE THROUGH THE DARK CURTAINS. THE SISTER TOLD KING THAT THINGS WOULD COME OUT ALL RIGHT. HE NEED ONLY WAIT. THE PROPER AUTHORITIES WOULD FIX UP THE WILL AFFAIR TO THE UTTER DEMORALIZATION OF HIS ENEMIES. KING SUBSIDED, APPARENTLY SATISFIED.

The secretary of the Anti-Fakirs Association asked for his mother's spirit. He was near the stage. When the "spirit" appeared the secretary leaped toward the platform. At that moment someone with no particularly over-developed bump of reverence got hold of the "spirit." Mrs. Reynolds —it was she faking—struggled in a very fleshly manner and tumult reigned. Through the uproar came the "medium's" shrill voice.

"Well, they can't arrest me, I took no money."

Her mind, trained by three previous exposes of this sort in Los Angeles, had known to the fact that the California statutes do a lot to protect her ilk.

Things were happening fast at this particular juncture. The burly ones on Mrs. Reynold's staff were making for the stage to rescue their employer. King, Home, the two officers of the Anti-Fakirs' Association, and one or two other undeluded ones, had their hands full. While the fight lasted one of the "cappers" swung at Home and hit a partner. The man went down with a thud. Then the officers brought about quiet. They also turned on the lights.

THEY TOOK MRS. REYNOLDS OUT TO THE CENTER OF THE STAGE. THERE THEY SHOWED HER TO THE AUDIENCE AND TOLD THE PEOPLE HOW SHE HAD FOOLED THEM.

The Anti-Fakers Association is working hard toward drafting a bill which will be presented to the next legislature. This bill will prohibit such frauds as are now practiced in the state under the name of Spiritualism. At present the laws do nothing in this direction. As a result sorrowful but foolish women and men with much less sense than they ought to have, pay hard-earned money into the palms of people who would be arrested in other places were they to practice what they practice here. Los Angeles has become a Mecca for such fakers, and their signs adorn nearly every rooming-house in the downtown district, save only a few which refuse to tolerate them.—Los Angeles Daily Times, Nov. 1, 1906.

The Los Angeles Herald says, in connection with the exposure:

G. R. Holmes, a second detective, produced a star to show his authority and announced that he would protect the woman.

THE CROWD CALMED DOWN AND FROM OUT THE BILLOWS OF WHITE MRS. REYNOLDS SLOWLY EMERGED. AS SHE EMERGED SHE TUCKED THE SPIRIT ROBES INSIDE HER DRESS AND BEGAN DEMANDING "WHO DONE IT," BETWEEN GASPS OF BREATH.

"Oh, I will be ruined, that's what I will be," she said. "If the newspapers get hold of this I don't know what I will do.

"It was that man Hadley of Kansas City, who has been coming to me all the time. He brought his wife tonight and has been telling me about his little boy."

The newspaper woman—for the time being "Mrs. Hadley"—moved to the other side of the room before the searching gaze of the irate Mrs. Reynolds fell upon her.

By this time a police whistle had summoned other members of the force and members of the anti-fakers' society waiting outside, but no arrests were made.

"They were not gentlemen or they would at least have allowed the medium to get out of the control," was what one woman, still credulous, said, but neither Dr. Monroe, nor Effie, the PRESIDING SPIRITS OF THE CABINET, COULD MAKE A SPIRIT OUT OF THE FLESH AND CHEESE CLOTH IN THE POSSESSION OF MRS. REYNOLDS.

HE HAS NO USE FOR RELIGION.

Yes, From the Very Nature of Things He Has Religion.

To the Editor:—The article entitled "Thinkers of the World, Unite," strikes the right note, but don't omit to take in the workers, too. Likewise Greer's letter and Journal article also pleased me. For these purposes I visited Chicago last June but failed to obtain satisfactory results.

I am surprised that you Spiritualists who claim to stand on the skirmish line of progressive thought, spiritually and mentally, are so lame in the back when you talk of that old relic of heathen mythology, the Christian religion. Don't you ever again admit that Spiritualism bears any relation to it whatever. Call religion by what it ever has, and does now, stand for—the emblem of faith, fear, ignorance and slavery. Religion is now what it has ever been, the mother of ignorance, the father of despotism. Its progeny are slaves, mentally and physically.

When you talk about Bryan in politics, place him where he belongs. America is not a Christian nation. Americans are thinkers. What has religion done for them. It has piled fagots to burn the world's best and bravest thinkers. Religionists are not now but they demand that no man shall be a candidate for an office unless he is pious. Infidels made this country and they will not now surrender it to religious bigots.

L. STEBBINS.

North Platte, Neb.

The world is moving on certain well defined lines, and it seems as if the attempt to get away therefrom has not in all respects met with success. It is well, however, to get the world out of a rut when the same does not lead in the right direction, or proves detrimental to the best interests of mankind. It will never do, however, to be too radical, nor is it ever wise to be too conservative. It is never the mark of wisdom to reject anything because it is exceedingly musty with a venerable age, and owes its existence to the misty past—back thousands of years.

THE TRUTH IS NEVER ANCIENT —it is always young, efficient, and productive of good, and should at all times be carefully nurtured and sustained.

Religion dates back thousands of years, and at times its pathway has been marked with every conceivable crime; rivers of blood have flowed in its name and it has been guilty of every bad act that can be named. Its hand is red with cruelty towards millions of victims, and at times its appearance has been hideous in the extreme, presenting the appearance of a fiend; but divested of its imperfections, and dressed in new and modern apparel, and put in presentable shape, IT IS ALL RIGHT.

It was only a few days ago that we discovered that we had religion, and we were greatly amused and surprised thereat at first, but could not reject the important fact, if we had tried—it has indissolubly fastened itself upon us and we can not get rid of it, however much we might desire to do so. We discovered our religion by consulting the Century Dictionary, for it is defined as follows: "Sense of obligation—conscientiousness—sense of duty." Now, we have a "sense of obligation." We have also developed in a remarkable degree our "conscientiousness" and also have a high "sense of duty," and hence we have got Religion and got it badly, and cannot get rid of it if we desired to do so.

Under the same definition Professor Underwood, Professor Lockwood, Mr. J. S. Loveland, Mrs. Clara Watson, Mr. L. Stebbins, Hon. R. T. Van Horn, Dr. G. W. Brown, and hundreds of others we might name—all of them have got Religion, and it is fastened on them, and has come to stay. Brother Stebbins, by no system of logic can you get rid of it—it will go with you all through life.

All of you having Religion, why not make the most of it? Why, we rejoiced when we found out that we had religion, and laughed heartily, too, and we have no doubt many others have rejoiced also that they have found the precious panacea, especially our good sister, Mrs. Clara Watson, and the eminent Professors Lockwood and Underwood.

The Educational Rights of Women.

The University of Pennsylvania, has just opened its doors to female students, who will receive the same education, and acquire the same degrees heretofore awarded males, but in separate departments. That is the Quaker way.

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER

We Remind you that the SPIRIT OF THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER NEVER SLEEPS! There is need of a WATCHMAN and WE ARE IN THE TOWER and ON DUTY for the best interest of TRUE SPIRITUALISM!

Another Announcement!

In Reference to the Remarkable Works of Andrew Jackson Davis.

A letter from Dr. Davis indicates that a change has been made in the price of a full set of his remarkable works. They will be furnished per set when republished at $20 instead of $30, as heretofore announced. There are thousands who ought to have a set of these books. Their publication at an early day depends on the number of subscribers that can be secured. His books are a fundamental part of Spiritualism; the history of Spiritualism can not be written without them.

O. F. Brand, of Faribault, Minn.; G. J. Willett, of Milwaukee, Wis.; and M. L. Sutton, of Port Chester, N. H., will each take a set. Spiritualists, aid in this grand work. Send in your names, and in the end get far more than value received for your money.

HE WANTS A SET.

There Should Be Hundreds of Spiritualists to Respond to the Call, and Thus Aid in Securing the Publication of Dr. Andrew Jackson Davis' Remarkable Works.

To the Editor:—You can put me down as one of the two hundred subscribers sought, to pay $30 [now reduced to $20] for one set of Andrew Jackson Davis' works, when again put into circulation. I regard it not only a privilege to assist in putting his valuable books into circulation again, but as a duty also. Some of his books ought to be in the home of every Spiritualist. I regard them as OUR BIBLES. They are invaluable to the wayfaring investigator into the mystic realms of life and destiny. They are FULL OF HELPFULNESS to the sorrowing during their dark hours. To many they have become a necessity for reference upon spiritual things. We need them more and more as the years go by. The "POUGHKEEPSIE SEER" has not labored in vain; his books are read in every country upon the globe. By the thoughtful he is regarded as the most reliable teacher upon spiritual things, and he is easily the most remarkable man both of ancient and modern times.

Know Them by Their Fruits.

When Lisbon was besieged by the Spanish in the fifteenth century such Portuguese as were captured were maimed. Their eyes were put out, their noses, lips or ears were cut off, their finger nails or fingers amputated, and in this miserable plight they were sent back into the city with the announcement that when it was taken all the defenders would be similarly treated.—Exchange.

This war between Spanish and Portuguese was a war between two Christian nations. Officers and soldiers, as well as government officials, were Christians. All expected advanced seats in the paradise of the blest, and the above is a truthful account of the way they fought, maimed and tortured each other. They imitated the God they worshiped, and exercised no mercy to the enemy. Their acts were paralleled by the Inquisitors in burning and torturing heretics. Indeed, they were but anticipating what priests taught God purposed to do with those who refused to believe in the saving grace of his son, so would torture them in burning flames forever. The actors found Bible authority in support of their demonical barbarity.

Barbarian cruelty was common in that age, as in fact it has been ever since Christians gained control of civil power. It was practiced long after the wars of the peninsula, and only ceased when the sacerdotal arm became powerless—not by the action of priest or prelate, but by the general diffusion of knowledge which the head of the church discouraged.

Now the priesthood claim Christianity was the great civilizer; that we owe everything to the church, whereas in truth we owe it nothing, it retarded science, and humanity has gained its present proud eminence in spite of its active opposition.

The great reformers of all the centuries found in the church their most inveterate foe. A reformer was classed with Infidels and Atheists. He was branded with false epithets, because his methods consisted of "being good and doing good," and not resting his hopes of heaven, by placing faith in one who failed of ability, notwithstanding his lament, to save himself.

Charged With Heresy for Declaring Physiological Truths.

Rev. Geo. C. Cox, of Cincinnati, is to be put on trial for heresy for disavowing belief in the virgin birth and bodily resurrection of Jesus. Instead of being declared a heretic for such utterances, identical with those of those of Rev. Dr. Cransey, of Rochester, N. Y., it should pass to his credit as evidence that he has a sane mind. Virgins ceased to be mothers when anatomists became familiar with sexual physiology; and bodily resurrection of the so-called dead took wings when Modern Spiritualism had birth.

WANTS A REFERENDUM.

A Proxy Delegate Makes an Important Suggestion to the Officers of the N. S. A.

A woman who is fully occupied with domestic duties and content with her family and neighborhood environments dislikes to be made a victim of public notoriety. I am going to ask you a question: Did I do right in voting for Los Angeles as the next meeting place for our National convention?

I am a Spiritualist and for that reason came to Chicago to attend the October meeting of our highest body. I came only as an individual, not being a member of any local or state society. On the morning of the second day I was asked if I would consent to sit in the convention as delegate for a society in a distant state, and accepted that position. At the closing business session on Friday night, presided over by the vice-president, Los Angeles had a majority of only six, of which I made one. Thinking the matter over in the quiet of home, I have been greatly worried over my part in that decision. I am able to recall quite a number of delegates known to me by sight, or name, who were not present when that vote was taken, some of them remaining in their seats in the large audience room to hear the finish of the evening's programme. How do I know that I really voted the wishes of the society in whose name I was seated? I never heard of its existence before, and do not know a single one of its officers and members. How many of the proxies then present had any instructions from those they represented about the next place of meeting? Was it not decided by individual impulse and preference rather than as official representatives of absent ones? Now I want to know if the officers of the National body can not submit this question of the next year's place for the convention to every auxiliary society direct and ask for the voice of each one thereon, and be governed thereby. Give them until a date named for forwarding their decision. I am not strongly in favor of Washington but prefer some city between there and Chicago. By some such plan no society would be tied by the vote in its name of some person it, in turn, never knew was in existence. I only want the will of those who have the good of the N. S. A. at heart. Is it too late to correct a possible mistake, or to emphatically confirm the wisdom of the choice made at Chicago? I should think all who with myself were "proxies" would prefer some such plan. Give us a referendum.

A PROXY DELEGATE.

ATTENTION, LYCEUM WORKERS.

To all lyceums and their noble band of workers, we send a loving greeting: We feel that in order to further the grand work begun by our friend and brother, Mr. John W. Ring, we must get into line, and be counted. I earnestly ask the secretary of each lyceum, or any society desirous of forming a lyceum, to write me fully the condition of their school—how many pupils, the average attendance, the text book used, the song book, and method of carrying on sessions. There are three standard Lyceum Guides—Andrew Jackson Davis's, Emma Rood Tuttle's and the British Manual. Which of these do you use? Tell me also who among your children are the best fitted as leaders and missionaries in lyceum work? I want to meet them, if only on paper. I want to know what is most needed, and what they can do. Let me hear from you soon.

What Is Charity? What Is Religion? What Is Brotherhood?

An Eloquent Address by Mrs. Helen L. P. Russegue, of Hartford, Conn., Delivered at Springfield, Mass., October 7, 1906.

"No man can attain to heights in wisdom without ministering to the needs of the hungry and the thirsty, without bettering the conditions that belong to the human family. Science has worked in this direction, and it is evolving lessons and manifestations that are inspiring the wonder of mankind. The world is ascending, the gates of heaven are opening to human conceptions, and Charity is that which helps, which does not bring forth the evils, the undeveloped conditions, into the glare of the sunlight, but is giving unto them the pure waters of divine wisdom, the love and strength by which they shall unfold the germs of good that are within, and they are unfolding to higher conceptions of truth.

"We enter the gardens of human life, and we find them filled with weeds; thorns and brambles surround us.

"What is our duty?

"Shall we simply cut them down?

"By no means, but the roots shall be removed, and the soil shall be improved. It shall be fed and nourished. It shall bring forth its legitimate fruit, and the world be fed from its products. The human mind is of the same character, upon a higher plane. It is in ignorance and darkness. The man who loves wisdom, love, life and intelligence, is he who is tilling the soil, who is cutting down the weeds of ignorance, who is destroying the brambles, and sowing the seeds of intelligence, helpfulness and brotherly love. This is Charity. Charity vaunteth not, but it gives to the world the best it has to give. It inspires you to know the needs that are everywhere about you, and to minister to them. It is not that which simply proclaims sorrow, but it is that which acts. It is the spirit which works everywhere; it is the power for good in the land."

Invocation.

Thou Spirit of Love, and Mercy, and Justice, Thou who 'art manifest everywhere, and in all things, we offer our thanksgiving for all Thy bounties. We praise Thee if we exalt our nature, and are uplifted in aspiration. We Thank Thee for the light and beauty that colors all the world. We thank Thee for all that is true and good, for the great light of divine truth that tells us of immortality. We thank Thee for the knowledge of the angel world—for the knowledge of conscious life beyond the change called death—for the light of wisdom that is continually unfolding to our comprehension, that makes us ready for the coming day. Our Father, whose love is so beneficent, shining through all nature, through all human aspiration, through human affections, reflecting itself upon all life, we find everywhere manifestations of Thy presence, hearing Thy voice in all that is good, and true, and beautiful, and we thank Thee, our Father, that the doorways between earth and the next plane of existence are open, and that the children of the higher life are passing to and fro between this and the life beyond. For every message of truth, for every word of inspiration, for every light of wisdom that is kindled upon the altars of the human soul, we thank Thee, our Father. We thank you, ministering angels, and may human hearts be near us, human minds be opened to the consciousness, human intellect be free to accept the light of wisdom, from where'er it may come.

I will read a part of the 13th chapter of 1st Corinthians, (beginning at the first verse):

Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass, and a tinkling cymbal.

And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing.

And though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing.

Charity suffereth long, and is kind; charity envieth not; charity vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up,

Doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil;

Rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth;

Beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things.

Charity never faileth; but whether there be prophecies, they shall fail; whether there be tongues they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away. For we know in part, and we prophesy in part.

But when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away.

When I was a child, I spake as a child, I understood as a child, I thought as a child; but when I became a man I put away childish things.

Poem Entitled "In a Hundred Years."

"The world will be a better place,
In a hundred years.
We will have a brighter, happier race
In a hundred years.
The ills of old, the worn-out lies,
The ancient wrongs, like mist that flies,
Will melt in the rays of a new sunrise
In a hundred years.

"There will be more substance and less of form
In a hundred years.
More love will keep the world's heart warm
In a hundred years.
The laws will aim at the common good,
And religion will be a brotherhood,
While toil will be honored as it should,
In a hundred years.

There will be less misery and less wrong
In a hundred years.
There will be more of gladness and of more song,
In a hundred years.
Baptized in a new humanity,
Each man to man will a helper be,
While the toiling slaves will all be free,
In a hundred years."

I shall take for my subject this afternoon, "What Is Charity, What Is Religion, What Is Brotherhood."

Charity is the outgrowth of spirituality. As the world advances in spiritual perception, in higher conceptions of right, of the closer relationships existing between human beings, Charity advances. Nearer and nearer the world is coming to that great light that shall illumine all the future—the light of divine love, divine truth, divine helpfulness, which implies a larger spiritual unfolding of the race. Through all the ages that have passed away, definitions of the conditions of human nature have gradually enlarged, gradually expanded, gradually embraced a larger territory of human experiences; they have unfolded the nature of mankind. They have developed the aspirations of human intellect. They have brought nations in closer kinship. And we have formed in each individual the corresponding evolution of a higher, brighter, and sweeter thought, one for another. Charity means the recognition of the highest good, the cognizance of that which is best in human nature.

The moment we seek for that which is truest, highest and holiest in human life, that moment we begin to recognize the causes which underlie the undeveloped mass. We recognize what we term Ego as an undeveloped condition incident to the unfolding nature of man. Were there no such thing in the universe as development, as evolution, and were there no such thing as progress in human life, there would be no need for all the beautiful, loving, sweet characteristics that belong to human nature. We are evolving a closer semblance to the divine life. We are unfolding a closer kinship in our own natures to that which is good. Everywhere there is springing up that desire on the part of men and women for a better condition in life, for the removal of what is called sin, for a higher development of intellect.

Education is desired more today than ever before, and and is presenting a broader platform upon which humanity may stand. Education is involving all there is in life. Its channels are running in every direction. It belongs to the lowest condition and to the highest.

Science is no longer soaring among the stars, and leaving the incidentals of human experience everywhere about us undeveloped. To-day, in order that we may comprehend the greatness, the majesty, the divinity of life, it becomes needful that we come into relationship with the little things that underlie human life, the lesser conditions that belong to the human mind; that we come in contact with that which is beneath as well as that which is above that has proven the lesson that spirits have taught since they have come, uttering their experience, their wisdom, to the human family, THAT NO MAN UPON THE HEIGHTS CAN STAND INDEPENDENTLY OVER THOSE WITHIN THE VALLEY.

No man can attain to heights in wisdom without ministering to the needs of the hungry and the thirsty, without bettering the conditions that belong to the human family. Science has worked in this direction, and it is evolving lessons and manifestations that are inspiring the wonder of mankind. The world is ascending, the gates of heaven are opening to human conception, and charity is that which helps, which does not bring forth the evils, the undeveloped conditions, into the glare of the sunlight, but is giving unto them the pure waters of divine wisdom, the love and strength by which shall unfold the germs of good that are within, and they are unfolding to higher conceptions of truth.

We enter the gardens of human life, and we find them filled with weeds, thorns and brambles surround us.

What is our duty?

Shall we simply cut them down?

By no means, but the roots shall be removed, and the soil shall be improved It shall be fed and nourished. It shall bring forth its legitimate fruit, and the world be fed from its products. The human mind is of the same character, upon a higher plane. It is in ignorance and darkness. The man who loves wisdom, love, life, and intelligence, is he who is tilling the soil, who is cutting down the weeds of ignorance, who is destroying the brambles, and sowing the seeds of intelligence, helpfulness and brotherly love. This is charity. Charity vaunteth not, but it gives to the world the best it has to give. It inspires you to know the needs that are everywhere about you, and to minister to them. It is not that which simply proclaims sorrow, but it is that which acts. It is the spirit which works everywhere; it is the power for good in the land.

What is religion?

Religion is the fire that is kindled upon the altar of the human life, that man sees and believes that which is best, that he can apprehend its value.

Religion is a light that is leading man on up the heights; it has not burned to ashes yet, but it is kindling its fires along the way until the world is brightened, purified, ennobled, enriched and glorified, because it has unfolded a larger spiritual life.

Religion has accomplished its work along the way in the past, but no one phase of belief has accomplished everything. No one formulated religion has embodied all that is true, no one manifestation has encompassed all that is divine, because religion, like life, is enlarging, growing, progressing, and to-day the aspects of religion have changed so materially, that he who lived a hundred years ago would hardly recognize the fruits that were to be taken from the tree of wisdom, to be partaken of by human men and women.

Religion has mingled with science, it has grown up with the thought of man, and to-day, he who accomplishes the most for his fellow-men, is the most religious man in the community. He who conceives of that which shall make better conditions for business, is he who is more cherished than others. He who presents to the world such manifestations as uplift the world, enlarges its experience, unfolds its possibilities, multiplies its needs, and points the way to the supply by which those needs shall still increase, is the most religious man that you may know. He who accomplishes the most for the benefit of a city, who prepares the best sanitation for the city, who ministers to the general health, who uplifts the standard of morality, who gives the best that can be given to anybody, to any community is the most religious man in your midst. His work may not be labeled, "Thus saith the Lord," but it is labeled, "God is Love."

Religion is not what we believe; it is what we do. It enters into our activities; it belongs to our duties, to our accomplishments.

I may desire to know something of astronomy. For what purpose? Why should I know anything of that branch of science? That I may teach the world the relationship between the heavenly bodies, man and nature.

I may wish to know something of mathematics. Why should I so desire? That I may prove to the world that the progress of mathematical wisdom implies the unfoldings of immortality; they are limitless; no power can bind their possibilities. They are continually unfolding to the world their relations, and they are the expression of human intelligence.

Professor Pierce, of Harvard College, once said that the Science of Mathematics was a type of immortality, was an expression of a boundless life. No eye hath seen its limit, no ear hath heard the lowest note of harmony that belongs to its rhythm, no voice hath spoken the fullness of its reaching love. It goes on and on forever and forever. It encompasses earth and heaven. It counts the stars, the grains of sand, the globules of air, the drops of water, and, above all, it counts, recognizes and classifies the vibrations of thought that go out from soul to soul; these things belong to the religion of human nature, to the religion that belongs to mankind. It can have no such thing as grooves, for it cannot be bound by its influence; it cannot be limited in its growth; it has nothing that shall trammel its progress, for it is marching up the heights of time and forever and forever.

Jonathan Edwards declared that to dance was a sin—for young men and women to enjoy the common communion by which there might come some respite from labor, some relief from care, that they might enter into some enjoyment that was physical in its nature and inspiration, to him it was a crime.

Why? Dogma was the rule that governed his life, and not religion. The man who builds a hall for his brother, who creates a creed that shall hold sects within its orbit, is not a religious man, but he who works for the upbuilding of the world, for the benefit of humanity, is the religious man, whose light shines out, and he is the beacon upon the hill-tops, that is lighting the valleys, and makes glad the hearts of men.

What is brotherhood? Is it simply that you are all human beings? Is it all embodied in the thought that God is your Father? When men perceive the great good that is divine in all its attributes, that God cannot be loved, adored, worshiped or obeyed so long as anything which he has created, which has inspired his love, has taken unto itself his spirit, who has given unto it His personality, so long as any one thing is left out. There is no such thing in that life as brotherhood. Brotherhood means human sympathy, human love, human helpfulness, human progress for all—the lower as well as the higher. It means justice. It means that the man who is the employer must recognize the rights of the employe. It means that he who is meting out to the world the food that shall give strength and life, is only giving an answer to the great demand of humanity. It means that justice shall prevail between capital and labor. It means that you shall recognize the rights of men—the man in the gutter as well as the man in the highest place that is in the land; that the rights of every individual must be respected and honored, and that every human soul must be loved and aided up the hill, and the conditions which encompass him be made better, everything that surrounds him in all the conditions of his life be made brighter, sweeter and better for his use. This is brotherhood. YOU ARE NOT MY BROTHER, YOU ARE NOT MY SISTER, UNLESS I AM READY TO RECOGNIZE YOUR NEEDS, AND MAKE THEM MY OWN, AND DO WHAT I CAN FOR YOUR DEVELOPMENT.

I am no religion for you, if I have not the means within my grasp by which I shall improve your lives, or uplift your aspirations. I have no dogmas to give you. I have no formulated faith to utter to your souls, save that which shall teach you to make God your Father. Man must be your brother. He must be a part of yourself. He must be akin to you. He must enter into your life and you into his life, until he has grown to be one with you.

You may say there is no such thing as equality in heaven or on earth. Even the stars differ one from another. The rays of light are not all alike; some are longer, some are shorter. The vibrations that are going out from your spirit are not all equal; they are varying according to the channels through which they are passing, and you may find that although these inequalities exist, every one is as important to the existence of the other, and to the universal balance of all things as the higher.

Every condition in life is incident to the development of that condition, and if you are above it, your duty is to make it better, to purify, exalt and ennoble, until the level has been attained by which the universal kinship shall be made manifest.

I care for no religion, for no creed that abides upon this earth, unless it brings to my consciousness the importance of that work which shall be of use to the world. I CARE FOR NO DEFINITION OF RELIGION, THAT SHALL NOT ENABLE ME TO GO OUT INTO LIFE, AND HELP SOME THAT ARE WEAKER, SOME THAT ARE LOWER, TO A HIGHER POSITION THAN THEY HAVE KNOWN BEFORE.

Religion means the love of God, but it means the love of God in man, the love of God in human nature, the love of God everywhere, in all things, over all things, through all things! The doors of Justice have been closed too long. Greed has filled human intelligences too thickly, until the mists have gathered that have obscured the sunlight of brotherly love—and what has been the result? Strikes all over the land. Uneasiness and discord prevail everywhere. Injustice is raging rampant over the earth. One man looks upon his brother as inferior to him, simply because he cannot have materially become as successful as he, yet the same brother has lived a more honorable life; he has exercised a greater and more profound justice; he has lived obedient to the will of God within him; he has known a larger religion, and it is not he who builds the largest church; it is not he who sits upon the highest throne; it is not he who stands over a city or rules a nation, that is in possession of that which is best and truest for mankind, but it is he who is doing the most, loving the most, making the most of life, for the good of the common weal of humanity; it is he who is contributing most to the welfare of the nation, spiritually and physically; it is he who is uplifting the aspirations of the world; it is he who is bringing into recognition the Divine Spirit, and making man conscious that he is divine himself.

We have put Divinity so far away beyond the stars, we have made the Divine life something to be hoped for, and not realized, but we are in that spirit; we can make it our own if we will observe the reflection of that Divinity upon our own souls, and make it the life that shall inspire us. Then that Divinity lives in our deeds, speaks in our language, is portrayed in our kindnesses; it is bright and beautiful in our charity; our religion is brighter, higher and deeper; it is truer, nobler, because it is spiritual. It has grown out of the mire of greed, and it has come up into the life and glory of a Divine brotherhood, that makes all humanity yours and mine, all to be loving one to another until the world rises to a loftier height of thought, and knowledge is the spirit that pervades the universe.

Are We Doing Our Duty?

Moses Hull Preaches a Trenchant Gospel Sermon Exactly Applicable to Spiritualists.

The Latins used to say, "docendo discimus," which means we learn by teaching. This is true; when we live our religion and preach it to the world, we learn more of its ins and outs.

Jesus said to his Jewish brethren, "Therefore I say unto you, the kingdom of heaven shall be taken from you and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof." Matt. xxi:43. "Therefore," signifies that what follows is a conclusion drawn from a previously laid down premise. Those who heard this remark knew very well what it meant. The 45th verse says, "When the chief priests and the Pharisees had heard his parables, they perceived that he spake of them."

Sometimes we catch the meaning of such things more readily when they apply to others than when they apply to ourselves. Be that as it may, I believe there are many instances in history, of truths being offered to the people when they were not ready for them, then they were withdrawn and given to a people who were better prepared to receive them. I notice that truths are generally handed to people as they are prepared to receive and act on them. The case of the Jews is one in point. "Blindness happened" unto them until the times of the Gentiles should be fulfilled. There is a time when people can receive and act on the truth, and there is a time before which people can not receive and act on the truth. Jesus said to the Jews, "I have many things to say unto you but ye cannot bear them now." John xvi:12.

Almost any one can receive phenomena; and as long as what is called "righteousness" consists in looking upon and wondering at them, many Spiritualists were exceedingly religious, but when something more—something practical was demanded, their righteousness had oozed out.

The Jews believed in the wonderful phenomena that accompanied Jesus. They even said to him "No man can do the miracles thou doest [Could give such signs as you are giving—Twentieth Century New Testament] except God be with him."

This was the confession of the whole Jewish nation, through Nicodemus, a member of its sanhedrim, or senate. Now when the thing passed from a mere belief in the phenomena attendant upon Jesus, to a life work they were ready to turn from Jesus, and did so, and finally said, "Let him be crucified."

I took my pen to give a few of the results of these phenomenalists turning from the one whom they had so heartily endorsed.

When John the Baptist came he brought the message, "The Kingdom of heaven is at hand." Matt. iii:1 The Twentieth Century New Testament renders this, "Repent for the kingdom of heaven is close at hand." The Emphatic Diaglott Testament, "Reform because the Royal Majesty of the heavens has approached."

In chapter iv, verse 17, Jesus began his preaching by saying, "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." In x:17, Jesus commissioned his disciples to go and preach precisely the same thing. Until he came back from Capernaum into his own country and was rejected and mistreated by those who had formerly acknowledged him, this same kind of preaching was heard both from him and his disciples. After this mistreatment he said, "The kingdom of heaven is taken from you and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof." After that, neither Jesus nor any of his disciples nor apostles ever preached the kingdom of heaven was at hand. On the other hand Luke says: "And when he was come near he beheld the city and wept over it, saying, if thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace; but now are they hid from thine eyes. For the days shall come upon thee that thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee, and compass thee round, and keep thee in on every side, and shall lay thee even with the ground, and thy children within thee; and they shall not leave in thee one stone upon another; because thou knewest not the time of thy visitation."

What could be plainer? The Jews had rejected the truths he had brought them, now they were left to take the consequences. This looks to me very much as if Jesus believed that the people held their destiny in their own hands—that if the Jews had accepted and acted upon the message he had for them their polity might have been restored, and the kingdom of heaven, which was to be an era of socialism, might have at that time been established; but their rejection of him and his message, even while they acknowledged the attendant phenomena, would cause them to lose their polity, their city, as they did.

"O, Jerusalem, Jerusalem, if thou hadst known the things in this thy day, which belong unto thy peace, but now are they hidden from thine eyes." Now, the kingdom of heaven is no longer at hand; it is taken from them and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof. Their city must now be "trodden down of the Gentiles, until the time of the Gentiles be fulfilled."

Paul, in his only discourse to the Jews, said, "Behold ye despisers and wonder, and perish; for I work a work in your days, a work which ye shall in no wise believe, though a man declare it unto you." In the 46th verse of this same chapter we read, "Then Paul and Barnabas waxed bold, and said, "It was necessary that the word of God should first have been spoken to you; but, seeing you put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles."

Since this time there has been no special messenger, or message to the Jews. May not these things be lessons for us? Why did Spiritualism come to people outside of the church? Simply because the church was not worthy. The church was steeped in forms and ceremonies, literalism, pharisaism and self-righteousness. The spiritual world could not get in touch with the church, the result was it was compelled to go to others who were not so steeped in orthodoxy, and self-righteousness, but it found a way to reach certain ones. On the very night when some of the Adventists were out watching for their Savior in the clouds of heaven, the first intelligent communication was received from the world of light. But when he came, he came to his own but was not received. He went to a different people, who received him, but the people who had been looking for him followed the example of their predecessors in the days of the first coming and called him the devil. Was ever prophecy more literally fulfilled? "The stone which the builders rejected" must and will yet "become the head of the corner."

This message came to the people called Spiritualists; how eagerly they swallowed it. They rejoiced in its phenomena and philosophy. We were proud to call ourselves Spiritualists until Spiritualism undertook to convince its adherents that they were not in it simply to sit in seances and enjoy communion with those gone before.

Every new truth brings a new duty. Spiritualism has come not merely to convince the world of an existence after the dissolution of the body, but to make the world better. Will we be made better by it, or will we as the Jews did, "go away." How many believe that accompanying Spiritualism has come that righteousness that will lead the world to a higher life—a higher righteousness here and now?

Jesus warned the world against the workers of iniquity. The workers of iniquity were, for the most part religious, very religious. They pray much; they say, "Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name, in thy name cast out devils, and in thy name done many wonderful works?" Matt. vii:2. Jesus does not deny this, but notwithstanding all they had done they were "workers of iniquity." Webster defines iniquity as follows: "Iniquity, inequity, unfairness, injustice." Equity is justice; inequity is just the opposite of justice.

Is there equity in one person making hats for thirty-two cents each, and then for the man who sells these hats getting five dollars each for them? Is it just for poor men to have to make reapers for $19 each, and then for the company to sell them for $120 to $140 each. When Jesus spoke about working iniquity, that is inequality, did he not mean something of that kind? These two items are only samples, of which hundreds of others might be given. Have the packing companies and trusts dealt equitably with the people? If they had paid their working men equitable wages and then sold their wares to consumers at equitable prices, would some be as rich as they now are, and others be as poor as the one who "had not where to lay his head?"

Have Spiritualists, as persons inspired by the higher powers, been doing their duty? We have, many of us, failed to "cry aloud and spare not." Had we done our full duty, as those touched with power from the higher life should have done, would we have failed to study and proclaim these truths?

Many of us have made Spiritualism a plaything; we have toyed with certain phenomena as though they were given for that purpose, instead of trying to learn from those who have produced these phenomena, our duty to ourselves and to each other. May this not be a reason why there is no demand for our message? If there is a demand for a message where is the message, or messenger to deliver it? Who of all those who think they have been called to deliver a particular message to the people, has the message? What Spiritualist platform is there where its managers would not prefer that its speakers would deal in meaningless platitudes? or show the people something wonderful than to have them point out to the multitude the way of righteousness?

If Spiritualism lives for no higher motive than seems to be its general purpose, has it not lived long enough? and is it not time the kingdom of heaven was taken from it, as it has been taken from others before it, and given to a people bringing forth the fruits thereof?

We as Spiritualists have been invited to the grand feast; as in the parable some of us have been "compelled to come in," but have we put on our wedding garments? Are we ready to do and are we doing the work laid down for us? If not, we must do as others have done, go "into outer darkness." Our talent will be taken from us and given to those who have more, for, "from him who hath not shall be taken even that which he seemeth to have." Let us be careful, and walk by the light.

MOSES HULL.

A NINE-YEAR-OLD MEDIUM.

Under Spirit Control He Preaches an Orthodox Sermon of Extraordinary Eloquence.

A little fellow, whose head did not quite reach to the top of the pulpit, at side of which he stood, held the attention of a large audience in Willard Hall, Chicago, and aroused their religious enthusiasm to a high pitch. The little speaker was Joseph Robert Raycroft, a 9-year-old evangelist. He is a tiny little fellow with long golden hair reaching down to his feet, and a pale face.

With the fervor and feeling of an experienced minister the boy spoke of the sins and temptation of this life and urged that all carnal thoughts and habits be cast off and the pure, religious life adopted.

The lad led the meeting in prayer and song service with the ease of a man. The parents of the boy declare that he feels himself called of God to preach the gospel.

"Death, Its Meaning and Results." By J. K. Wilson, of the Pennsylvania Bar. An absorbingly interesting volume, of decided value. A narrative of wonderful psychical events in the author's experience. Cloth, 560 pages, illustrated, $1.25.

"Cosmian Hymn Book." A collection of original and selected hymns, for liberal and ethical societies for schools and the home; compiled by L. K. Washburn. This volume meets a public want. It comprises 256 choice selections of poetry and music, embodying the highest moral sentiment, and free from all sectarianism. Price, 50 cents.

Remarkable Invention.

AN INSTRUMENT THAT RESTORES EYESIGHT.

Spectacles Can Be Abandoned.

This instrument, which the inventors have patented, is called "Actina"—a trade-mark word.

In the treatment of eye diseases the inventors of "Actina" claim there is no need for cutting or drugging the eye for most forms of disease. Cataracts, pterygi, and other abnormal growths can be removed and weakened vision improved or restored by the new and more humane method. If this is a fact there will be no need to go blind or to wear spectacles.

"Actina" has been tested in hundreds of cases and has affected marvelous cures. So confident are the inventors that this device is an article of great merit that they give absolutely a free trial. They want everyone interested to make a thorough investigation and a personal test of "Actina." One will be sent on trial postpaid:

They issue a book of 100 pages—a complete dictionary of disease—which tells all about "Actina," the diseases it will cure, what others think of it, what marvelous cures it has affected, and all about the responsibility of its owners—all is sent absolutely free upon request. This book should be in the library of every family. Address New York and London Electric Association, Dept. 342R, 929 Walnut Street Kansas City, Mo.

THE NEW LIFE.

By Leroy Berrier. An eminently suggestive work of excellent tendencies, treating of the mind's relations to the physical organism, and the power of thought in the upbuilding of health and character. Cloth, $1.

New Testament Stories COMICALLY ILLUSTRATED. Drawings by Watson Heston, with critical and humorous comments upon the texts. Heston's drawings are incomparable, and excruciatingly funny. One must see the book to appreciate it; the pictorial satire cannot be told. It will make you laugh heartily. Price in board, $1.00; cloth, $1.50.

HEROES AND HERO WORSHIP, AND THE HEROIC IN HISTORY.

By Thomas Carlyle.

A remarkable book by a remarkable man. Marked by terse strength and vigor, deep thought, philosophy and dramatic tensity of earnestness. A notable literary effort. A fine edition in cloth. Price 50 cents.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A New Edition, Profusely Illustrated.

"I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find nothing in it trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all, that under the appearances of fable, there may appear some latent truth, obvious to the discerning eye, though to escape the observation of the vulgar."—VOLTAIRE.

CONTENTS: "The White Bull," a Satirical Romance; "Zadig, or Fate," an Oriental History; "The Sage and the Atheist;" "The Princess of Babylon;" "The Man of Forty Crowns;" "The Huron, or Pupil of Nature;" "Micromegas," a Satire on Mankind; "The World as it Goes;" "The Black and the White;" "Memnon, the Philosopher;" "Andre Des Touches at Siam;" "Bababec;" "The Study of Nature;" "A Conversation With a Chinese;" "Plato's Dream;" "A Pleasure in Having no Pleasure;" "An Adventure in India;" "Jeannot and Colin;" "Travels of Scarmentado;" "The Good Brahmin;" "The Two Comforters;" "Ancient Faith and Fable."

VEDANTA PHILOSOPHY.

Lectures by the Swami Vivekananda, on Raja Yoga; or Conquering the Internal Nature, and other subjects; also, Patanjali's Yoga Aphorisms, with commentaries and a copious glossary of Sanskrit terms. Revised and enlarged, 12mo., Cloth, $1.50. Raja Yoga is an ancient system of Indian Philosophy, and one of the four chief methods that the Vedanta Philosophy offers to obtain freedom and perfection. Swami Vivekananda became a familiar figure in several American cities during the three years following the Parliament of Religions at Chicago; he was cordially received in America, where the breadth and depth of his teachings were soon recognized. His teachings are universal in their application. The book is cheap at $1.50. For sale at this office.

THE TALMUD Selections from the contents of that ancient book, its commentaries, teachings, poetry, and legends. Also brief sketches of the men who made and commented upon it. By H. Polano. 859 pp. Price, cloth, $1.

MAHOMET, THE ILLUSTRIOUS.

By Godfrey Higgins, Esq. This work is one of the Library of Liberal Classics. No author was better qualified to write an impartial and honest life of Mahomet than Godfrey Higgins, and this volume is intensely interesting; it should be read in conjunction with Gibbon's work. Price, 25 cents.

MOLLIE FANCHER,

The Brooklyn Enigma.

An authentic statement of facts in the life of Mary J. Fancher, the psychological marvel of the nineteenth century. Unimpeachable testimony of many witnesses. By Abram H. Dailey. With illustrations. Price, cloth, $1.50.

General Survey.

The Spiritualistic Field—Its Workers, Its Work, and General Progress, the World Over.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper. Please bear this in mind.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

AS A GENERAL RULE, IN THIS OFFICE WE PAY NO ATTENTION TO ANONYMOUS COMMUNICATIONS. THE NAME AND ADDRESS OF THE WRITER SHOULD ACCOMPANY ALL MATTER, OF WHATEVER KIND, SENT TO THIS OFFICE.

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

ALWAYS GIVE YOUR FULL NAME AND ADDRESS WHEN SENDING NOTICES AND COMMUNICATIONS FOR PUBLICATION, OTHERWISE THEY WILL FIND THEIR WAY TO THE WASTE BASKET.

THIS GENERAL SURVEY DEPARTMENT IS ONLY INTENDED TO CHRONICLE THE ENGAGEMENTS AND WORK OF SPEAKERS AND MEDIUMS. A REPORT OF WHAT THE VARIOUS SPEAKERS SAY WILL NOT BE PUBLISHED, AS WE HAVE NOT SPACE SUFFICIENT FOR THAT PURPOSE.

The Song Cards for sale at this office at $4 per hundred, are the help you need in society work.

Izetta B. Sears, spiritual evangelist, will hold services Sundays, at 7:30 p. m., in Arcade Hall, 7 Park Square, Boston, Mass., to be aided by musicians, speakers and other good talent. Miss Susie Clark was chief speaker, Sunday, Nov. 4, and the audience was greatly pleased with her words. Mrs. Sears' address is 13 Isabella street.

The Mirror of Escanaba, Mich., says: "Geo. B. Warne of Chicago, who has visited Escanaba, was elected vice-president of the National Spiritualists' Association at the recent convention. He is one of the earliest members of the association and one of its most enthusiastic workers. He is active in all its important affairs and is making lecture tours over the country, spreading the teachings of the cult."

D. A. Morrill writes from Grand Rapids, Mich.: "Mrs. Morrill and I have just returned from the beautiful city of Columbus, Ohio, where she has been filling an engagement for the month of October at the First Spiritual Church. We enjoyed our stay there very much. The meetings were well attended. Mrs. Morrill has the following engagements: November, New Thought Spiritual Society, Grand Rapids, Mich.; February and March, Lake Helen, Fla.; April and May, First Spiritual Church, Columbus, Ohio. With the exception of Lake Helen, Mrs. Morrill has as yet made no camp engagements for 1907. Those wishing to correspond with her concerning camp work, should do so as soon as possible as she wishes to make her camp engagements before going to Florida, if possible. Mrs. Carpenter, of Detroit, served the New Thought Society of Grand Rapids for the month of October, and did her usual good work. We found the society in a prosperous condition. Address Mrs. D. A. Morrill, 965 Stewart avenue, Grand Rapids, Mich."

Alice M. Sexsmith writes: "A very interesting meeting was held by the Christian Spiritualist Society on Sunday evening, Nov. 4, a very nice audience greeting the speaker, Mrs. Ella Johnson Bloom. She read a beautiful poem, entitled 'Climbing the Ladder,' followed with brief remarks and some very fine messages. Messages were given by the writer, also by Brother Travis. These meetings are becoming better attended all the time. We will have with us again as speaker on Sunday evening, December 2, that soul-inspiring lecturer, Dr. Geo. B. Warne. We know we will have a spiritual feast. These meetings are held every Sunday afternoon and evening, at 3 and 8 o'clock, at Conway Hall, Western avenue and Lake street."

Gustav A. Willms writes: "A large audience greeted the North Star Spiritual Union, 1546 Milwaukee avenue last Sunday night, Nov. 5. Sister Mueller opened the meeting with a lecture, followed by Brother Esser, the former lecturer for this society. He is an able speaker and teacher of occult forces and philosophy of Spiritualism, and denounced the fakes in our cause, which met with the approval of the audience. Sister Swan and Sister Mueller followed by giving messages, bringing joy to many sorrowing hearts. Bro. Max Hoffmann, the well known medium, will be with us Nov. 11 to 18, which will be a rare treat to all who are interested in Spiritualism, and we invite especially all skeptics to come and be convinced."

Augusta Grant writes from Elkhart, Ind.: "The Elkhart Spiritual Society had with us, Oct. 28, and Nov. 4, the well known lecturer and psychic, Will J. Erwood, of Peru, Ind. His lectures were highly complimented by all and a desire expressed for his return. We have engaged him for December 2."

W. J. Elmo writes: "Spiritual Alliance Society, in Vincennes Hall, 3514 Vincennes avenue, corner Cottage Grove avenue, is having splendid meetings every Sunday at 3 and 8 p. m. Mrs. May Elmo, pastor and medium, assisted by good speakers and able test mediums, make it worth your while to come. Our social and dance is enjoyed by all every Saturday evening, in the same hall. All welcome."

The able orator, Mr. Thomas Cross, late of London, will occupy our platform on Sunday, Nov. 11. Thursday, Nov. 8, we hold our first supper and social."

Mrs. Sophia B. Seip writes from Milwaukee, Wis.: "I find myself still in Milwaukee, with no definite knowledge when my work will be finished. There is no local organized society on the East Side holding public services. There is need of organized Sunday service here. The hall rents are high; no opportunity for private work unless at the risk of arrest for gaining money under false pretenses. A city ordinance now existing keeps all private work under fear of being at the mercy of the sleuth hound, who is on his (or her) prey for the 'prey' of the $25 to $100, taxed for each offense. Beyond the city limits either way one can go and deliver a message. I speak of this that workers may know what confronts them in Milwaukee. Things look very much here as though it had come down to the individual fight for one's own right without assistance from any organization. I believe all genuine workers feel that our work is of a religious character and that each state should have some recognition and protection to offer them. Some strong back-bone society may, if chartered, and having the help of the N. S. A., and state organization, engage in a work that will arouse enthusiasm sufficient to carry on Sunday services which will win public favor, and protection, and genuine Spiritualism find a spot to rest its head. I shall carry on my two circles a week, and classes every afternoon here until I start for Oregon, about the first of December. I shall be pleased to serve any one on the way West for Sunday or week meetings. Address General Delivery, Milwaukee, Wis."

Frank T. Ripley, speaker and platform message medium, is now in Rochester, N. Y., for the month of November, assisting Dr. B. F. Austin. He would be glad to get week evening calls to lecture and give messages within reasonable distance of the city. He will answer calls for funerals. Address him in care of General Delivery, Rochester, N. Y.

Eva L. Stewart writes: "At the Hyde Park Occult Society, on Nov. 4, Dr. J. A. Marvin gave his lecture on 'Joan of Arc,' and was highly appreciated by all. He is to be with us on the 11th. Mrs. Lillian Bell and Mr. H. S. Fraser gave convincing messages, the latter answering written questions correctly. He leads our Tuesday evening circle at the hall. Mrs. O. B. Wilson was controlled, taking on the condition of Mrs. E. Guckert, who passed to spirit life, Nov. 3. After she was relieved of the influence by Dr. Marvin, Mrs. Wilson was controlled by Mrs. Guckert's guide, Sunshine, who is to be with her in the future. After Sunshine left, her own guide came and gave a number of messages. Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley conducted the funeral services of Mrs. Guckert. Dr. McNeil, in behalf of our society, made appropriate remarks. The honorary pall bearers were four ladies of our society, dressed in white, who took charge of the flowers. She and her brother, Mr. Moore, joined our society only a few weeks ago. While we regret her departure, we know that she will be with us, and give us a word of cheer from time to time; she is not dead, only stepped out for a rest."

Mrs. Alice C. Barry of Philadelphia, ministered to the Psychical Research Society of Rockford, Ill., on Sunday evening, Nov. 4, where she is engaged for the entire month. Her lecture gave great satisfaction, and was followed by messages from the dear ones "over there," which fully demonstrated the certainty of immortal life to all who received them. The audience was good, and will largely increase as the month advances. The claims of The Progressive Thinker for increased patronage were well presented to the audience by President McDougall, the right man in the right place.

M. Lizzie Beals writes from Worcester, Mass.: "Worcester Association of Spiritualists, G. A. R. Hall, 35 Pearl street; services resumed Sunday, Oct. 8. Dr. George A. Fuller of Onset, occupied our platform the first two Sundays in October. His lectures are excellent at all times, ably and eloquently delivered, and appeal to the thinkers in every walk of life. The last two Sundays of October, Wellman C. Whitney, of Springfield, served our society very acceptably. He will be with us again at a meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary, Wednesday, Dec. 19. The The Woman's Auxiliary hold its regular meeting on the third Wednesday of each month, with supper and test seance in the evening."

Mr. M. Milleson, the psychic artist, writes from Shelbyville, Ind.: "Mr. Amos T. Phares, chairman of Spiritual Lodge, in Shelbyville, Ind., wishes the address of some excellent platform test medium, of Indianapolis, Ind. We have rented for the winter the second most popular hall in the city, at the small price of $1 per night, for Sundays only. We will give all the collections, except the hall rent. The proceeds, as any medium must know, will always be measured by the approval of the audiences. We have 10,000 inhabitants, woefully behind the age in psychic lore; priest-ridden most shamefully; and numerous conceited 'Smart Alecks,' that need the sledge-hammer knock of a thorough medium to brush away the dust and cobwebs from the skylight of their souls. We are now prepared to do a good work; and we think an opening is awaiting any one who can arrange to come. Cars on electric line leave Indianapolis and return from here every hour until midnight. We have a noble and most worthy medium here, Mrs. Shoppell, but we need more than one for a winter's campaign. Failures would be fatal. We sympathize with all struggling unfledged media, but we dare not employ them. Address me as above."

A. Shepherd writes: "We appreciate your paper very much. Long may it prosper and be a beacon of hope, a searchlight for truth to those who are floundering amid the fogs of old theological teachings."

Correspondent writes: "The Golden Rule Spiritualist Society held a grand meeting Sunday, Nov. 4, both afternoon and evening. The afternoon service was one long to be remembered. Prof. J. McLane gave a short address full of thought and to the point. Messages were given by a number of good mediums, which were convincing to all. The evening brought joy and a large audience to listen to our worthy brother, Dr. Geo. B. Warne, with such words of wisdom and clear-cut logic that there was no mistake to fully understand what was meant by his subject. Another feature of the evening, we had with us Mrs. Cadwallader, the lyceum worker, who assisted us on Nov. 11, to get the little folks in working order. She gave some of her general experiences, and was appreciated. On Nov. 18, our pastor, Mrs. Nora E. Hill, will be the speaker at 8 p. m., at O'Donnell College Hall, 43 South Paulina street, between Washington Boul. and Park avenue."

Albert P. Blinn writes from Norwich, Conn.: "On Thursday evening last the Helping Hands gave a social and supper, with over 150 of the friends in attendance. After the supper the tables were cleared away and a very entertaining program was rendered by the young pople, consisting of recitations, dramatic sketches and music. Our auxiliary society, the Helping Hands, has steadily grown in membership, having over sixty in number, and more applications for the next meeting. On Wednesday and Thursday of next week we hold our annual sale. Suppers will be served both evenings, and Miss May Clapp will help swell the receipts by reading palms. Several novel features will be adopted and we anticipate a very successful affair. The attendance at the Sunday services continues good and much interest is manifested in Spiritualism here."

Dr. J. A. Marvin, the healer, has removed to 3015 Indiana avenue. He can be addressed there by societies wishing to engage him as a lecturer.

Dr. G. W. Fowler writes from Brooklyn, N. Y.: "In the evening at 8 o'clock, Rev. May S. Pepper prefaced her discourse at a late meeting, by reciting a poem, after which her inspirers delivered a powerful oration pertinent to the occasion upon the eve of our state election, wherein they referred to the heroic men who were instrumental in forming this government, and those who were loyal and defended the flag and the Constitution, and the radical principles written therein, and to those brave men who faced the cannon's mouth at Antietam and Gettysburg that our Union might be preserved. A high tribute was paid to woman and the moral forces embodied in her sex, which, if allowed an expression at the ballot box would surely tell for something in helping to right some of the wrong to be found in society to-day. Her eloquent effort was loudly applauded. A large number of sealed letters were then read and answered, and much valuable advice given."

Mrs. E. Guilford writes from Lake Pleasant, Mass.: "We are still alive at Lake Pleasant. The Dr. Proctor circles held at the Dudley cottage, wound up their course by securing the services of Mrs. S. C. Cunningham of Cambridgeport, on Monday evening, October 28. Her guides coming in full force, turned the occasion into a grand treat for the class of 1906."

Mrs. Elizabeth Schauss, Ohio State Missionary, is doing a most excellent work in that State. She held several parlor meetings at Chilicothe with excellent results and also delivered a public lecture at Odd Fellows' Hall. Mrs. Schauss writes: "On November 4, the O. S. A. held a mass meeting at Columbus under the auspices of the First Spiritualist Society and the West Side Church. The meetings were well attended, and good work for the cause accomplished, all the O. S. A. board being present but two." A mass-meeting was held at Bellaire, Ohio, Nov. 11. Mrs. Schauss and C. A. Sollinger were the principal speakers. The O. S. A. wishes to hold mass meetings all through the state, and persons interested in the further education of the public and the strengthening of their societies can receive further information by addressing Mrs. Elizabeth Schauss, O. S. A. Missionary, 617 Congress street, Toledo, Ohio.

F. L. Cushman, 549 Sawyer street, Rochester, N. Y., writes: "During the first week of December, the ladies of the First Spiritualist Church of Rochester, N. Y., will hold a bazaar in the Plymouth church, corner Plymouth avenue and Troup street, (December 3 to 8 inclusive), and will be thankful to all friends at a distance for donations of articles suitable for sale on that occasion. Will those able and willing to help, please communicate with us at once? We shall also be obliged for helpful suggestions along the line of money-making for church purposes. Will the secretaries and presidents of Spiritualist societies and officiating lecturers, kindly announce this and urge co-operation in this good work. Many mediums will be present, good music, fine entertainment and choice refreshments will be provided for all. A limited number of friends from a distance can secure homes in private families by writing us in advance."

Samuel A. Huntington, Malden, Mass., writes: "Malden Progressive Spiritual Society, 138 Pleasant street, Mrs. F. S. Sheriff, president. A very successful Hallowe'en party, social and circle, was held in Louise Hall, on Wednesday evening, October 31. Our good president presided. Mrs. Whall did some very fine message work. Sunday services, Nov. 4, the afternoon circle opened with a beautiful praise service and invocation. Brief remarks were made by Mr. Wm. McConnell and others. Mrs. Carter did some fine message work, and Mrs. Morton followed in the same work. Evening meeting opened with praise scripture reading. Mr. Oliver Thomas Newcomb was the speaker and message bearer. He gave a very interesting address on 'The Phases of the Different Creeds,' following with beautiful and interesting messages.

Mrs. Attis, the medium is now at the Jefferson Park Hospital where she has undergone a surgical operation. She will answer all letters as soon as she is able to do so.

C. L. Hatch writes from Boston, Mass., 9 Appleton Street, Appleton Hall: "The First Spiritualist Ladies Aid Socity met as usual Friday, Nov. 9, Mrs. M. A. E. Allbe, president, in the chair. After supper and a social hour, which all enjoy so much, the following talent took part: Mrs. Alice S. Waterhouse spoke briefly of Spiritualism, after which Mrs. S. C. Cunningham spoke of the friends over here that we should be looking out for instead of singing so much about the 'friends over there.' Mr. Clark Smith then gave an interesting talk on Science, and gave two astrological readings. Mrs. Chas. Berry spoke briefly and gave messages. Congregational singing during the evening, with Mrs. Mary F. Lovering at the piano. Next Friday night memorial service for our arisen sister, Mrs. Sarah A. Byrnes. Admission free. Supper at 6:15."

Boston Meetings.

The First Spiritualist Ladies' Aid Society meets in Appleton Hall, 9 Appleton street, Boston, Mass., every Friday.

The Ladies' Lyceum Union meets in Dwight Hall, 514 Tremont street, Boston, Mass., every Wednesday.

The Ladies' Industrial Union meets in Dwight Hall, 514 Tremont street, every Thursday.

ENDOWMENT FOR THE MORRIS PRATT SCHOOL.

I have never known such an institution as the Morris Pratt School to start, get along and prosper without an endowment fund. Indeed when Father Morris Pratt donated this valuable property to the Spiritualists of America, he, at my request, put in a clause that we were to raise an endowment fund of ten thousand dollars. When he urged so strongly that the school must open right away that year, I wrote him that it would be impossible to raise the endowment, fit the building for school, and at the same time raise money enough to defray the expenses of the school. Then he wrote a release from raising that fund, and told us we need not raise it. Since that nothing has been said on the matter. Notwithstanding this I feel myself morally bound to raise as much as ten thousand dollars as soon as I can, and do not intend to permanently let up on the matter until every cent of the money is raised. That will give the school a permanent income.

As the first step in raising that money I have drawn up a document which I hope many of the readers of The Progressive Thinker will copy and fill out with such an amount as they feel that they can subscribe, and sign and send either to me as president of the school, or to Lodema S. Weaver, its secretary. Address either of us at Whitewater, Wis. Here is the document:

I, ——, of ——, of my own free will and choice, donate the sum of —— dollars to the Morris Pratt Institute Association, as an endowment fund, the interest alone of which may be used each year to assist in defraying the expenses of the school. In case the Association ceases to exist, for any cause this fund is to revert to me or to my heirs.

Signed ——.

Hoping to hear many and good reports from this, I am, as ever,

MOSES HULL.

SPIRITUALISM.

By perception am I realized;
By exertion do I come forth;
By earnestness do I manifest;
By kindness am I known.
My Father, Spirit within me,
Hallowed by Thy name;
May Thy kingdom that is in me show forth Thy works;
May thy will that is within me show from the within out, and manifest to the earth that Spirit is in control.
Give me this day my daily bread, just the thought that I need.
Forgive me my trespasses against those laws that were given to build me up.
Lead me not into temptation that is of the body born, but teach me how to unfold the soul—so my spirit may manifest.
But rather deliver me from the evil of the magnetism of earth, that controls me on the plane—the plane where I live.
Then unto Thee my spirit can commune in fact, for I will unfold even as the flower.
Teach me, Father of Spirit, of how to commune with Thee; how to live in harmony with those that I know.
Teach me Love and Peace so I may claim my own and be a Spiritualist in fact, not a Spiritualist in name.
Then I will be in Harmony as shown forth in the flower;
Then all the things that look to us crooked will be straightened in my sight, for I will be born of Spirit—and Spirit only will I see:
Then will be blended my Body Spirit of Earth with my Soul—the God within me, giving birth to my Spirit Self:
Then will I manifest perfection—will be at Peace; for I will do unto others as I would that they would do to me.
Then the words of the Nazarene, will be manifest on Earth—I will do the works that He did and greater, as I know.

PUSHING FORWARD.

There is always a way to rise, my boy,
Always a way to advance;
Yet the road that leads to Mount Success
Does not pass by the way of Chance,
But goes through the stations of Work and Strive,
Through the valley of Persevere;
And the man that succeeds, while others fail,
Must be willing to pay most dear.
For there's always a way to fall, my boy,
Always a way to slide,
And the men you find at the foot of the hill
All sought for an easy ride.
So on and up, though the road be rough
And the storms come thick and fast,
There is room at the top for the man who tries,
And victory comes at last.

—Success.

"Right Living." By Susan H. Wixon. The author shows a wise practicality in her method of teaching the principle of ethics. She illustrates her subject with many brief narratives and anecdotes, which render the book more interesting and more easily comprehended. It is especially adapted for use in Children's Lyceum. In the hands of mothers and teachers it may be made very useful. Young and old will be benefited by it. Price, $1.

"The Infidelity of Ecclesiasticism. A Menace to American Civilization." By Prof. Wm. M. Lockwood, lecturer upon physical, physiological and psychic science. Demonstrator of the Molecular or Spiritual Hypothesis of Nature. Scholarly, masterly, trenchant. Price, 25 cents.

The Ohio Spiritualist Association at Columbus.

Board meeting called by O. S. A. president at West Side church, Nov. 3, at 7:30 p. m.

The ladies of the West Side Church gave a reception in honor of the officers of the O. S. A. Rev. Harry E. Boerstler, first vice-president, welcomed the officers; response by the president. Short addresses by Rev. D. A. Herrick, Rev. Elizabeth Harlow, Rev. Hattie G. Webster and C. A. Sollinger; after this, the ladies served ice cream and cake. Brother Thos. D. Bellis, who was delayed, arrived in time for the cream and cake.

The board was then called to order by the president, Fred D. Dunakin, who being the charter delegate to the N. S. A., read his report which was accepted. After considerable discussion the board appointed Rev. Mrs. E. Schauss of Toledo, Ohio, as O. S. A. Missionary, with a salary of $50 and expenses per month, with power to engage speakers and mediums to assist in the work, to arrange mass-meetings with consent of president and secretary; the president to recall said missionary if the funds run short.

A new charter was granted to the Progressive Thought Society of Chillicothe, Ohio. Bills ordered paid and such other business transacted as came before the board.

In connection with the above there was a grand mass-meeting held Sunday, Nov. 4, at Masonic Temple, Third street, the First Spiritualist Church Society combining with the West Side Church. Three meetings were held, 10 a. m., 2:30 and 7:30 p. m. Dinner and supper were served by the ladies in the basement banquet hall; hundreds partook of these sumptuously served meals. The ladies deserve great credit as all enjoyed their hospitality.

The mass-meeting can be voted a success in every way. The remarks, lectures and messages given will have a lasting effect upon all fortunate enough to be present. The ladies and gentlemen who furnished the musical feast deserve credit and thanks.

Morning Session—Introduction of speaker, Mr. Beard, president of First Spiritualist Church.

Address of welcome by Rev. Miss E. Harlow, pastor of First Spiritualist Church.

Response on behalf of O. S. A., Rev. Fred D. Dunakin, president O. S. A.

Answer to response, Rev. H. E. Boerstler, president West Side Church.

Short address by C. A. Sollinger.

Afternoon Session—Lecture by Rev. Elizabeth Harlow, on "When Will the Millennium Come."

A plea for funds was made by Rev. D. A. Herrick.

Messages by Mrs. S. E. Delong, Miss Grey and Rev. Mrs. E. Schauss.

Evening Session—Invocation poem, impromptu, on Spiritualism, by Rev. Hattie G. Webster.

Lecture by Rev. Mrs. Elizabeth Schauss. Three subjects given by the audience: "Socialism vs. Spiritualism"; ""As We Live Under the Present System, Is It in Accordance with the Intent or Will of God?"; "Common Sense Spiritualism."

Lecture followed by Dr. S. C. Carr (Dr. Talkwell), on "Philosophy and Phenomena."

Remarks on funds, by Rev. D. A. Herrick.

Psychometric readings by Thos. D. Bellis.

Messages by Mrs. S. Harris.

The O. S. A. will try and hold one mass-meeting every month.

Sunday, November 11, the undersigned, with Rev. E. Schauss, will hold three meetings in Bellaire, with White Key Spiritualist Society, Mrs. W. L. Wilson, pastor.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Mrs. Fred Wolf, of Belvidere, Ill., left her mortal form on the 3rd inst., after a brief illness, leaving her bereaved husband, daughter and sister to mourn the physical separation. She will be sadly missed by many devoted friends to many of whom she had been a ministering angel in good words and deeds. The Psychical Research Society, of which Mrs. Wolf was a member, expressed their great sorrow because of this bereavement in resolution at the close of their regular services on the following evening.

The funeral services at the home on the 6th inst., were outlined by her spirit through a psychic soon after its release, requesting that a chair be placed for her by the side of mother and husband, which were fully observed during the beautiful services, conducted by Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley, assisted by Rev. Alice C. Barry, late of Philadelphia.

Passed to spirit life, October 1, 1906, William G. Cronkrite, from his home in Washington, D. C. The deceased was born in Michigan in 1839, but came to Washington in 1888 to make his home. He was a life-long Spiritualist, and for many years a subscriber to The Progressive Thinker. Mr. Cronkrite leaves a devoted wife and several children and many friends who loved him for his sterling qualities. He requested that Mrs. M. T. Longley officiate at his funeral which she did after the manner of Spiritualism, while the Grand Army veterans paid their tribute of respect to the departed comrade at the cemetery in Arlington, where his remains were laid. COR.

Passed to spirit life from her home, 3513 Wentworth avenue, Nov. 3, Mrs. Emma Guckert, aged 52 years. She was a medium of rare ability, and pleased all with whom she came in contact. Sunshine, her control, was always cheerful and welcomed by all. She leaves one sister and two brothers.

E. L. S.

Passed to the higher life, Mrs. Sarah Aikine of Jackson, Mich. She was nearly 84 years of age. A husband, daughter and three sons, all the children ever born to her, survive her here. Dr. Julia M. Walton gave the funeral address.

Passed to the higher life, Sept. 24, Mrs. Eliza Backus, at the age of 79, wife of Hiram Backus, who with three children still survive her. She was a pioneer of Iosco, Mich. The large and commodious farm house was filled to attend the funeral services. Dr. Julia M. Walton officiated.

Gems of Thought

13 OUR THIRTEENTH PREMIUM BOOK 13

Read the Following Explanatory Sketches:

Our Thirteenth Premium Book.

Our Thirteenth Premium Book, now ready for delivery, contains 356 pages of the most interesting and valuable spiritual, occult and scientific literature to be found in the same number of pages of any book ever published. It is a work that no one, not radically prejudiced against everything outside of a creed, can pick up and not find some interesting information.

Heading the list of articles is one by

entitled "The Spirit World, Where Is It? Its Conditions and Employments," and in which her guide separates the spirit worlds of the various inhabited planets as the planets themselves are separated, but explains with great precision the spheres or spirit worlds surrounding this particular planet.

These spheres, it is claimed, "are creatable, that one can create his own sphere, and come in touch with others who are in the same rate of vibration, who are in a similar sphere or condition."

In this profound lecture is something highly educative to the spirit, and must be of value after transition. It is full of comfort and information—comfort to those who long to be again with their loved ones gone, and information as to their source of employment when they get there.

Countess Wachtmeister.

The second lecture is by Countess Wachtmeister, and gives in a straightforward way the founding of and the purposes of the Theosophical Society. Placing before the reader three distinct objects.

First—To form a nucleus of a universal brotherhood without distinction of race, caste, sex, creed or color.

Second—To study comparative religion, philosophy and science.

Third—To investigate the unexplained laws of nature and the powers that lie latent in man.

This lecture shows the difference physically and psychically between people, especially women of America and those of Europe; teaches how to unfold the psychic powers, and gives reasons why so many mediums in Spiritualism unfold psychically, but so often into unreliable mediums, and how to avoid these dangers, and the dangers of obsession. It treats of crystal-gazing; the power of frenzy, indulged in by the dervishes; ceremonial magic; of unfoldment through the imagination; the deep breathing process; lastly, giving the methods, to an extent, practiced and taught by Helene Petrovna Blavatsky, in the unfoldment of the power to enter the astral realm at will. Along the line of Theosophy it is interesting and instructive, and will enlighten anyone as to the objects and benefits of its teachings.

Cora L. V. Richmond's

lecture on the theme, "The Twentieth Century Fulfillments," is replete with prophecies. It gives a resume of the many prophecies of science that have in regular order been fulfilled; tells how the energies, mentally and physically, are being inclined to the invention of the most destructive munitions of war, and how this will lead to universal peace among nations; how the psychical unfoldments will raise the standard of true wisdom and morality, perpetuate the peace and harmony of the future human race. Mrs. Richmond is too well known as an instrument in the hands of highly unfolded spirits, as a lecturer, improvisatrist and author to need any laudatory comments.

She also has three other lectures in the book, one upon the subject, "God Is a God of the Living, Not a God of the Dead;" "Spiritualism and Christianity;" and "Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage."

C. W. Leadbeater.

"Dreams and Their Significance," is the title of the fourth lecture in the book, and was delivered by C. W. Leadbeater, the noted English Theosophical lecturer of London, to a Chicago audience.

This is a very candid, logical and explantory analysis of the causes and effects of dream impressions or waves, how received by the physical organism, the brain, and how it may be affected by conditions, disturbances internal and external; the etheric part of the brain; the astral brain, etc. This is one of a series of interesting lectures delivered by Mr. Leadbeater in Chicago, others of which are contained in this book. For instance, here are their themes: "Man and His Bodies;" "Reincarnation;" "The Law of Cause and Effect;" "Life After Death—Purgatory;" "Life After Death—The Heaven World;" "Telepathy and Mind Cure;" "Invisible Helpers;" "Clairvoyance—What Is It?" All these lectures must be taken as profound, logical and scientific from the Theosophical standard of reasoning, and whether approved in their entirety by the reader or not, something of deep interest, of instructive tendency, of elevating power will be found in them.

Prof. W. M. Lockwood.

"The Relation Science Holds to Natural Philosophy—Its Conflict with Every Phase of Religion," is the title Prof. W. M. Lockwood gives to his lecture, and he recites many instances of the progress of science, and its popularity with the entire thinking, reasoning world, including advanced theologians, and the effect this progress is having upon the previously beclouded and befogged minds of creedalized humanity. This production is in his usual deliberate, concise, analytical and instructive style of expression, and must be studied to be understood.

Prof. J. S. Loveland

produces a profound criticism of the famous mathematical argument, "As to the Existence of a Soul." He takes a firm stand against mental or intelligent causation, and in favor of material causation; considering the phenomena of life from the vegetable and animal kingdoms. This is indeed, one of the Professor's strongest and most analytical lectures, and will be read with deep interest by everyone.

Mrs. Helen P. Russegue

offers a lecture for our book on the subject, "What Has Spiritualism Given to the World?" which was delivered before a Boston audience. The lecture beams with spiritual thought from beginning to end, and states the relative position to this and the after life, of the spiritual teachings.

Rev. Minot J. Savage's

lecture is a Comparison of Ancient and Modern Ideas, from the text, "And Death Shall Be No More." Herein he compares the idea in the Old Testament, that "death ends all," which presents such a gloomy, dismal prospect of any future state, to that of the New Testament, where Paul says, "To die is gain," and to the present day growing belief that it is only "transition." The lecture is one of his most logical upon a matter that will interest every reader.

Prof. Alexander Wilder, M. D.,

contributes his views, gathered from a careful study of the subject, "Burying Alive a Frequent Peril," and relates many incidents that have come before him in his life experiences, and those related by other people. Some very fascinating reading and precautionary suggestions are given in this essay by Dr. Wilder. It should prove remedial of present-day methods of interment without proper investigations of the deceased form.

Dr. J. M. Peebles.

"Watchman, What of the Night? The Morning Cometh," are the first words of Dr. J. M. Peebles, in his lecture on "Spiritualism, In Its Relation to Life," delivered in London, Eng. He gives an illustrative word-painting of the high moral standard to be attained by and through true soul inspiration, and cites the reader to Jesus as standing upon the "summit of moral science," and cites many other Bible characters who reached almost the same height; also the changing attitudes of science or the sciences. This is a masterly discourse, and will be read with a warm degree of appreciation.

Ella Dare

presents an essay on "Our Finer Forces," and in it deals with the action of the unseen upon and in co-relation with the seen; the laws of vibration; psychological functions, etc. She is known to the readers of The Progressive Thinker mostly by her beautiful poems, in which the "finer forces" are involved to their limit. Her essay is a lesson in itself upon the necessity of right thinking and right speaking and how to subdue the turbulent spirit. It is a pleasing and instructive addition to the book.

Baba Bharata.

"Wonderful Spiritual Phenomena," is an article from the New York Herald, and tells of materializing of food; spirits from heaven; praying in the clouds; the most extraordinary phenomena of modern times, etc., by Baba Bharata, a "holy man" who came to New York to make converts to his faith, which is "Love for all men." This is a fascinating production and a welcome bit of reading will it be to all.

Rev. Daniel W. Hull's

lecture on "Whence Our Christmas?" delivered before an audience at Tacoma, Wash., is an analytical criticism, or search into ancient history for the origin of the day held sacred by all Christians, and celebrated in all Christian countries. The lecture is wholly from a biblical standpoint and to the bible student will prove of value.

M. M. Mangasarian.

This noted liberal lecturer and traveler discourses upon "The Abysmal Monster," telling the story of his travels in Europe and the Orient, and of the human ignorance noticeable; gives his thoughts on prayer, liberty, churchianity and degeneration. The lecture is full of interesting data and convincing thought.

Prof. Elmer Gates,

in an article from the New York World, gives some theories and some demonstrated facts relative to "Moral Sense Colors, and Their Influence Upon Human Conduct," the results of experiments in Color Psychology. This is a strictly scientific deduction and explanation of a matter all are interested in.

Price 25 cents, when accompanied with a yearly subscription. See premium list on sixth page.

LIFE'S PROGRESSION.

"There is no death; there are no dead."

These words stand out on the cover of Edward C. Randall's new book. They are a challenge to the orthodox world, and through all of its pages runs this challenge to those whose ideas of God, of heaven, of hell, of a future life are based strictly upon the Bible. Yet Mr. Randall believes in life hereafter, based on positive knowledge given him from the living friends passed to the life beyond. Price $1.50. For sale at this office.

THE PATHWAY OF THE HUMAN SPIRIT.

Or, the Pathway of the Spirit Traced.

By J. M. Peebles, M. D., M. A.

Did it pre-exist and does it reincarnate again into mortal life? When did it enter the body? What is its form—how does it relate to the soul body? Can it leave the human body and return again? Can it live in and control another mortal body? These questions and many others are asked and answered by the Doctor in this, his latest book, of two hundred pages. Price 75 cents; postage, 12 cents.

A DISSENTING OPINION.

In Which the Writer Takes into Consideration the Condition of Those Sent to Spirit Life in Consequence of the San Francisco Disaster—"The Most Reliable Evidence of the Transition of a Human Spirit, and the Process Involved, Is Furnished by A. J. Davis. It Is Now Generally Admitted that He Is the Greatest and the Most Reliable Seer, both of Ancient and Modern Times. He Has Observed the Transition of Many Persons Under Many Different Conditions—Some Through Accident, Some on the Battlefield, Some by Execution, Some Through Bodily Disease—Yet Not in One Instance Was the Spirit Neglected; Each Had His Guardians to Help Him Through the Change of Death. When That Was Complete the New-Born Spirit Was in Every Instant Taken by Them to His Home in the Second Sphere of Existence, to That Locality and Society Most Suited to His Mental and Moral Advancement. The Spirit Was Never Left to Drift Like a Purposeless Thing of No Consequence."

To the Editor:—We read Mr. Bates' article in The Progressive Thinker of October 13, under the caption: "An Urgent Call for Help to Aid the Spirits Who Passed Out of Their Bodies During the Earthquake Disaster at San Francisco." This urgent call for help is not sent out only to the American people, but to the visible and invisible worlds alike.

Mr. Bates of San Bernardino has just made the profound discovery, through a mediumistic friend, that the spirits who passed out of their bodies during the late earthquake disaster at San Francisco, have not yet left that place, but are asleep in all that pertains to self-consciousness, whirling in a crazy witches' dance about the place, unthinking and helpless, swaying through the city of San Francisco, through the houses, in a mad, blind, unhearing, unseeing confusion, and the cause is attributed to the "dreadful materialism, and unripe spiritual condition of the victims of the disaster.

Mr. Bates introduces his mediumistic friend to the reader under the cognomen of Miss "Z." She is a student of occult laws, and very mediumistic," he answers us, "and can receive mental communications from an exceedingly high plane." She start out for San Francisco after the earthquake, so the story goes, with her mediumistic faculties apparently keyed up to the highest pitch. When she nears the city her "powers" commence to sense a "dread something about the place, not clearly objectified, alive, though unseen."

At San Francisco she meets several business men, one of them she interviews. He drinks a pint and a half of whiskey daily since the earthquake, to keep away unimaginable horrors and nightmares that get on his nerves at night. Then Miss "Z." has a vision. The following is her own statement about it all, and how it happened:

"Overcome by drowsiness and the emotions of the day, I retired early and slept dreamlessly from 8:30 to nearly 10. Sudenly I awoke and then sat up in bed for hours, varying my position from time to time as the strain grew unbearable—watching a procession of hundreds, yes, thousands of poor charred, mangled and crushed human beings, swaying through the city, through the walls of my room, in a mad, blind, unhearing unseeing, unheeding confusion, every face in their many types reflecting the horrors of the ego's last conscious perception of the magnitude of that which had happened, and of which it was an integral part, but absolutely not one face, not one action betraying self-consciousness; asleep, in all that pertains to self-consciousness, whirling in a crazy witches' dance, unthinking and helpless."

After having read the above vision portrayed by Miss "Z.," we received the following verses from one of the whirling spirits described. They came piping on the wind down the chimney:

Oh! Miss "Z.," do cease your dreaming,
Sitting up at night;
It may end in fits of screaming
Or a ghostly fright.

There's no crazy witches dancing
At the "Golden Gate;"
Keep away from waking trances,
Ere you hurt your pate.

What you saw so madly whirling,
At the earthquake town,
Were your mental cobwebs twirling
Like an astral clown.

Keep away from studies hazy,
On the astral plane—
Then the ghastly spirits crazy
Soon may leave your brain.

Mr. Bates being a believer in ancient mysticism, and having apparently swallowed both the ancient and modern teachings of Theosophy, is singularly fitted to present Miss "Z's" vision as a clairvoyant communication, deserving universal attention. He discourses about the "astral plane" "thought forms" and "non-human" entities" as if they were well established facts, corroborated by reason and experience; instead, the reverse in the case. No progressive Theosophist of the present day believes in them. Spiritualists have never accepted them as facts; neither do they accept Miss "Z" and Mr. Bates' conception of the spirits' destiny after death—namely, that when a number of persons die by accident, their spirits are floating for months about their former homes, unconscious, spinning like rubbish in the wind.

The extravagant language used to describe the vision, and the conclusion arrived at about it, precludes any one from dealing with it seriously. It would have been an act of extreme ignorance to address it to the intelligent Spiritualists of America; to have addressed it to the entire earth's inhabitants would be downright stupidity. As it is now addressed to the risible and to the invisible worlds," it must be regarded by everybody as the rankest kind of lunacy.

It ought not to be difficult for any one acquainted with Miss "Z's" temperament and environment to determine what caused her illusion. whether it were caused by the studies of "thought forms" or "non-human entities" upon the astral plane; or whether the San Francisco whisky drinker impressed his unimaginable horrors and nightmares upon her brain before she retired to rest; or whether like children who talk about ghosts in the day-time and wake up at night and see them, her mental fancies commenced to stalk about the room—whatever the cause, matters little. We are willing that she have her visions and explain them according to her own light, and think them immensely important; but we are not willing that Mr. Bates use them to explain the destiny of the human spirit after death.

We have a well-defined knowledge about the dying process. Several reputable modern seers have, on various occasions, witnessed the birth of the human spirit into the higher life, and not one of them ever recorded that a spirit after death (though he died by accident) floats about in space for many months like a phantom, unconscious, whirling through houses in a crazy witches' dance. Such material may make a good subject for a Theosophical afternoon class, where occult students meet in meditation over such profound subjects; but Spiritualism is based upon demonstrable evidence, not fanciful theories. Its facts are continually being tested by the thinkers of the world; they must be sanctioned both by reason and experience.

The most reliable evidence of the transition of a human spirit, and the process involved, is furnished by A. J. Davis. It is now generally admitted that he is the greatest and the most reliable seer, both of ancient and modern times. He has observed the transition of many persons under many different conditions—some through accident, some on the battlefield, some by execution, some through bodily disease—yet not in one instance was the spirit neglected; each had his guardians to help him through the change of death. When that was complete, the new-born spirit was in every instant taken by them to his home in the second sphere of existence, to that locality and society most suited to his mental and moral advancement. The spirit was never left to drift like a purposeless thing of no consequence.

His materiality or his spirituality had nothing whatever to do with the process; nor was the spirit neglected because of being deficient in any respect. Can any sensible person doubt Mr. Davis' testimony? Is it not reasonable from every point of view, and a hopeful message to mankind?

It would indeed be a sad thing, could such a small insignificant affair as an earthquake mar the destiny of a human spirit. We should never feel safe about our future; but like a rudderless ship be at the mercy of the wind and the waves. Instead, the reverse is the case. We are secure in the arms of the universe; her laws are just and perfect in their operation. The "Father of all spirits" holds us in the hollow of his hand. The elements may at any time destroy our bodies, our spirits are indestructible, and not depending upon the fleeting changes of the material world for their enjoyment and existence.

TEMPLE FUND SOCIETY.

An Earnest Plea for Contributions.

The work of the Temple Fund Society has commenced in real earnest. A large number of circular letters, applications for membership, and other blanks for donations, etc., have been sent to the Spiritualists throughout the United States. If any reader of this item has not received the same, please forward your request and it shall have attention. The printed copies of the Constitution and By-Laws will soon be ready to supply all demand.

Applicants for membership will have immediate attention and their enrollment will materially aid the movement. The success of the society will depend upon the general interest taken in the same by friends of Spiritualism. We cannot expect that others will do the necessary work of building our cause. We must do the work and the supporting ourselves. Dependence upon the dear public will not bring desired results. But the public will rally to us when we co-operate amongst ourselves.

The criticism is offered that one dollar per year dues by members will not amount to very much. That will not tax the members, but will avail materially, as the thousands of Spiritualists shall be enrolled under the banner of the Temple Fund Society. With several thousand members and that many thousand dollars income each year, we will be very competent to aid in Temple extension.

The purchase of a Temple in Rochester, N. Y., lately, requires that the Spiritualists shall aid the few friends in that city where Modern Spiritualism had its birth. A little aid by donation or loan, would now lessen the prospect of their failure. It would be a great credit to us as Spiritualists to assist our worthy Brother Austin in his strenuous undertaking in Rochester. Just such aid will be the mission of the Temple Fund Society.

We will not depend alone upon the membership dues, but will hold seances, meetings, entertainments, and receive donations; and before long some legacies will find here a good method of distribution. Ten thousand members will inspire confidence and win these enumerated accumulations. Surely, we can get that many members!

The astrological evidences all augur wonderful success for this fund, and promise hosts of friends and aggressive effort, with powerful promises of legacies. The spirits say it is to succeed, and will have their co-operation. With the planets and hosts of spirits in its favor, we feel sure that the thousands of mortals necessary for its success will rally at once and show the people that in truth the Spiritualists "are not dead yet," but are very much alive and very active and earnest.

We have faith in you, and trust you have faith in the integrity and earnestness of the officers and trustees of the Temple Fund Society, who comprise some of the prominent and reliable workers in our Cause. They have each a good reputation to sustain.

The fund will be under the joint control of the N. S. A. and the T. F. S. The same cannot be misused. For further information address the secretary, Mrs. Carrie H. Mong, 415 S. Franklin street, Muncie, Ind., or yours fraternally,

GEORGE W. KATES,

THE LAW IN SEATTLE, WASH.

R. F. Little on the Arrest and Trial of Mediums—No One Safe from Arrest and Persecution.

In The Progressive Thinker of Aug. 18, I think, there is a brief communication by President Harrison D. Barrett relative to the arrest and trial of Miss Helen Rice Burleigh of this city. There are certain statements and conclusions in that lettear so much at variance—with the facts as I understand them—and as generally understood here, that, in my opinion, to allow them to go unchallenged is to invite disaster to the cause of Spiritualism.

There are times when discussion fails to accomplish the desired results. I sometimes refrain from entering the arena for that reason. This is my first attempt to be heard upon this "paramount issue" among Spiritualists in this city and state. I am moved to do so by the thought that to remain silent is to prove false to my citizenship and my obligations as a Spiritualist.

This case of Miss Rice is one that Spiritualists cannot afford to ignore. It involves issues that are far-reaching. If not properly understood, and not properly adjusted, serious results will follow. In Brother Barrett's letter there are certain misconceptions that ought to be corrected. Among others, a species of congratulation to all Spiritualists "that Spiritualism is not on trial in this case—only a method of advertising." A very strenuous effort has been made to make it appear that the arrest and conviction of Miss Rice hinged upon her card used in advertising. If Brother Barrett were as well supplied with the facts in the case, as he thinks he is, he would not make that statement. In the trial it was made the most of to be sure, but to affirm that this method of advertising is on trial, and Spiritualism is not, is squarely contradicted by the statements of the prosecuting attorney and Justice Davis who tried the case; and this was repeated with emphasis by Judge Albertson, the superior court judge, who tried the appeal.

I quote from the statements of the lower court: "It is not so much the matter of advertising—or the receiving of compensation, but it's the act itself that is violation of the law." Over and over again this statement has been made during the trials of this case. This is borne out by the fact that a "spotter" was sent to obtain a reading—sent by the chief of police, for the very purpose of establishing the "act." Over and over again was the statement of this spotter analyzed, and this was the evidence upon which the whole case rested, and upon this was based conviction.

Miss Rice stated clearly and emphatically that what she gave the spotter was given to her by his spirit friends through her guides. She pleaded that this was her religion, and that she never gave out anything not obtained in that way. It was also shown that the work thus done was precisely what was done from the rostrum in all spiritual societies. If Spiritualism is not on trial in such a case, when or how can it be?

It is folly to segregate this case from others. Mrs. Ada Foye was invited to interview the chief of police during one of her ministrations here. She escaped a fine by virtue of her Masonic relationship, but we lost her services, as she soon left the city.

A Mrs. Lapworth was also arrested as a vagrant, one of our permanent workers, and a heavy tax-payer. Lole F. Pryor was arrested here, also a Mrs. Ross and a Mrs. Emmett, all established workers. These arrests were at an earlier date.

The fact is, our workers have been interfered with from the beginning. Since this trial of Miss Rice other arrests have occurred and others threatened. A Mrs. Swan has been arrested and spent two nights in jail in company with two or more habitues of the "dead limit." Mrs. Ross, through attorneys, secured a temporary injunction against the mayor and chief; the latter obeyed the injunction, but instructed his subordinates to "arrest every medium found working."

The authorities have publicly and repeatedly stated that "this thing shall be crushed out."

How much of this, it will require to convince Brother Barrett that "Spiritualism is on trial" here, it is difficult to determine, if this does not. There was no advertising done in these latter cases, showing plainly that the "act" of mediumship is the object to be assailed, and a spotter was employed in all these cases to obtain the evidence desired. As is well known my connection with the movement here is close and intimate, and I am prepared to say that these are the workers who have assisted in making it possible for Harrison D. Barrett, Moses Hull and others to be employed as speakers. The field owes its cultivation to these psychics.

Brother Barrett may feel perfectly easy about this matter, but those of us who are here upon the disputed territory, feel that Spiritualism is engaged in a death grapple for existence, and that the work of long and weary years is endangered.

I happen to know that we are being assailed by a well organized ecclesiastical oligarchy not only in Seattle but in nearly all the prominent cities of this state. In Seattle we are the victims of political intrigue as well. Certain parties are much more anxious to develop a cheap popularity than to carefully guard the principles and philosophy of Spiritualism on equal and exact justice to all phases of religious thought and action. We have a "new administration" that is doing good work in many instances but which has become the sworn enemy of our movement. But it won't work. Intelligent Spiritualists are rallying, and our mediums, the worthy ones, will be defended. Methods of advertising can and should be adjusted by the N. S. A., but in the meantime, let no man, not even the National president, deceive himself or others by the thought that Spiritualism is not on trial in each and all these cases.

Notice has been served on us that all mediums coming to Seattle will be subject to this system of persecution. Georgia Gladys Cooley, C. Fannie Allyn, and all of that class, are just as likely to be arrested here as our own local workers here; there are to be no exceptions.

Truly, Spiritualism is on trial in Seattle and the state of Washington, and captious criticism will not alter the facts involved.

SPIRIT PHENOMENA.

Interesting and Convincing Experience of Investigators.

To the Editor:—As I believe it is a duty that we all owe to the science of spirit communion to add any information that we may possess to help the cause along, and as spirit phenomena has been my hobby for forty-five years, I think I have some experience that is worth relating. Not having any spiritual gifts myself I always sought for others that had. My first real experience that was in any way convincing happened in Kansas City about the year 1867 or 1868. I was living in Wyandotte, and the U. P. railroad depot was then being built. At the depot a man was working that said his house was haunted, and that he had moved three times, but could not get away from it. Now a young man, a friend of mine, was a full-fledged Spiritualist, so we managed to get acquainted with the haunted man, and he invited us over to his house to see the pranks the ghost cut up. Well as Sunday was the only leisure day we had, we appointed that day for the visit, so when Sunday came around my friend, whom I will call M., and myself started for Kansas City, a distance of about four miles away. We arrived there before noon and after a good dinner, our host and hostess invited us upstairs, for there was where most of the spirit doings took place. Before I go any further I will say that we continued the visits for over three months, and it would take too much space to give all the details, so I will merely give some of the most important ones. We were led into a bed-room about 12 x 12 feet square; it contained a bed, a table, a few chairs, a bare floor, and two or three pictures. It was about 1:30 or 2 p. m., the curtains were up, the sun shone into the room, and after we were seated, our host asked us to call for the haunt as he called it, so my friend asked if there were any spirits in the room. Then the rapping commenced; they would rap in any part of the room that we asked them to, they imitated all kinds of sounds, such as sawing, boring, and planing wood. Then we got the spirits to throwing things around the room. But we found out that while we kept our gaze on an article they could not move it. So to facilitate matters we placed the bed diagonally across the corner of the room, then when we would place any light article in the vacant corner behind the bed it would be thrown over into the room. We asked the spirits if they could throw with precision so as to hit a mark. They answered yes, with three raps.

Then my friend M. took a shoe that belonged to the hostess and threw it over the bed into the dark corner, and he sat over to the opposite part of the room, and asked if the spirits could throw so as to just touch his ear. Well, that shoe came with such force that it made a dent in the plaster over a quarter of an inch deep, and just touched his ear, but his face got so red that I don't think he would have liked to try it again.

Well, our host and hostess seemed to enjoy the sport immensely; if the spirits were drawing on them for nerve or magnetic force they did not show it, neither did the importance of such wonderful phenomena ever seem to enter their minds. So to change the program, I said to the spirit, "If you can throw things around, I think you could write on paper. There were three loud raps. So we placed a chair in the corner beyond the bed, with paper and pencil, and asked his or her name. He wrote a name—we will call it Smith. "Oh," says our hostess, "Smith isn't dead, he is alive back in Indiana." So it turned out after due inquiry that Smith was yet on earth. So when in due course of time we became better acquainted with our host and hostess, we noticed that the spirits in writing to our hostess always called by the name of Mrs. A., although her present name was B. So one time my friend M. asked her how it was that the spirit "spirit calls you Mrs. A. when your name is B"? "Oh, that was the name of my first husband," she said. Then the fog began to rise and we saw at once why the spirit give a fictitious name.

There is one little incident about this affair that I will never forget.

I had a relative that has since passed away. When I used to tell him of all the wonders I had witnessed, he said he would like to go over with us the next Sunday; so we took him along, and as the seance progressed he asked me if the spirits would write him a communication. The spirits rapped three times as soon as he had spoken. Now this relative was a church member, and had recently buried a little boy three years old. So to show my relative that there was no collusion about the spirit writing, I took a clean piece of paper and small pencil, laid it on the middle of the floor, and placed a hat over it. No one sat closer than four feet to the hat. It was a bright day, and curtains were all up; we could all hear the spirit writing, then there were three loud raps, and on the paper was written, "Grieve not over those that have early fallen, for they enjoy all the freedom that heaven can afford."

One Sunday we asked our host if he had ever seen any spirit forms or ghosts. He said he had seen a hand one Sunday, come up under a sheet that hung over the foot-rail of the bed. So we asked the spirit if he could show us a hand. He could not say for certain, but told us to spread a sheet on the bed and he would do his best at it. We spread a sheet on the bed and all stood around the bed, just four of us. We probably waited two or three minutes, then the sheet raised up in the center like a puff of wind was under it, then we saw a hand form; it appeared to be in the fibres of the sheet, yet not trusting my own eyes, I said, "If that is actually a spirit hand, please pinch the sheet with your fingers," and a finger and thumb took a pinch in the sheet. I said out loud, "That's enough! that's enough!" and the sheet flattened down.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE QUESTION.

A Representative Woman Suffragist Has Somewhat to Say.

To the Editor:—I was greatly interested in an article signed C. R. Itic in your paper in which much is quoted of Mrs. Corbin's address to the municipal elections committee of our Chicago Charter Convention.

Your correspondent evidently misunderstands the lady's position and the effect of her paper, or less space would hae been devoted to it. Her whole Illinois Anti-Suffrage Association has only about a dozen members, and the paper read was for the most part the same thing she has been sending to newspapers and legislators for the past ten years.

The committee members were plainly bored by the paper, some of them, even of those who do not want to let women vote, whispering. Several times some wanted the reading stopped on the ground that the argument was against socialism and not woman suffrage, and yet the chairman suffered it to go on. Finally Prof. Graham Taylor moved that the reading be discontinued, as the paper was wandering far from the subject, and the rest of the committee voted with him. This shows what the committee thought of the value of the paper. If we are refused suffrage in Chicago, it will not be because of that paper.

However before the hearing closed, Prof. Taylor found there was only 19 more lines to be read, and so asked to have it all read so she might never think they were unfair.

Your correspondent ought to have mentioned the speech of Mrs. Watkins, president of the Illinois Federation of Woman's Clubs, 30,000 strong; the address of Miss Hood of the W. C. T. U., 11,000; addresses of representatives of the Chicago Federation of Labor, Catholic Woman's League, Council of Jewish Women, Lutheran Woman's League and many others representing tens of thousands of women who stand for woman suffrage. Miss Adams, Mrs. Henrotin, Dean Breckenridge of Chicago University, Mrs. Svald, Mrs. Solomon, have a world-wide reputation and they are all for suffrage.

DOCTOR BIRKHOLZ,

THE HEALER.

Has again returned to Chicago, and is ready to heal the sick, open the eyes of the blind, and cause the lame to walk.

At the urgent request of the many sick and afflicted who are unable to obtain relief, DR BIRKHOLZ has for the fourth time come to and opened offices in Chicago to heal the sick, open the eyes of the blind, and cause the lame to walk. While he does not turn away any who need to be HEALED of their infirmities, he prefers those who have been given up as incurable by their physicians.

He is located at 4056 Indiana av., Chicago, where he has fitted up a suite of commodious offices, and is now ready for the reception of patients. Dr. Birkholz, while he does not turn away the "sick" who have not been under the treatment of a physician and been given up to die—pronounced incurable—specially desires all who have reached the "last ditch" under the care and treatment of other physicians and pronounced incurable. We have nothing to conceal.

It is often asked if it is necessary for one to have "faith" in order to be healed? We say: It is better that one have "confidence" that they can be healed, for then they are more receptive to the necessary elements and a cure is thus often the more easily effected. But there are very many cases where the patient had but little if any, confidence in good results under Dr. Birkholz's treatment, and yet were healed. Nor does the doctor ask whether the afflicted eat "swine" meat, chew, smoke, or drink. The power that "doeth the work" is able to overcome all such impediments and eradicate them. Nor are you asked to believe in any creed, dogma, or doctrine—all that is necessary in order to be healed is: Are you sick and desire to be made whole?

Dr. Birkholz cures all manner of diseases; not that he cures all who come for treatment, for that is an impossibility. But under the potent power that is manifested through his organism but few of the seemingly most incurable cases are turned away uncured. But if the cases can not be reached and cured the doctor will tell you frankly the facts about the case.

Dr. Birkholz holds none of his methods secret, but courts investigation from the ablest practitioners in the country, as well as from members of psychical research societies and all scientific societies that have a desire to advance in a knowledge of truth and the uplifting and advancement of the human race.

By the daily exercise of this wonderful "gift" possessed by Dr. Birkholz, the power to heal is daily increasing, and it is a common occurrence for men and women to be brought to him on stretchers and rise at his touch and walk away, or to come to him on crutches, pronounced incurable by the ablest physicians in the land, and drop the crutches and leap for joy when touched by the doctor. Cancers, that the most skilled physicians gave up and pronounced incurable, and which they at the very best impede but for a season, are cured under the magic touch of this great instrument of heaven. Consultation free.

OUR FALL AND WINTER CAMPAIGN.

NOW IS THE TIME TO AWAKEN! IF YOU DESIRE TO KEEP PACE WITH THE ADVANCING PROCESSION IN REGARD TO SPIRITUALISTIC AND OCCULT NEWS, YOU CAN NOT DO SO UNLESS YOU READ THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER WEEKLY. THIS FACT IS NOW CONCEDED BY EVERY REFLECTIVE MIND. ANY PERSONS WHO DO NOT READ ITS COLUMNS WEEKLY CAN NOT BE WELL POSTED IN PASSING EVENTS CONNECTED WITH OUR CAUSE. THE DATA PRESENTED FROM TIME TO TIME IS VALUABLE TO EVERY REFLECTIVE MIND. FOR INSTANCE, WHAT WOULD YOU HAVE KNOWN IN REFERENCE TO THE INFERNAL POLICY OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN MANILA, IF YOU HAD NOT READ THE ARTICLE ON OUR FIRST PAGE, HEADED "A PERTINENT QUESTION"? MANY OTHER IMPORTANT EVENTS ARE TRANSPIRING CONSTANTLY, AND WHICH ARE OF SPECIAL IMPORTANCE TO EVERY REFLECTIVE MIND. A SINGLE ITEM IN THE PAPER HAS OFTEN PROVED TO HAVE BEEN WORTH A YEAR'S SUBSCRIPTION TO THE SAME. IT HAS EIGHT LARGE PAGES, AND WEEK AFTER WEEK THEY ARE WELL FILLED WITH THOUGHTS THAT CAN NOT FAIL TO INTEREST AND INSTRUCT. FURNISHED WEEKLY FOR THE INSIGNIFICANT SUM OF 2 CENTS, WE SHOULD HAVE AT LEAST 100,000 SUBSCRIBERS, AND THUS BE ABLE TO DO A GREATER WORK FOR GOOD. PLEASE AID US IN THIS DIRECTION, BY SENDING IN NOT ONLY YOUR SUBSCRIPTION, BUT AN ADDITIONAL SUBSCRIBER. THE WINTER EVENINGS ARE COMING, AND EVERY SPIRITUALIST SHOULD HAVE THE PAPER.

SPIRITUALIST MINISTERS WANTED.

Harrison D. Barrett's Work in Jackson, Mich.

To the Editor:—The press of many duties has alone prevented me from trying to get a little space in your columns lately. People are getting so that they desire the services of a Spiritualist minister to unite them in marriage, so that often those who are not Spiritualists call upon me for that purpose. More and more they are calling upon me for funeral addresses. Not quite Spiritualists and yet so glad to have the consolation of our beautiful philosophy. The writer was called to Iosco, Mich., in the heart of an orthodox settlement. The aged husband desired the ministration of a Spiritualist minister. The sons said: "Father shall have what he wishes." When I asked the father how he became a Spiritualist, he answered: "From reading The Progressive Thinker." I know that a lasting impression was made upon some of those minds, that had never received any hint of the spiritual philosophy as it is defined by our ablest minds to-day, for good.

We had a feast of good things in our city through lectures given by the president of our National Association, Rev. Harrison D. Barrett, last Sunday. I am appending to this communication an excerpt from the Jackson Citizen-Press of the issue of November 7, which will give a little idea of how favorably President Barrett is held in our city by the people, and the press, which I hope that you will find space for in your valuable paper.

JULIA M. WALTON.

Jackson, Mich.

Rev. Barrett Honored.

Dr. Walton gave the president of the National Spiritualists' Association, Rev. Harrison D. Barrett, of Washington, D. C., an informal reception at her residence on S. Blackstone street, Monday evening. Guests were present from out of town, among whom were F. M. Dyer, of Ann Arbor, a direct descendant of Mary Dyer, the Quakeress of New England, who fell a victim to Puritan prejudice and persecution of the Society of Friends; Mr. Schantz of Ann Arbor, and others.

At 8 o'clock Mrs. Walton's parlors were filled with eager questioners and as pleased listeners to the answers of the highly gifted president of the N. S. A. The answers to the questions, which were propounded, clearly defined the ideals and rationale of the religion and philosophy of Spiritualism, as held by the most advanced minds who have studied the phenomena of ancient and modern Spiritualism. Gifted with a phenomenal memory, and a mind that has studied and grasped some of the most intricate of the metaphysical theories, he readily and scientifically applies the scholastic lore found in the classics, the analysis of the scientist and the metaphysician to illustrate and define his philosophy on the proofs of immortality, soul-communion, re-embodiment, etc., and makes attractive the deepest mathematical problem bearing upon the subject. Intuitive and highly inspirational, the soul-power illuminates his strong intellect and carries conviction with his argument to the most crude thinker as well as the most polished. Unprejudiced of mind, President Barrett fails to wound the most sensitive and jealous adherent to their particular faith, and so wins the confidence and love of all hearts. For thirteen years—or ever since the organization of the N. S. A.—he has been the beloved and honored head of that organization.

THE CAUSE IN ELYRIA, OHIO.

The Progressive Spiritualists' Society Doing Good Work.

It having been some time since our friends at large have heard from us, as to our welfare and progress, I take this opportunity to speak of the work in our little city and the progress The Progressive Spiritualists' Society of Elyria is making.

The society started upon its season's work by electing the following officers for the ensuing year: F. W. Martin, president; J. M. Wooldridge, first vice-president; Laura Winslow, second vice-president; and A. F. Reinke, secretary and treasurer. The above are to serve as trustees together with L. J. Farrell, Thos Henson and L. J. Davis.

The regular Sunday meetings opened with Mrs. Marian Carpenter of Detroit, Mich., as lecturer and message bearer, on Sept. 23, and 30, afternoon and evening. Mrs. Carpenter did splendid work here and the meetings were unusually well attended, especially in the evenings, when our hall, the largest and finest in the city, was taxed to the utmost capacity and many could not be accommodated with seats during her last lecture, and patiently stood during the entire evening.

Rev. D. A. Herrick of Akron, Ohio, a forceful trance speaker, followed Mrs. Carpenter for the month of October. His two lectures each Sunday, followed by a trumpet seance on Mondays, did much to keep alive the interest and stimulate investigators to delve deeper. His month's work has endeared him to our people more than ever, and will always assure him a hearty welcome in our midst. In connection with this work Mr. Herrick held some private seances, as well as a number of circles in neighboring towns, from which the best possible reports have come to the writer, as to attendance by skeptics and investigators and the universal satisfaction given.

On the last two Sundays of his engagement with our society. Mrs. Herrick assisted with song and messages. Although a novice as yet in rostrum work, her messages were concise and accurate. Many names were given and recognized by the recipients, who were all strangers to the medium. Her last evening's work, lasting nearly an hour, was of the best, so far as accuracy and conscientiousness is concerned, ever experienced by the writer, and all that seems to be lacking on the part of this medium, is confidence and rapidity. We have now bid these workers, who have paved the way for a good season's work, a fond adieu and are ready to bid welcome to our beloved J. Clegg Wright, who is expected to feed the hungry souls during the month of November, to be in his turn followed by others, all of whom will leave some good behind and no doubt take some good with them, upon their departure; and when the season's work is ended, I feel that we shall be stronger and wiser and shall be better fitted to fight the battle of life and uphold the torch of Reason and Truth on this portion of the globe, so that some stranded wayfarer may through its glimmer find the road to right thinking and right living. May this light grow ever brighter through the efforts of the true and sincere workers scattered over this broad land of ours and be fed by and through the many inspirations scintillating each week through the columns of The Progressive Thinker and other heaven-sent publications. NOW IS YOUR TIME—

PRICE REDUCED.

In order to place that valuable book, "MYSTERIES OF THE SEANCE," (written by a life-long Spiritualist) in the hands of as many Spiritualists and investigators as possible this winter, I have decided to CUT THE PRICE IN TWO, and will, until the supply on hand is exhausted, mail it to any address for 12 cents per copy—less than half the former price. This book gives all the methods employed by fake mediums in producing bogus manifestations in all the different phases, and instructs the reader how to detect and expose the fraud. A silver dime and red stamp brings you the book, prepaid, by return mail. Get it and avoid being fooled. Address, ED LUNT, Roxbury, Mass.

Anniversary Celebration at St. Louis.

Sunday, November 4, the First German Spiritualist Society, Rev. Klara T. Hary, pastor, celebrated its fifth anniversary at Debrecht's Hall, corner McNair and Lynch streets. The hall was tastily decorated with flags, hunting and beautiful flowers, and two large audiences taxed the seating capacity to the uttermost, afternoon and evening. The afternoon exercises were opened by a lyceum drill, and recitations by the lyceum children. They "delivered the goods" in a manner that spoke highly for the training they had received from their two able and efficient leaders, Messrs. C. G. Renicke and Will Charters.

The opening address was delivered by Rev. Thomas Grimshaw, who spoke in his usual eloquent way and made a decided hit with the audience. He was followed by Mr. J. B. Bates, speaker for the First Colored Spiritualist Society. We feel justly proud of the work Brother Bates and his co-worker, Mrs. Nelson Armstead, are doing among their people. Mr. Bates made a ringing speech which was enthusiastically received and was followed by Sister Armstead with messages every one of which was recognized.

She was followed in turn by Rev. Laura M. Jones, pastor of the Advanced Spiritualist Society, who also gave messages. It has been my privilege to witness many times the good work of Sister Jones as a message bearer, indeed the first convincing test I ever received was from this good sister, but never did I see her in better condition to be used by the angel world than last Sunday afternoon. Every message drove conviction home to the skeptic that Spiritualism was true, and the audience went away after a benediction by Dr. E. H. Green, feeling that it was indeed good to be there.

In the evning the opening address was delivered by your humble servant. The address of Rev. Mrs. E. B. Price, pastor of the Psychical Research Society, followed. Sister Price won the hearts of her audience at the close of an able address by presenting, in behalf of her society, a beautiful bouquet of chrysanthemums to the First German Society, through their pastor, Sister Hary, as a token of their love and esteem. Sister Hary was visibly affected as she thanked her in the name of her society and herself.

The exercises closed with an address in German by Sister Hary, who was frequently interrupted by the applause of her audience. Sister Hary is one of the most able workers for the upliftment of the Cause here in Missouri. Her work among our German brothers and sisters cannot be too highly estimated. All who know her, love her, and her life and work are a living testimony to the beneficial effects of spirit communion if used for the good of humanity.

COMPLIMENTARY.

The Good Work of Mr. and Mrs. Cobb at Seattle.

It has been the gigh privilege of the First Spiritualist Association of Seattle and of all attending their meetings, to listen to the very excellent discourses given through the organism of Mrs. Edith E. Cobb during the last two months. Her work is of the highest order, both as teacher and as platform medium. The deep spirituality and pure ethical character of her lectures are seldom equaled by any speaker, and cannot fail to make a deep impression and to advance the moral and spiritual unfoldment of those who have attended them. No straining after oratorical effects, no airs of affectation mars her style as a speaker, but a deep earnestness pervades her manner as she pleads ever for a high character and points out the necessity of integrity of life and purity of purpose as the only means of advancement spiritually adding weight to her precepts by her own exemplary life. Her words are as deep waters and seem a flowing brook from a well-spring of wisdom. Her feet have surely climbed far up the spiritual mountains and from their heights she reaches eager helping hands to those who are toiling to gain that royal highway over which no ravenous beast or unclean thing can pass. Her genial kindly ways seem to win all hearts and she will be greatly missed by all when she leaves us. She has been ably assisted in her platform work by her husband, who gives wonderful tests, calling full names and describing surroundings and personal peculiarities in a manner that cannot fail to convince many of the consoling fact of continued existence.

It is a beautiful, a noble example these two workers are displaying, of husband and wife so harmoniously co-operating in this important field of labor, and we, as Spiritualists take great pride in the fact that we have so many such examples among our workers.

When mankind has progressed to the height of real Spiritualism, the divorce courts will not have so much business. Any society needing speakers will be fortunate indeed if they secure the services of Mr. and Mrs. Cobb.

A Prominent Spiritualist Passed to the Higher Life.

In another column of this Progressive Thinker will be found an obituary, mentioning the birth into a higher life, at Belvidere, Ill., on the 3d of November, of Mrs. Essie Wolf, consort of Mr. Fred Wolf. Funeral services were solemnized at the family home, on the afternoon of the 7th inst., by Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley, assisted by Mrs. Alice C. Barry, late of Philadelphia. Many of the active workers of the Psychical Research Society, with its president and secretary, of which Mrs. Wolf was a member, were present, and shared with the relatives and friends in their crushing loss.

Space forbids an extended notice; but, briefly, Mrs. Cooley was fully inspired for the occasion, and her words were a solace to the bleeding hearts of the family and the many loved ones who were present.

Mrs. Cooley read with extreme satisfaction to the tear-imbrued weepers, the "After Death in Arabia," by the late Edwin Arnold, a paraphrase by him of a Moslem poem, quoted in Palgrave's Travels in Arabia. The exercises closed at the residence by the reading by Mrs. Barry of Col. J. Clement Smith's very recent beautiful poem, written at the request of Mrs. Clara Watson, entitled "Life Triumphant," published in these columns two weeks ago. The poem was admirably rendered by Mrs. Barry, herself a poet.

The procession to the grave resembled in length the long cavalcades of the Catholics on similar occasions, which in this instance denoted love for the spirit fled, whose untenanted remains were being borne to the tomb, instead of devotion to a creed as in the former instance.

The abundance of flowers which graced the room and covered the casket, the masterpiece, "The Gates Ajar," far excelled in magnificence and beauty anything the writer's eye ever looked on before, will always be a remembrance and delight by all who saw it.

At the grave, in the Belvidere Cemetery, the large collection standing around, President McDougal, in behalf of the Psychic Research Society, made a short address, and dropped a flower, with a loving "farewell" on the slowly descending casket, each member of the society present dropping a like fitting emblem, expressive of their grief on sundering for a time their earthly ties.

The words of Shelley, slightly adapted to the occasion, came forcibly to mind, and there, before us, gazing in tenderest love on the sad scene, was—

A radiant spirit,
All beautiful in loving purity,
Instinct with inexpressible grace,
Each stain of earthliness
Had passed away; she assumed
Her native dignity, and stood
Immortal amid ruin.

Letter From a Kansas Lady.

To the Editor:—I have been a reader of The Progressive Thinker several years, and think it is just what it claims to be—a paper for purer Spiritualism. Of all the Christmas presents I ever received, I have derived more pleasure and benefit from the pages of each Progressive Thinker, which I receive each week, than all the other presents I have received in my life.

I have often wished I could meet the writers who come boldly to the front and proclaim to the world their belief in Spiritualism. It is a relief to read such articles as are written by Dr. R. Greer, who teaches the brotherhood of man, also giving the liquor habit a roast.

I am in Southwest Kansas where we have no circles and very few persons who are interested in Spiritualism. I give my papers to friends, so try to do as much good as possible.

I would like to see more articles by Carl C. Pope. Dr. Wilkins' poems are grand and good for the soul.

How foolish to deny the existence of our spirit friends. It reminds me of an argument I had with an estimable lady, a Christian Scientist, who scored unmercifully the idea of magnetism and of hypnotism existing except in the mortal mind. 'Twas no such thing! Pain! Show me pain, will you? Who ever saw pain? No such thing ever existed. All that God made is good, and He did not make pain! That was her logic. I said: "Did you ever see electricity?"

"No."

"Well, how do you know there is such a thing?"

"I have seen the effects of it."

"Have you never seen the effects of pain?"

Now there was no further discussion. She was a mother and that answered the question.

THE BOSTON INVESTIGATOR.

It Continued to a Good Old Age, but Could Not Live on "Indefinitely."

To the Editor:—The Boston Investigator, a so-called Infidel paper, which suspended only recently, for lack of support, was a healthy paper in 1836, as I can attest, having been a reader of the paper. It was soon after that its editor, Abner Kneeland, was indicted by the Christian laws of Massachusetts for the crime of "blasphemy." He was found guilty, fined and imprisoned for six months. He said: "The Universalists believe in a God which I do not." In order to make out the criminal intent, the prosecutor placed a comma (,) after the word God, and the guilt was clear. Now, sometime in August, 1907, it will be just seventy years since this disgraceful legal proceeding was enacted. Are any of the Bostonians ready to blush for their progenitors?

HOW WAS IT DONE?

A Dream, a Mysterious Something That Takes Possession of One During Sleep, and Points Out the Exact Locality of a Purse.

Any Chicagoan who desires to learn the art of profitable dreaming may well take a few lessons at Kouts, an Indiana town two hours out of Chicago. Oliver C. Williams, who operates thrashing and shredding machines in that neighborhood, seems to be a past master in the art. He dreams dreams that bring him dollars. He knows how to dream an odd-shaped knot on a woven-wire fence post, and in his sleep to search with the penetration of an X-ray for an object hidden from sight.

One day recently Mr. Williams, a citizen of Porter county, was thrashing on the farm of Jerome Bartholomew. That afternoon he moved his plant to the McCarthy farm, three miles distant. The next morning Mr. Williams in donning his trousers discovered that there was missing from one of his hip pockets a long flat wallet containing $384 in bills. He searched high and low for the lost pocket book, even driving back over the road between the McCarthy and Bartholomew farms, but without avail.

At the McCarthy house it had been necessary for him to sleep with an entire stranger. He could not help associating his bed-fellow with the loss of his purse, but soon became satisfied on that score and dismissed the loss from his mind.

Five weeks to the day from the time at which he had lost his money he was in his own farm home. He went to bed with scarcely a thought of his loss. In his sleep there came to him a farm picture that he had seen many times while awake and about his work. It was that of a certain field, across which ran a woven-wire fence. In his dream he could count the strands and make out the pattern of the web of wires. Distinctly there came to him a certain post on which the fence was strung. As plain as day he could see an odd-shaped knot on the side of the post and lying not more than four feet away from this post was a familiar-looking object about six inches long and three inches wide. On the upturned side were two buttons that he had seen before. They were sewed there by his own hands and they were used to keep closed the flap of nothing other than the lost pocket-book.

Williams says that when he awoke from this dream he gave it but little thought. But the next day he attended the Porter county fair and while on the grounds happened to meet Mr. and Mrs. Bartholomew and jokingly told them of his dream, for it was one of their fields that came to him in his queer vision. The following Sunday Williams happened to pass the Bartholomew place and he asked about his pocket book. Both the farmer and his wife had passed some time in search of it in vain.

"Well," said the thrasher, "I am too close to it not to take a look myself," and started across the field. Before he had walked close to the fence he had made out the particular post with the odd-shaped knot. It was as plain as he had seen it in the vision. In less time than it takes to tell it the man had reached the post and he was searching the grass. In the very spot in which he had seen it in his sleep he found the missing article.

ASHTABULA, OHIO.

The Cause There Progressing—Foundation for a Temple Laid.

After a summer among the campers and a careful observation of the workings of other societies, we appreciate more than ever the true worth of our own home society. We feel harmony and progress more prominent than elsewhere. Our society is prospering gradually as the result of faithful and persistent effort in behalf of the cause of Truth.

We opened our meetings in September with D. A. Herrick for two lectures; both were well attended.

We had Mrs. R. S. Lillie two Sundays in October; her lectures were well received and instructive.

We are looking for, and expecting, better things; have already got the basement work done for our new temple, corner Main and Kinsman streets. We hope to have a temple we will be proud of, a home worthy of the beautiful gospel that Spiritualism is giving to the world. This undertaking means much to a society whose members are all in very moderate circumstances, but we are all working earnestly and hope to meet a generous response from all broad-minded and progressive people. We are very thankful to Dr. Renner, trumpet medium of Cleveland, who gave us a seance for the benefit of our building fund which netted us $16. Other mediums and speakers have promised us aid in the same way.

The Ladies' Aid is a model of business courage and push, working with zeal and method in every department; they serve suppers which are well attended every Saturday evening, and the receipts are all turned over to the building fund, and with a united effort we expect to have our hopes realized.

This move on the part of our society I think is in the right direction. It should be the duty of all societies to create a building fund, and keep it prominent before their societies. In the course of time they will be fortified and can have a home of their own, where they can come in closer touch with their friends of truth in both worlds.

Let us come to a realization of the fact that there are duties for us to perform. Let us not neglect them, for every task left undone, every duty that we neglect will leave a scar that will be hard to heal.

Everybody Is Reading
Every Man a King
Or Might in Mind Mastery

The latest book by O. S. MARDEN Editor of Success

It is the sort of book that grips one by its truths in relation to the inner self and its possibilities—that one wants to give to a friend after reading.

A millionaire, head of one of the greatest shoe houses in the world, writes: "Under the doctor's advice I spent the last three days at home, and put in the time reading, 'Every Man a King.' It did me great good, and has changed me so that I am anxious to give a good word to everybody in the future."

CRYSTOLA THE BEAUTIFUL.

A Letter of Greeting from J. W. Ring.

To the Editor and Readers:—Greetings from Crystola the Beautiful. The week previous to the convention in Chicago, I lectured in Pueblo, Col., Kansas City, Kans., St. Joseph, Mo., and Chicago, Ill. The people in each of these places are alive to the needs of a Spiritualism whose philosophy is based in the facts demonstrated by its phenomena. On my return trip from Chicago I lectured in Norristown, Ind., in a Methodist Church more than sixty years old. They were courteous and wished me to stay longer and give them more of that kind of religion.

In Kansas City, Kans., with Mrs. Lelia Baldwin, who is doing a good work. At Lawrence, Kans., a three days' meeting in which Mrs. Baldwin and Mrs. Lull assisted; Mr. H. W. Henderson, wife and daughter Miss Rose, who is secretary of the Ottawa Camp, doing much to make the meetings a success, was held and much interest aroused.

At Pueblo the friends were anxiously awaiting my return and in McClelland Library Hall, we held a fine meeting where fully sixty remained to cement the forces organized at the previous meeting. Rev. Wilson Fritch, well known as a preacher, lawyer, actor and lecturer, has taken charge of the work and a most excellent society is assured.

Mrs. Henrietta L. Lichtig of Chicago, will take up the work in Galveston at the Temple, and I feel confident that the good work of ten years past when I have been privileged to be there, will continue by the united efforts of the good friends and Mrs. Lichtig.

During my absence the town site of Crystola has been surveyed and platted and many lots sold. The present population will soon be so added to that even in the winter Crystola will be a fair-sized mountain town. The plans and purposes of this great Industrial Co-operative and Practical Spiritualistic movement attracted the attention of hundreds to whom I presented it while traveling and much of our dreams will here be realized. This will be my home and headquarters from which will go the glad message of practical work, and I will also help to organize the various cities of the state. Will be glad to hear from those who would like to have help to further the great cause.

As you have noted by reports, Mrs. Anna L. Gillespie has been elected National Superintendent of Lyceum Work for the coming year. My heart is seriously moved when I think of giving up this work, but in the strong, competent and willing hands of Mrs. Gillespie, and with the kindly support which has been accorded me for the last four years to assist her, surely the cause of education will move forward. My heart is with the work and whenever time permits, my hand will move as usual for its progress. Kindly address all lyceum matters to Mrs. Anna L. Gillespie, Lily Dale, N. Y., and how I will miss the letters from the girls and boys, so full of love and devotion. Address all letters of inquiry concerning the great Crystola enterprise, as usual to

The Progressive Thinker.

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 35 CHICAGO, ILL., NOVEMBER 24, 1906 NO. 887

THE NEW RELIGION.

Religion a Good Word—The Atheists' Religion.

It has been often affirmed that the Atheist is the opponent and enemy of religion. According to the old definitions and understanding of the word that is true. But when men affirm "The Atheist has no religion," that statement is false. I will show that Atheists are religious and that they have a religion. An Atheist is an unbeliever in gods, devils, saviors, bibles, and all old religious systems based on faith in them. I am an Atheist and I have a true religion that I approve and practice. It is not a creed nor church; it is a truth, a principle, a power by which we may climb to lofty heights of mental and moral attainments. No other word will fulfill the place of this religion which has no definition on which a code of faith can be built.

The commonly accepted meanings and usages of religion in Christendom I meet with opposition and denial. Over these, great minds have disputed and speculated in vain, with no assurance of correctness or capability of demonstration. These old doctrines are entirely worthless; they play no part in elevating the world to a higher plane of life.

Leaving all odious doctrines in the rear, the New Religion has high ideals in ethics of potent influence and efficacy, with its uplifting, purifying effects on those who are on the descending plane of existence. With this religion a person can be a law unto himself or herself. No teacher is needed to explain it.

You can make use of as much or little as you like, and any part of it not approved you can set aside or rule it out. It is adapated to all humanity; and all can accept and practice it with satisfaction and approval of conscience.

In my definitions of religion I shall not be confined to dictionary, creed or bible. Religion pertains to the conduct, character and actions of individuals. It is doing right from the love of right, because it is right, without fear of punishment or terrors of church or man-made laws. It is a sense of obligation, of duty, of conscience, of reason, of right, with truth, utility, knowledge for a foundation. It inclines and leads us to the cultivation of things that are good, useful, beautiful, and requires the friction of use to prove its value.

Here are some of the component parts of this New Religion: Ethics, morality, goodness, purity, virtue, honor, honesty, rectitude, reform. Peace, harmony, patience, courage, cheer, hope, happiness. Aspiration, inspiration, spirituality, progression. Freedom, equality, tolerance, justice. Kindness, friendship, sympathy, generosity, benevolence, love, integrity, fidelity, philanthropy. Energy, industry, discretion, prudence, conscientiousness.

Our religion teaches higher unfoldment, mental and moral growth, self-effort, self-culture, self-restraint, self-respect, right doing, thinking, living, right conceptions and aspirations reaching toward the highest and best attainments in life. But few words are more comprehensive or of wider range than religion.

It is the unfolding principle of life; devotion to truth and duty; spiritual exaltation; aspiration of the soul to higher achievements.

Religion is a substance, an active principle innate in the human breast, developed by the constant practice of high and noble impulses, and should control the acts of man's life. It is a due exercise of the noble talents descended from the past; a doctrine for a higher knowledge; a principle of right and justice in man's thoughts and acts; a living fountain sending up sweet water of which every human being may drink, be refreshed and benefited. It is a feeling closely related to every human heart, and when obeyed will protect people from corruption, crime and dishonesty, will purify them and destroy degrading habits.

Man is by nature a religious being, for every one has the germ within himself or herself, springing spontaneously into life and action. Pure religion was the highest knowledge known to the ancients; the true philosophy that unfolds the sentiments and feelings of the heart; an element in the constitution of man that should be carefully cultivated. The words and thoughts from the mind should be seasoned with pure, untarnished religion, and this will give man faith in his fellow-men and his surroundings.

Man has seen the stupendous scheme of life surging around him. He has in looking over the universe perceived signs and wonders that have proved to his mind there is a purpose in existence, a design, a wondrous manifestation of order and law. He reaches out to the unknown, to that which is infinite and spiritual, feeling that if he cannot know the whole he may at least learn a part, through the desire of his soul to comprehend. Thus there have been awakened within the human heart religious impulses and motives. There always has been within man an impulse urging him to outward expression—something appealing to his finer nature, calling him out to a loftier life. From this seed germ will be unfolded aspirations for peace and harmony, love and happiness such as a knowledge of the laws of harmony and love can ever give. In appealing to the highest, finest sentiments of humanity it calls out the best aspirations of the soul, directs us to the importance of a righteous life by outlining plans of right living.

As the race advances the spirit of man throws off its old false ideas and conceptions and takes up grander, more liberal thought for itself; so that it feels more keenly the cramping chains of superstitions, error and ignorance that have bound it down; and by and by it will burst these chains and fling them off, because it must step out to broader fields of freedom.

My subject should be considered in other points, applications and relations, and I may come again with another chapter.

REFLECTIONS WHILE SITTING ON TOP OF AN INDIAN MOUND.

By B. F. Underwood.

Indian Mound Park on the banks of the Mississippi, at Quincy, Illinois, is widely known for its numerous mounds built by the Indians who long ago lived along that river. I visited this park in September. It retained its summer attractiveness, though the beginnings of the seasonal changes were manifest on every hand. But walking over the grounds of this park the reflective mind becomes oblivious to the beauty it presents in contemplations awakened by the evidences afforded that another people lived here on the banks of the Mississippi, we know not how many centuries ago.

Sitting on the top of one of the mounds I saw in imagination Indians of a far-off time, cultivating the soil in a simple, rude way, hunting and fishing, and in their canoes gliding up and down the great river.

They lived and loved, they had their joys and sorrows, as we have. Peace was sometimes broken by tribal wars, and scenes of slaughter followed periods of quiet.

The white man appeared and the Indian was killed defending his home or was compelled to flee westward before the march of civilization which he could not understand.

What scenes were witnessed, what events took place, what comedies and tragedies were enacted by day and by night in the drama of life along this majestic river!

How long ago did Indians inhabit this region? The latest researches put the time to a very remote period. One of the intelligent workmen in the park said to the writer that the mounds were built by a race that was here before the Indians came. This is a popular error.

The most thorough investigations show that the Indians of Canada and New England, of New York and of the Mississippi and Missouri valleys, of the Pacific coast and of Mexico and Ceneral and South America, were of one race, (or sub-race,) that these Indians were aboriginees, the earliest people that left any trace of their existence on this continent, and that the Indians of to-day are descendants from them.

There were different varieties as there are of the Aryans or Indo-Europeans, but they were all of the one Indian racial type.

When they came to this continent or how we do not know—we can only conjecture. They may have come when there was no large body of water to cross. They may have been here not only before Caesar headed his victorious Roman legions, not only before Alexander the Great wept, as is said, because there were "no more worlds to conquer," not only before Pericles was a power in Greece, but before Moses led the Israelites out of Egyptian bondage, before the Hyksos or Shepherd Kings ruled over Egypt and even before Egypt was a populous kingdom.

Once in a while human bones are found by workmen digging into the base of the mounds, vestiges of the remains of Indians buried in the long ago. In Egypt pieces of papyrus have been found which had existed under exceptionally preservative conditions during 5,000 years. If these mounds were primarily burial places, where the dead were interred, layer above layer, generation after generation, time would dissolve the skeletons and turn them to dust. But the earthworks remain and will long remain to remind us that we are living in a country which before we or our ancestors appeared in the "new world," was inhabited by a people whose existence dates back as far, perhaps, as that of any European nation. This is the matured conclusion of investigators who have given many years to the study of this subject and to the collection and examination of evidence bearing on all the hitherto disputed points relating to it.

THE PILGRIM'S REST.

For many a year, both far and near
I wandered o'er land and sea,
And dreamed of a home in some tropical zone
From winter's chillings free;
And the songs I sang, for freedom rang
And echoed in the hearts of all,
For truth and right and the soul's true light
Was my earnest theme and call;
But I could not rest, either east or west,
When a teacher with words and song,
Till at last I came to the sunset's flame
Where summer is all the year long.

To this land of light star-gemmed at night
With the hues of emerald and gold,
Where the sunbeams play from day to day
O'er the valleys and mountains old,
Where the green and red intermingle and spread,
And the orange and lemon grow,
And the balmy breeze stirs the pepper trees,
And musical waters flow,
I found this land my soul had planned
For my home in the Long Ago
When a pilgrim I came, without home or name,
But the secret I did not know.

And here by the sea is the home for me,
The land of my great desire,
In the years of my quest at last I'm blessed
To rest by my own home fire.
No more to roam from my cottage home,
Nor strive for the victor's gain.
For my heart is blessed, at peace and at rest,
With the wealth of an humble name.
In the sweet perfume of the roses' bloom,
This land is the pilgrim's goal,
Thro' Memory's Isle my day dreams beguile,
And peace flows into my soul.

AUTUMN LEAVES

A thousand fancies Nature weaves
On varied colored Autumn leaves;
The purple, red, and darkest blue,
And golden tints of different hue,
The richest shades of sunset's glow,
The colors of the bright rainbow,
And every artificial shade
That ever was by artist made;
All are produced by Nature's art,
And speak in colors to the heart.

Important Words From the East.

Rev. F. A. Wiggin, Pastor of Unity Church, Boston, With a Larger Following than Any Other Like Body, Has Something of Importance to Present to Thinking Spiritualists.

To the Editor:—The forceful words which I have read in The Progressive Thinker, of November 10, from the pen of the president of the N. S. A., Brother Harrison D. Barrett, to my mind, ring with a truth so important that they should be read and very practically heeded by every true Spiritualist.

"There are not twenty-five speakers upon our rostrum to-day who are under forty-five years of age! At this moment I do not recall any who are under thirty years of age." All who are well informed upon this important feature of the present and future interests of Spiritualism must know too well how true is this assertion of President Barrett.

For this condition, the cause is, we are told, and I think truthfully and accurately, so far as it reaches, that the meager salaries offered by local societies militates against any incentive upon the part of honest, earnest, well educated young men and women to enter the field of the Spiritualistic ministry. Certainly for a lack of this quality of rostrum timber, may be assigned as one prominent reason why more people do not unite, and in an organized body further the propagandism of Spiritualism.

I do not desire to seem pessimistic, for I am not, but I think that it may be stated without fear of truthful contradiction, that the pulpit or platform of Spiritualism is now in a LESS PROMISING STATE THAN IT WAS TWENTY-FIVE YEARS AGO.

Brother Barrett did not state in his truthful and fearless letter, how many and what sort are now upon the rostrum who are over forty-five years of age. Perhaps, when the vastness of the field for propagandism, as well as its importance, is considered, it was better that he did not, if he desires to keep alive what courage is left with the true, earnest, hard-working Spiritualists.

Has Spiritualism any real right to claim that it has a ministry at all? It may very justly claim many public workers, but is it not true that so few of these workers are actually engaged in the ministry, that any claim to having a ministry rests upon a very weak foundation.

No man would be so insensible as to purchase a large farm, stock it with sheep and then go away and leave them for an indefinite time. He would know that the sheep would certainly need his care. He must be sure that the water supply did not give out, that the grazing was sufficient in both quantity and quality, that disease did not get into their midst and that wolves, dogs or other enemies did not invade the fold. It is reasonably certain that a man would be far better off with even a small flock of sheep which were well cared for, than with many flocks and none properly attended.

I am personally affiliated with and friendly toward the the N. S. A., although the church of which I am pastor, and with which I have earnestly labored for nearly seven years, and which I believe is justly credited by the president of the N. S. A. with being as well conducted as any in the United States and with an attendance larger than any other society, is not one of its auxiliaries. The reason for it not being is not necessary here to state, but why it is so largely attended might be of great interest to your readers, and would be gladly given only for fear of taxing your valuable space to an unwarrantable extent.

Far be it from my purpose to unfriendly or unfavorably criticise the faithful officers and the management of the N. S. A., but one thing which this organization has done is somewhat analogous to a man's conduct, who would buy sheep and then indefinitely leave them to look out for themselves.

The primary object of a National organization of Spiritualists is to properly organize Spiritualists and the movement, and then to hold such, when organized, as vital, helpful factors of the head body, thereby increasing its own strength and usefulness wherever it reaches. If this is the primary object of the N. S. A., it has most singularly failed of accomplishing its own designs and purposes. At least two of its movements have been in direct opposition to its own highest interests.

In the first place, its annual conventions should always be held in Washington, D. C., or SOME CENTRAL CITY AGREED UPON, preferably Washington, our National Capitol, with headquarters of the Association, where the entire furniture of a convention is permanently located, and where much money and energy would be saved to the association from moving the convention to other centers.

This is reason number one, but far the least in importance. Second, the work of its missionaries has been assigned with a judgment more in keeping with that of a child than such an august body of legislators as are supposed to represent the interests of Spiritualism in the United States in their conventions. Do not let me be misunderstood at this point. The missionary has done well, has performed none but conscientious labor and wisdom has universally been shown in their selection. The point is with reference to the assignment of their work, which holds no one responsible but the men and women who constitute the delegation in convention assembled.

The attempt has been made to have the missionary cover too much ground. It would advance permanent organization far more to place a competent missionary in one city, or in two or three adjoining towns where the cause needed his services and keep him steadily at work right there for a year or even more, at any rate, until such a large, strongly organized society was established, as could afford to offer a man or woman, who would be competent to fill the position, and by virtue of their ability to demand living wages and not only hold the society as good as when taken, but to go ahead and build upon the foundation found a superstructure which would be an ornament to our cause and attract as associates thinking people, instead of those whose ideas of Spiritualism and its worth to the world never rises higher than a personal test.

This, I submit would do far more to induce young men and women to take our platform, far more to build up the cause, than to do as the N. S. A. has, viz., to spread its efforts over so much territory that its organic results become so attenuated as to become almost next to impossible of tracing. How high some Spiritualists will extend their hands and raise their voice in horror and denunciation of the very idea of having a ministry! But let me tell all Spiritualists who may read these few words from my pen, that unless you have an educated ministry, conscientious in the performance of its functions, a ministry permanently located, your flocks will become infected with a spiritual disease, BREEDED BY THE DOGS AND WOLVES OF FRAUD, who are at a moment's notice ready to occupy all ground left open to them; the quality of the grazing will become bad, very bad; the pure water of truth will cease to flow through your fields until Spiritualism as a factor of organized religions, will be reduced to a matter of mere history.

It is not a question of WHAT CAN BE DONE, it is a question, pure and simple of WHAT WILL YOU DO? If organized Spiritualism is to occupy any place in the years that are ahead, Spiritualists must listen to the voice of up-to-date demands made upon it, and turn a deaf ear to the moaning winds which would keep alive the dying embers of past effete methods of conducting the business end of our cause.

THE MEN OF OLD.

I know not that the men of old
Were better than men now,
Of heart more kind, of hand more bold,
Of more ingenuous brow;
I heed not those who pine for force
A ghost of time to raise,
As if they thus could check the course
Of these appointed days.

Still it is true, and over-true,
That I delight to close
This book of life self-wise and new,
And let my thoughts repose
On all that humble happiness
The world has since foregone—
The daylight of contentedness
That on those faces shone!

With rights though not too closely scanned,
Enjoyed as far as known,
With will by no reverse unmanned,
With pulse of even tone,
They from to-day, and from to-night,
Expected nothing more
Than yesterday and yesternight
Had proffered them before.

To them was life a simple art
Of duties to be done,
A game where each man took his part,
A race where all must run;
A battle whose great scheme and scope
They little cared to know,
Content, as men-at-arms, to cope
Each with his fronting foe.

Man now his virtue's diadem
Puts on, and proudly wears,
Great thoughts, great feelings, came to them,
Like instincts unawares;
Blending their souls' sublimest needs
With tasks of every day
They went about their gravest deeds
As noble boys at play.

And what if Nature's fearful wound
They did not probe and bare,
For that their spirits never swooned
To watch the misery there—
For that their love but flowed more fast,
Their charities more free,
Not conscious what mere drops they cast
Into the evil sea.

A man's best things are nearest him,
Lie close about his feet;
It is the distant and the dim
That we are sick to greet;
For flowers that grow our hands beneath
We struggle and aspire—
Our hearts must die, except they breathe
The air of fresh desire.

Yet, brothers, who up reason's hill
Advance with hopeful cheer—
Oh, loiter not, those heights are chill,
As chill as they are clear;
And still restrain your haughty gaze
The loftier that ye go,
Remembering distance leaves a haze
On all that lies below.

SPIRITUALIST UNION FEARS CASH IS GONE.

Members Allege Funds Have Been Misapplied, and Ask Injunction.

A suit of unusual interest in the superior court is that of certain life members of the Veteran Spiritualists' Union against the corporation and its officers, in which the complainants seek an accounting of money alleged to have been received and used. The case comes up to-day on an order or notice.

The union was organized in June, 1891, its avowed objects being to "inculcate principles of Spiritualism and assist Spiritualists in case of need, and to establish and maintain a place for religious and social meetings and the preservation of documents pertaining to Spiritualists."

Want an Accounting.

According to the allegations of the bill filed, the management have wandered far afield in their admistration of affairs. It is alleged that the corporation has failed to assist members in need and sick; that the annual meeting was called and adjourned without any business being transacted, and that the officers will not call another meeting. It is further alleged that moneys have been misapplied, and an accounting is asked for from Irving F. Symonds, John F. Simmons, James C. Herring and C. L. Soule, and an injunction is sought to restrain Symonds from parting with any funds belonging to the corporation.

The respondents to the suit are Irving F. Symonds, Minnie M. Soult of Cambridge, Ida P. A. Whitlock of Providence, Charles L. Soule of Cambridge, James S. Scarlett, of Boston, John F. Simmons of Hanover, James H. Lewis of Waverly and John D. Farnsworth.

Complainants Many.

The complainants are Christopher C. Shaw, Rebecca P. H. Shaw of Milford, N. H.; Amanda F. Butterfield, Hebron Libby, William R. Davis, Isaac B. Rich of Boston; Mrs. John White of Orange, Sarah F. Belcher of Marlboro. All the complainants except the last-named are life members of the union.

It seems that up to about four years ago the affairs of the union were prosperous. Since then, it is alleged, the union has fallen into disrepute through mismanagement, and its membership has greatly decreased. The Waverly estate, where the members worship, has a mortgage on it of $1,000, and mortgage and interest are overdue. A $2,000 mortgage on another estate of $2,325 is overdue, according to the allegations in the bill. It is stated that the corporation received in July, 1905, $2,835, and in December, 1905, $2,376 as legacies, and from a chain letter asking for subscriptions, $1,500. It is alleged that Treasurer Herring and Secretary Soule have no voice in the handling of the funds, and that Simmons and Symonds are in control of the corporation's affairs.—The Boston (Mass.) Traveler, Nov. 9, 1906.

CHRISTIAN TURKEYS.

Come, my comrades, fly for life!
Don't you hear the chopping knife?
Soon our heads in death will fall.
O, when will you ever learn
That Thanksgiving must return?—
Killing, eating,—that is all.

Let us plume our wings and fly
Towards yon azure arching sky,
Whither Christians look and pray.
Let us gather round the throne
And do praying of our own,
In our weakly turkey way.

Let us plead unto the God
Of the sky, the air and sod
For a kindly Christian right
To our share of liberty,
In this country of the free,
Sing, oh sing! "Lead, kindly light."

Let us gobble up each page
Of the bible of the age,
And convert them into eggs;
And then shout around the place
With an attitude of grace,
And be saucy on our legs.

Let us murder someone, too,
As our human brothers do,
And then stuff and roast him done,
Let us raise our heads in air
And give forth a loving prayer
To the High and Holy One.

Let us bake him till he warps
And say grace around his corpse,
And then lift our eyes above
In a kindly Christian way
And just smile and sing and pray
To the Christ and God of love.

As we give the flesh a jerk,
Let each be a happy "turk,"
O'er the feast of fat things rare;
Let us sanctify our souls
From the Christian flowing bowls
Ere we climb the golden stair.

DR. T. WILKINS.

Sacred are the lips from which has issued only truth. Over all wealth, above all station, above the noble—the robed and crowned—rises the sincere man. Happy is the man who neither paints nor patches, veils nor veneers! Blessed is he who wears no mask!—Ingersoll.

There is work that is work and there is play that is play; there is play that is work and work that is play. And in only one of these lies happiness.—Lord Avebury.

How to Strengthen Our Cause

Pertinent Suggestions Which Spiritualists May Wisely Ponder.

I agree with our able brother, Dr. Wilkins, of The Progressive Thinker, in the opinion that although there was perhaps a too lavish expenditure of "hot air" at the recent N. S. A. convention, yet in the main there was an earnest desire manifested on the part of the delegates to take such action only as would tend to place organized Spiritualism on a more practical working basis.

There was a disposition evidenced to locate our weak spots and strengthen them; to learn our faults and correct them, and the result of such efforts cannot but be ultimately, a cleaner, purer and more intelligent exposition to the world of our grand philosophy.

One of our greatest troubles has been, and is now, the lack of agreement as to what Spiritualism per se really is. When we consider the great variety of people who have become believers in spirit return, the educated, the ignorant, the rich, and the poor, the trained scientist and the religionist we cannot wonder that this is so. Take for instance the two classes that are the most diametrically opposite. I refer to the radical materialist and the radical religionist. The radical materialist is all head and no heart. The radical religionist is all heart and no head.

The radical materialist believes that everything (spiritualistic phenomena included) is the result of law. This law plays no favorites but is immutable, unchanging, without pity, without love. This law he sets up consciously or unconsciously as his God. He is blind to the fact that back of and as the cause of law is Love, that warms it into life, into activity. Take away the love that prompted law for the well-being of all, and you have the engine without the engineer.

Even the scientists are conceding today that the greatest books that have been written, the greatest songs that have been sung, that the greatest pictures that have been spread upon canvas have come like a flash from the unknown to some soul who was filled with a desire to help humanity.

The methodical scientist has not solved all the great problems of life that have been solved, especially those that pertain to the spiritual welfare of the human race, for as St. Paul said, there are things that cannot be weighed, classified or labeled by the material mind. "They are spiritually discerned."

The radical religionist however, is the exact opposite, he is all faith, all heart, all emotion. Previous to his having become a Spiritualist, he had been a believer (by faith) in the infallibility of the bible. After having been convinced of the truth of spirit return by some phase of spirit manifestation, he is prepared to accept all phases as genuine by faith. Everything that is said or done in the name of excarnate spirits, is to him gospel. He is carried away by the silly rot that is given out by some silly, ignorant sensitives under influences as silly, as ignorant as themselves. He dotes on soul-mate gush; he is filled with emotion at the sight of some two hundred pound sensitive cavorting up and down a spiritual rostrum before an intelligent audience, prattling baby talk.

He comes out of a professional dark room seance filled with enthusiasm at the wonders he has seen (?) and heard. Things have been floating in the air, bells have been rung, flags have been waved, forms have been seen dimly, but nevertheless seen, voices have been heard; why it was wonderful, there were tricks done there that Kellar would not have the nerve to do; but the medium (?) did them, and let him who doubts their genuineness be forever damned.

In other words, he was a narrow, credulous bigot before he became a Spiritualist, he has not changed his disposition with his belief. One of the hardest things for the average religionist to do is to be fair to the other fellow, the man who differs with him as to the efficacy of his creed to redeem the world. It makes him mad to think the "other fellow" can't see it, it is so plain to him. He is so filled with zeal to convert the other fellow (confound his stubbornness) that he is almost ready to do like the Irishman in the story who held the Jew who was drowning up out of the water and asked him, "Will you believe in Christ?" "Yes," gasped the Jew. "Then die a Christian," said the Mick, as he plunged him under.

After all man's concepts of truth (religious and otherwise) are as big as the man is, mentally and morally. The world is realizing this and are scrutinizing creeds and their effect on mankind as never before. Let us as Spiritualists lead as a religion in courage and honesty of purpose, by welcoming the honest, unbiased investigation of our philosophy and phenomena, even though it destroy some of our most cherished concepts of what truth should be. Let us "show" the world that we (at least) are truth seekers for truth's sake only, and are honestly endeavoring to head the procession in the search for truth, instead of following the band wagon "afar off" crying stop! Stop!

It was only by unbiased, patient research, that the false was discovered in the so-called divine revelations of the bible. No bigot ever conceded a single error in the (to him) infallible word of God, until forced to do so by clear, cold facts. It is only by constant, unbiased, scientific investigation that the false, the undesirable phenomena can be detected and separated from the true and desirable.

Our movement is built on a belief in spirit return. Its keystone is mediumship; but the arch on which that keystone rests is CHARACTER. Just as true as is the keystone and arch, just that durable, just that lasting, will be our movement. Just as much as is false, just as much as is fakery, just as much as is blind faith and bigotry, just that much will crumble, decay and fall to the ground. When a speaker or medium declares that the investigator has no right to demand scientific proof of the genuineness of dark room phenomena, has no right to a voice in the dictating of fair conditions to both medium and honest sceptic, but must accept the mediums on get out, I begin to believe that some of us are as blessed as mediums as the orthodox we denounce so loudly.

This much is as true as truth itself, if we are to win the world for Spiritualism we must "show" them that spirit return is a fact. It must be scientifically demonstrated not once nor twice, in some corner, but at any time or place we must be willing (at least) to try. Our mediums must be willing, as in the early history of the movement, to submit to test conditions that are test conditions to the investigator. The Fox sisters did this and as a result some of the most prominent men and women of that day became believers in spirit return.

They were shown and in the LIGHT, in fact many of the best early day mediums (D. D. Home, Fox sisters, Slade and others) declared that darkness was not a necessary condition for the production of physical phenomena. Now we are told by many of the speakers and mediums that darkness is a necessary factor. They prate learnedly of the dark room of the photographer as being necessary to develop the plates, and declare that the same immutable law holds good in the production of physical phenomena. BUT DOES IT?

I would like to ask how and why this immutable law was set aside, when Crookes, Wallace, Zollner and others received their scientific proof (in the light) of the truth of spirit return? If it could be set aside once, that destroys forever the truth of the claim that darkness is a necessary condition, and any genuine medium of that phase can produce manifestations in the light.

Several weeks ago Hudson Tuttle wrote in The Progressive Thinker as follows: "The often heard plea that the photographer demands a dark room for his work is more comical than pertinent. He does not want darkness because other forces interfere, but he is dealing with light, and he does not want any rays to meet the sepsitized plate, but those which pass the lens. If the diffused light struck the plate, it would be wholly black. A dark seance room has no such significance."

Again: "Any number of experiments wherein there is the least element of doubt, do not carry conviction. The scientist is esteemed for the accuracy which he employs in conducting experiments, and he well knows that his reputation depends on the absolute certainty of every step he takes. It should be the same in the investigation of spiritual manifestations."

All phenomena must stand the test of scientific investigation; the burden of proof, as I. K. Funk said, rests with us, and we must either submit to conditions that will prove our claims are true, or else stop proclaiming that we have a "show me" religion. The quicker we realize this and act accordingly, the quicker the day, when all will know that the glad tidings of Spiritualism is true; that our loved ones gone on before are not dead but alive.

In conclusion let me say, that I believe we are standing on the threshold of a new era. We are learning the lessons of life as never before. We are weighing and analyzing all thought (whether from man or the spirit world) not alone by the head, which has so often killed the life principle of the truth we sought to discover; not alone by the heart which has so often in the past led us astray, but by and through an intelligent cooperation of head and heart, we are marching up and on to higher ground, we are reaching a more scientific and (strange as it may seem) a more Spiritual Spiritualism.

A CHILD'S MESSAGE.

A little child now comes to you,
She brings both pearl and lilies, too;
She says, "O mamma, press me, dear—
You know that I am ever near.
I see you and I come at will
To prove that God is with you still.
He's not confined to any place,
In no four walls, nor any man's grace;
But reigns with benevolence over all—
Not seen, but felt by great and small.
You are spirit just like me,
Except your garment is dense to see
I feel your doubt. Would you like to know
From whence my wisdom and knowledge grow?
I am but the channel through which they flow,
As streams and rivers to oceans go.
And now, good-bye, I pass away,
I hear a call and will not stay,
Upon the ladder still higher I go,
Return to you when you need me, though.
Through vibration we come to the earth
And sail on wings of joy and mirth.
A word of hope, good will and cheer—
Have courage, be joyful, know not fear."

WHAT THE WILD WAVES TELL ME

They tell me that on life's ocean
There is the same tumbling tide
That o'erflows the banks of emotion
And recedes, as its waters divide.

They tell me great joys and sorrows
Are hidden deep in the sea,
And many, so many mortals
Are drifting as drifting are we.

They often reflect bright rainbows,
As the spray leaps on the swell,
And I read in their great beauty
Some bright hope they wish to tell.

They tell me the deep made furrows
They fill with the sands of time,
As they wildly dash from the ocean
With foam that is grand, sublime.

They often whisper so gently
That naught but soul can divine
Their real, true, beautiful meaning,
As they break on the shore in line.

And so I sit and I watch them,
And think and sense, and I pray
That over beyond the blue water
There lieth some golden day.

Important Questions Answered

Mrs. Elizabeth Schauss, the Efficient Ohio State Missionary, Answers Important Questions, at Sandusky, Ohio.

If Spiritualism as a doctrine of science is true, why is it that so many of those who have passed beyond and promised if it were possible, they would return and communicate with us, do not?

Why must such conditions of mediumship be secured as practically to shut out a great majority of the departed from communication with those they knew and loved here?

These questions were given to Mrs. Elizabeth Schauss, of Toledo, who lectured at Spiritual Science hall on Sunday evening. Mrs. Schauss is an inspirational speaker. That is, she does not prepare a set address, but prefers to have some other person suggest the subject of her remarks, and she talks on the subject, as she claims, under inspiration. The questions were written by a well-known Sandusky citizen, sealed in an envelope and handed to Mr. W. I. Jackson, president of the local Psychic Research Society, who opened them and read them in the presence of an assemblage of persons of apparently more than average intelligence.

Mrs. Schauss listened intently to the reading of the questions, then read them for herself, and after pausing for a few seconds, entered upon a discourse that lasted for about forty minutes. She spoke rather deliberately, but without hesitation, and possessed a good flow of language.

"We cannot depend upon a mere physical scientist to be able to give to us the real solution of the things for which Spiritualism stands and for which it gives demonstration," she said. She asked her questioner: "have you ever made preparation to receive your spirit friends?" and went on to remark upon the preparations we make for the reception of our material friends, adding: "If we need to comply with all such conditions in order to make our friends welcome when they come to us in the material form, why should we not comply with certain mental and spiritual conditions in order that we may receive them properly when they come to us?"

"How do you know that your friends have not come? What proof can you give that they have never been near you? Simply the fact that you have not seen or heard them. The fact that you have not been able to register upon your consciousness the presence of your spirit friends, does not make it any the less true to the one who has developed that consciousness, that sensitiveness, and who has been able to register the presence of his spirit friends.

"Each and every person is endowed more or less with spiritual possibilities, but where you desire that the manifestation of the presence of your spirit friends shall come to you, you must make preparation. You cannot expect a demonstration of a higher nature to take place unless you prepare yourself to receive it. You cannot expect anything in this world to happen unless you give a cause for it. Every result is due to a cause; every cause has its purpose.

"Mediumship, or the condition necessary for the development of mediumship, is not such as to shut out the possibility of your friends communicating with you, as is asked in the second question. There is absolutely nothing about the law of mediumship that will shut out the communication of any one person. On the other hand, as I said before, in each and every individual, there is contained a psychic force, a power of spirit, that if properly developed can become sensitized to the reception of the higher vibrations and of registering the presence of those who are near you. People are vaguely conscious of this fact, but if you were to go back over the course of your lives, each one of you, I dare say there would not be one who could not remember of some one time or another when he was prompted to do things that he had not intended to do. If you were to study the law of vibration, if you were to study the law which governs the spiritual self, then you would learn to know what it is that prompted or influenced you.

"Many times people make compacts with one another to come back 'if it is possible.' 'If you make it possible' would be a much better expression, for it depends upon ourselves whether or no we make it possible.

"Sometimes we hear people say, 'If it be true that this power belongs to all persons, if it be true that all are endowed with mediumship more or less, why is it that we have so few mediums?'

"Why is it that we have so few people who value spiritual development enough to make the necessary sacrifice and place upon themselves the discipline which is necessary to this higher development? All could develop sufficiently to be convinced themselves through their own forces of the presence of spirit lives, but not all have the fortitude, the courage, the strength, as it were, to carry on the necessary discipline and place themselves into the proper state of vibration. Mediumship is neither bought nor sold. It is not an article of merchandise. No one can develop you. You can be helped and assisted in your development by instructions and explanations from others who have passed through that development. No other can do it for you.

"According to your desires you shape the future of your existence. There are they who know the truth and yet have not learned to become free by it. There are many who have grown in intellect, who possess great knowledge, but who lack the force, the moral courage to apply what they know, and therefore their development and possibilities are limited. It is absolutely necessary to gain higher development that one should comply with the many laws that are necessary for it.

"One of these laws is simple living. Another of these laws is pure living. And when we say pure living we do not mean sanctimonious or pious living. Too often we find people who have become inoculated with a strong taste of piety who imagine that they possess religion. It is not that. What we mean is that he who lives a pure life sees no impurity in things that are natural. He who is pure within his heart is able to converse upon all subjects publicly as well as privately with the greatest respect and without a tremor of the false modesty that has been stamped upon the present age.

"Spiritualism teaches us the simplicity of life in all things. It teaches us to lead a temperate life, it helps us to see that the real true life consists in perfect naturalness without the extreme of great piety or great vulgarity. It teaches us that even as we do unto others, others will do unto us. It teaches us that we cannot escape any just retribution for the acts that we have performed. We learn by it that we alone are responsible for ourselves. You ask us 'How do you learn that? Who tells you that?' and we say to you 'Spirit loved ones, spirit friends, they who have passed on to the higher life and who by their superior environment and opportunity are able to instruct us and to help us in better understanding our own conditions—they return to us, they instruct us.'

"But you say, 'Why don't they come to me?' Why don't you give them a chance? Why do you lock the door of your own soul against them by averring that they cannot come when you absilutely know nothing about it? How can you say that it is an impossibility unless you have investigated thoroughly and are able to demonstrate that it is not true. In making such a declaration you actually shut the door upon the friends that you have invited to call upon you. Unless you have given them an opportunity, either through your own force or through the force of some one else, unless you have done everything in your power to receive them when they come to you, you have no right to complain that they have not yet manifested.

"Many people think that death makes such a complete change that they are entirely different after they have passed through the change of death from what they were here on earth, and when they arrive on the other side of life they find that they have to learn the law of vibration before it can be possible for them to come to you and give you a manifestation of their presence. More so since you are too ignorant of the operation of these laws. Therefore it becomes, so to speak, for a long time an impossibility for them to reach you, however much they may try. It is just as necessary that a spirit be informed of the operation of the spiritual laws in order to return and to manifest to you, as it is necessary for you to have a perfect understanding of material law as combined with the spiritual in order that you may develop yourselves to that sensitiveness of receiving and registering those things that come from the other side of life.

"People have questioned why do spirits go to the mediums in preference to going to their own. For the self-same reason that I have just given. Mediums who have given time and self-denial in order to develop their psychic powers and their clairvoyant perceptions are able to know when a spirit is near them, they are able to sense the presence of a spirit, and you who have not cannot sense your spirit friends, however near they may be to you. A spirit can manifest to a medium where it can not manifest to another who is not a medium, who has not developed that faculty of hearing and seeing the spirit.

"But you say to us again, "Spiritualism is but a few years old as compared with the doctrines, the theories and the teachings of other religions. If Spiritualism be true, why was it not known long ago?' We answer you that if you have read the history of the past, if you have read the scriptures, if you have read the history of Buddha, of Confucius and of many of the older teachers, you will find that all through history there were individuals who were different from others and who were able to communicate, as it were, with higher forces, with higher intelligences, and through them gained knowledge and instruction that was not common to the average man and woman.

"They were not called Spiritualists; they were called by other names. They were singled out because of the fact that there were not many in those days who were able to do these things. It is just the same with the development of the human soul as it has been with the development of everything on the material plane."

Mrs. Schauss made a plea to the earnest seekers after truth to investigate Spiritualism, to prove all things and to hold fast to that which is good. She warned them that they would encounter discouragements, but these she said were the test of their faith and of their earnestness in their investigation.

At the conclusion of the discourse Mrs. Schauss gave a few test readings which were quite successful.

During the evening hymns were sung and a noteworthy fact of the singing was that the entire audience took part. It was much above the average of congregational singing in musical quality and enthusiasm.—Sandusky (O.) Register, October 29.

TRANCE CURES HER WHEN NEAR DEATH.

Prophesies Her Recovery and Leaves Bed to Perform Housework.

Nazareth, Pa.—A case that has aroused considerable comment among the public and medical men is that of Mrs. William Moser of Altonah, a village five miles from this place, who fell into a trance when at the point of death, and came out of it a healthy woman.

For four years Mrs. Moser was sickly. She could hardly do any work, and her condition grew so serious that three months ago she took to her bed. All that medical aid could do made no improvement in her condition. She could not eat, and speech almost left her. Her end was expected any minute.

Then she asked for a slip of paper and a pencil. She managed to scribble, "I am going away for three days, and when I return I shall be well." While the family was wondering at the meaning of the note Mrs. Moser fell asleep.

Constant watch was kept over her, and within an hour of the three days mentioned she awoke. Without help she arose, dressed, started to walk around and eat. The next day she began doing her own housework.—Chicago Examiner.

"How My Voice Suddenly Became a Man's."

New York Scientists Puzzled by Miss Edna Murray's Astonishing Baritone, Which She Attributes to Supernatural Influence, as Set Forth by the New York World.

Who can explain the mystery of Edna Murray's baritone voice?

Is it reincarnation, SPIRIT CONTROL, hypnotism, auto-suggestion? Science has offered its theories, yet physicians, Spiritualists, psychicists and vocal teachers cannot satisfy the girl with the mysterious voice as to the cause of her unique gift.

There is nothing unnatural about Miss Murray and there is nothing unnatural about the voice; it is the combination that is causing scientific discussion and more conjecture than any singing voice has stirred up in the annals of music.

Miss Edna Murray possesses not the so-called female baritone voice, but a real man's voice, with all the masculine qualities.

The thought that Miss Murray is merely one of that abnormal type which is occasionally described in medical journals is entirely erroneous. Physicians wishing to find a physical cause for this strange masculine voice emanating from the essentially feminine-looking young woman give it up. A masculine throat is the only physical cause that can be found. Miss Murray's larynx is as large as a man's her vocal cords are longer than a woman's; but with all this there is something WHICH EVEN THE STRUCTURE OF THE THROAT IS INSUFFICIENT TO EXPLAIN—THE SOMETHING ESSENTIALLY MASCULINE THAT CAUSED HER TO BELIEVE HERSELF CONTROLLED BY SOME OCCULT POWER AND WHICH HAS MADE MEN OF SCIENCE EXCLAIM, "IT IS UNCANNY—POSITIVELY UNCANNY!"

Miss Murray has been examined by Prof. James H. Hyslop, of the American Institute for Scientific Research and the American Society for Psychical Research, and Prof. Hyslop said: "I NEVER HEARD ANYTHING MORE UNCANNY IN MY LIFE."

Dr. G. Washington Colby, the throat specialist, who examined Miss Murray's throat, says that certain characteristics associated with the male larynx exist, but even this does not explain the something which the voice possesses.

Besides, though Miss Murray has a man's throat, she does not talk like a man.

Dr. Carleton Simon, who questioned Miss Murray at length in an endeavor to discover hypnotic control, says, with Prof. Hyslop, "UNCANNY!"

Albert Gerard-Thiers, the voice teacher, says Miss Murray's voice is merely one of nature's misfits, for she possesses a man's baritone voice in a woman's body and she sings perfectly naturally.

Prof. G. M. Mayer, psychologist, after a careful study of Miss Murray, attributes her possession of the mysterious voice to auto or self suggestion.

While scientific men may disagree over this remarkable case, Miss Murray, a charming young woman with blue eyes, brown hair, slender figure and an extreme feminine personality, tells the most interesting story of all.

There is nothing mysterious about Miss Murray's home life. She lives in a Harlem apartment with a gray-haired mother of dignity and refinement who looks upon her daughter's notoriety as a misfortune.

The strangest thing about this mysterious voice is the manner in which it came to its possessor. One June afternoon in her Texas home, when she was twenty years old, it came quite suddenly and mysteriously. Never before had she been able to sing a note.

"I was sitting at the piano playing accompaniments for a young man with a baritone voice," said Miss Murray. "My musical education, let me explain, had always been the cause of great annoyance to me, for I simply hated to practice. It was the sorrow of my father's life that I could not sing, and there was not the slightest evidence in my girlhood that I ever could.

"I do not know what came over me that afternoon, but I said to my friend, 'I can sing that song in a lower voice than you can.'

"He looked at me indulgently, as much as to say, 'Poor girl! The heat has gone to her head!'

"'You're crazy, Texas!' he said. 'Texas' is the nickname everyone calls me by. Well I sat down at the piano and sang 'My Old Kentucky Home,' and when I had finished the young man had fled.

"I can't tell you how surprised I was myself. I was singing with a man's voice, a voice I recognized as coming from my throat, but WHICH SEEMED THE VOICE OF ANOTHER."

Those who have heard Miss Murray sing can understand the weird sensation which has caused even Prof. Hyslop to say "uncanny."

The voice is a beautiful baritone, and if you close your eyes you can only think of a man singing. It is when you see the thoroughly feminine young woman sitting at the piano that the wonder of it all takes possession of you.

"When I heard Edna sing," said the girl's mother, "I thought my heart would break. It was so strange, so—so—so uncanny, and yet so beautiful."

Miss Murray was born in Texas, and all her life she had lived the outdoor existence of a Texas girl. Her home in Fort Worth was like that of any normal girl, and never once up to the time she was twenty was there an intonation in her voice that would suggest the mysterious gift that was to be given her.

"Another strange thing," continued Miss Murray, "the time my voice came to me my handwriting changed. I used to write a fine, cramped hand; NOW I WRITE MORE LIKE A MAN.

"Of course my voice became the talk of the town. When I first sang in Fort Worth people were startled and thought there was something occult about me. You can imagine my feelings on the subject, for never in my life had I been stared at as anything unusual. All my friends urged me to have my voice cultivated, so I decided to.

Miss Murray stopped playing with her pet, a maltese cat, and continued earnestly, "I can't help feeling that there is SOMETHING SUPERNATURAL ABOUT IT ALL, for, try as hard as doctors have to explain my masculine voice through physical traits, they cannot do it. They all admit that I am the most womanly woman they ever knew and that my voice is due solely to the unusual formation of my throat."

When Miss Murray talks her voice is that of a gentle, refined woman, in fact, her every move suggests a sensitive feminine temperament.

"THE MOMENT I BEGIN TO SING I LISTEN TO MY OWN VOICE AS THOUGH IT WERE THAT OF SOME ONE ELSE," SHE CONTINUED. "IT IS LIKE A DETACHED VOICE AND I CRITICISE AND ENJOY IT AS THOUGH IT BELONGED TO ANOTHER PERSON.

"Friends persuaded me to visit Prof. Hyslop. He is very skeptical and expected a fraud at once, but he confessed to me afterward that my voice was beyond his explanation. He questioned me closely about any spiritual experiences I had had, and I told him that when I was a girl A VISITING MEDIUM TO FORT WORTH TOLD ME THAT SOME DAY I WOULD HAVE A BEAUTIFUL VOICE. As I couldn't even hum a tune at that time I thought it was a huge joke. Prof. Hyslop was so interested in my case that he took me to a medium, but we learned nothing through her."

Miss Murray says that at times SHE FEELS AS THOUGH SOME ONE WERE WITH HER. SHE BELIEVES THERE MUST BE SOME SUPERNATURAL CAUSE FOR HER VOICE. HER FATHER'S DEATH, SHE SAYS, MIGHT EXPLAIN SPIRIT CONTROL THROUGH HIS INTERCESSIONS, BUT SHE DOESN'T BELIEVE THIS POSSIBLE.

Following are the statements of some well-known professional men who have examined Miss Murray:

"A laryngoscopic examination of the throat," said Dr. G. Walkington Colby, throat specialist, "reveals the fact that certain characteristics associated with the male larynx exist. The most apparent of these is the extreme length of the vocal cords, these being one-third longer than is ELEVEN usually found in the female and exactly resembles that of the male larynx. The rima glottidis or space between the cords (on inspiration) is also much wider than in most women. The general contour of the larynx suggests the male rather than the female. The epiglottis is somewhat out of the ordinary as to its shape and undoubtedly exerts some specific influence on the voice. There is no pathological condition in any part of the vocal organs, and the entire respiratory tract is in a perfectly normal condition."

"In regard to Miss Murray's voice," said Albert Gerard-Thiers, voice teacher, "I am frank to say I have never heard its equal. It is remarkable. I should be skeptical about even thinking of any supernatural influences, but I do think it is one of nature's misfits, a masculine voice in a feminine body. Her voice, a baritone, is absolutely natural—not cultivated. I believe she has spoken all her life in a falsetto voice at the suggestion of her environment, and that her natural voice is deep and masculine. Unlike most so-called freak voices, this one has a wonderfully beautiful quality."

STRUCK THE RIGHT NOTE.

Strong Reasons Are Offered in Favor of a Spiritualist Fraternal Organization.

I believe that Dr. Caird has struck the right note on organization. I have often wondered why there was no more of the fraternal spirit manifested among Spiritualists; it needs to be fostered and encouraged. Members of societies need something (more than we have at present) to hold them together, and cause them to feel that they are, in a sense, brothers and sisters, members of one family.

To my mind, all the objection that can be offered to secret societies, grips, pass-words, etc., do not offset the one fact, that a Mason or an Odd Fellow will, the world over, hasten to the relief of a brother in distress, and that they can prove by the means of signals that they are a brother. How much do Spiritualists do towards helping each other? Do we always assist each other in sickness or trouble? Do we care for our aged or infirm? Do we stand by each other in evil as well as good report? Or do we condemn at the first evil word and turn a cold shoulder to the erring, instead of extending a helping hand to assist them back to the higher lands of temperance, honesty or virtue, as the case may be?

We can learn many useful lessons from secret organizations, lessons that can well be applied to spiritual societies. There is something in fraternal organization, whether secret or otherwise, that binds and holds as nothing else will, and Spiritualists certainly need something more than they already have to hold them together. If from no other standpoint than a financial one, we thing the idea a good one, for we feel sure that it will give a permanency to spiritual societies that they do not now possess.

I am a member of the order of Red Men. I have not attended a meeting of the order for more than ten years, but I keep my yearly dues paid. My wife recently asked me why I continued to pay five dollars a year to the order, when I never attended the meetings and would not accept relief in case of sickness, and I had no good reason to give except the almost undefinable feeling of loyalty to the brotherhood.

Some may call this a poor argument, and think that members of societies should be workers and should take more interest than just to pay their dues, and so they should, but if they will not work, but are willing to keep their obligations and to help to the extent of paying a yearly due, why, we need that much help, do we not?

Another portion of the plan that strikes me favorably is the idea of traveling and transfer cards. I am somewhat addicted to the traveling habit, and have been many times so situated that I should have been glad to have something besides a ten cent piece to insure me a welcome in the Spiritual meeting where I happened to be. A lady friend of ours who was going to a distant city was questioned as to the prospects of being lonely, and she replied that she should get a transfer card from her society and as soon as she arrived should look up the society in the new home and get to work with them, and was greatly surprised when informed that nothing of the kind was among Spiritualists.

Why not make use of what is good in the forms and ceremonies of secret orders, as well as to copy church forms, as so many try to do? Singing "Nearer, My God, to Thee;" and taking up collections do not make us Christians and we can have a fraternal organization without any of the objectionable features of secret orders. I do not think the originator of this plan ever thought of bringing into its initiation services any variety show business, as some seem to think.

I do not see that it need to conflict in any way with the N. S. A. I believe they issue charters to all forms of societies, local, state and lyceums, and I do not see why a fraternal Spiritual society could not become auxiliary to the National, if the members so elected, and at the same time each be at liberty to work in their own way.

If fraternal organization will bring us, as Spiritualists, nearer each other, let us have it.

IN THE BEYOND.

'Tis only a little way, dear heart,
Only a little way;
Down to the brink of the river side,
Then softly follow the rippling tide,
'Til it washes the shore the other side,
Only a little way.

And it is a pleasant way, dear heart,
It is a pleasant way;
With sound of the water's peaceful flow,
Is borne the breath of the sweet winds low,
And scent of the fairest flowers that blow,
A sunny, pleasant way.

What perfect rapture is known, dear heart,
What perfect rapture known;
When first you anchor upon the strand,
And feel the touch of a well-known hand,
Assured you have reached the immortal land,
What perfect rapture known.

You meet with the ones you loved, dear heart,
Meet with the ones you loved;
A glad light rests on each tender face,
Born of a higher, holier place,
That the flight of years cannot erase,
Pure, tender ones you loved.

But I think the deepest joy, dear heart,
I think the deepest joy;
Of this other life so grand and new,
With its beauty rare and fond souls true;
Was to find I could return to you,
The gladdest, deepest joy.

IMPORTANT MATTERS.

From the National Spiritualists' Association Home Office.

To the Editor:—It gives me pleasure to inform our constituents and all friends of the N. S. A, who read your valuable paper, that the Board of Trustees of this Association, after due deliberation and consultation, has appointed the President of The National Spiritualists' Association, Mr. Harrison D. Barrett, to the joint office of Editor-at-Large, Historian and Missionary-at-Large. The recent convention, held in Chicago emphatically voted to have these duties attended to by, and invested in, one individual, and the board felt that, as an all around worker along these lines, President Barrett is fited for the place. Anyone who has matter suitable for the Historian's work, or who desires to call attention to secular publications needing the attention of the Editor-at-Large, will kindly address Mr. Barrett in care of this office.

Permit us here to make a statement, Mr. Editor, that neither the delegates nor trustees have aught of fault to find at the splendid work of the former Historian, Editor-at-Large and our Missionaries; they are all greatly appreciated, and their value to the cause is recognized. Brother Hudson Tuttle has admirably filled the place of Editor-at-Large, but his time and talent are largely devoted to literary work. He is about to issue a new work from his pen that promises to be a grand addition to the literature of Spiritualism and to stand as a precious stone in his monument. Brother Tuttle's attention is to be given to this and kindred works in which he is needed by the race. Our dear Lyman C. Howe is in failing health, but we hope and trust he may be long spared as a beloved and efficient worker on the rostrum; he cannot move the historian work forward rapidly as we hope the younger worker may do; as far as Brother Howe has gone with this work he has builded well and we have no fear but his labors in every branch of our cause will endure till time shall fade.

Our staunch and well tried missionaries, Mr. and Mrs. Sprague, have done their best—a noble part in the world, we esteem their splendid achievments; for a brief while they may rest from the too arduous labors of constant itinerating work as missionaries; but we still hope to have their co-operation, and that at no distant day the earnest appeals of Missionary Sprague for organization under the banner of the National will be heard in the land. We are proud of all these workers and they are our friends.

As our former Lyceum officer, John W. Ring desired to retire as an overseer in the work of the Lyceum, he having other labors and duties to engage his attention for the Cause, the convention unanimously elected another efficient worker, Mrs. Anna L. Gillespie, to supervise the Lyceum work under the auspices of this Association; it is needless to say that no one could be chosen better fitted for this important work. Brother Ring has done a grand work, made himself known from Maine to California as a champion of the Lyceum, and gained the undying love of elders and youth alike—we are also proud of him.

In his late report to the convention, President Barrett asked for the creation of an endowment fund for the N. S. A., appealing to Spiritualists everywhere to individually send one dollar to this office for such a fund; the subject was well received and several friends at the convention promised to send an annual contribution to such fund. Mr. and Mrs. Titus Welsh of Beaver Falls, Pa., have been the first to each contribute one dollar for an endowment fund—who will be the next? While we have no such fund, we still have to take contributions for the general fund—and Mediums' Relief—for current expenses must not be neglected, but friends wishing their donations to go for an Endowment Fund will kindly so state when sending the same.

With love and greetings to all the world; cordially,

MARY T. LONGLEY,
Secretary.

A Vision and a Prophecy.

In the night from Friday, October 12, till Saturday, I had a curious vision.

I saw waters like a big stream in great turmoil; there appeared on the waters a kind of vessel, loaded heavy with all kinds of truck, the boxes reaching high up into the air, floating down the river, while I was standing on the bank. Then suddenly came a powerful steamer, hitched to this floating repository and pulled her in terrible disturbed waters aground, clear out of sight, and nothing was saved. The steamer disappeared in the distance.

Then came a fat cow swimming down the stream, and I called her, "Bossy! come, Bossy," and others helped me, crying out, "Bossy, come," and the cow left the waters and swam to the shore.

We are going through a great cycle; notice all inventions for the last twenty-five years; remember the hurricanes on the seashores; think of the terrible earthquakes; the revolution in Russia; this is only the beginning. We are not through this disturbance. The church is the main object. In the coming years we shall see the fall of Babylon, the confusion of the Christian religion and nothing will be safe except Spiritualism. Our cow will land in safety on hard soil under her feet.

I saw the horizon east of the Mississippi become very dark, and also the western part, but the western part was not half so dark as the eastern; this darkness was in the east first; there seems to be a small streak of light over the Mississippi, but suddenly down came the forces from both sides. When we have religious disturbances in the east, look out and keep away from the big cities on the Mississippi river north of St. Louis; they will catch it from both sides, for the fall of the church is at hand. The steamer that pulled the storehouse to the ground and buried it, I think it is France. Spain is following, and Austria-Hungary and Italy are ready any time to overthrow the church. When the Roman Catholic church is gone, it is gone forever, and we will feel in our Republic her convulsion in her death agony. H. LANDON.

THE PSYCHOGRAPH

OR

Dial Planchette.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than twelve years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the

with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

When Girls Go Wrong.

A Matter of Grave Importanee Is Wisely Considered and Judiciously Treated by One Who Has Had Much Experience in Such Cases, and Has Gained a World-Wide and Enviable Reputation for His Noble and Successful Humanitarian Work—Judge Ben B. Lindsey, of Denver, Colorado.

IT IS SOUL-ELEVATING AND MOST GLORIOUS TO KNOW THAT SPIRIT RETURN IS TRUE, BUT WE ARE NOW LIVING ON EARTH, AND SHOULD CAREFULLY CONSIDER ITS CONDITIONS, AND HOW TO IMPROVE THE SAME. ANY ADVANCE MADE THEREIN, IN PROPERLY EDUCATING AND SPIRITUALIZING THE MASSES, NOT ONLY IS A BENEFIT TO THE MATERIAL SIDE OF LIFE, BUT ALSO TO THE SPIRITUAL PLANES OF EXISTENCE. THE FOLLOWING COMMUNICATION WILL GIVE YOU A COMPREHENSIVE INSIGHT INTO A CERTAIN STRATA OF LIFE, OVER WHICH THE MOST WATCHFUL CARE SHOULD BE MADE.

REALLY, THE ONLY SIDE OF LIFE THAT NEEDS TO BE CAREFULLY AND TENDERLY WATCHED, IS THE DARK SIDE—THE SIDE OF SIN, WRETCHEDNESS AND MISERY. THAT IS WHY THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER NEVER FOR A MOMENT LETS UP IN ITS STRUGGLE TO IMPROVE OUR RANKS BY ELIMINATING FRAUD AND TRICKERY THEREIN, AND ALSO TO SO PROTECT AND EDUCATE THE YOUNG THAT A PURE AND NOBLE MANHOOD AND WOMANHOOD WILL BE THE RESULT.

THE BRIGHT SPIRITUALIZED PLANE OF LIFE ON EARTH NEEDS NO ATTENTION; IT HAS A PERENNIAL OUTGROWTH OF GOOD FRUIT; BUT THE DARK, UNSPIRITUALIZED PLANES NEED CONSTANT ATTENTION, OR THE DARKNESS THEREOF WILL INCREASE. SPIRITUALISTS, CAN YOU NOT SEE THE POINT, AND RECOGNIZE THE AIM AND EFFORTS OF THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER? MOTHERS AND FATHERS, READ CAREFULLY "WHEN GIRLS GO WRONG," AND WE ARE SURE YOU WILL THANK US FOR PUBLISHING IT.

I once asked a little girl how it was that where we had twenty bad boys in court, we only had one little girl. "Well," she replied in the most innocent way, evidently wishing that the girls should not be outdone, "One bad little girl is worse'n twenty bad little kids, any time."

And this little girl was even wiser than she knew, because the probation officer in the children's court knows too well the truth of this statement. A boy is generally a part of most girls' troubles. The case must be sifted to the bottom that every cause of pollution may be ascertained and stamped out. One girl's case, through the skilled and careful work of the probation officers, has often yielded twenty men, women and children to be dealt with.

In dealing with the girl problem in the children's court, we are dealing largely with the moral and social question. The great majority of girls brought to the children's court are brought there for offenses involving their virtue; and however much tact and discretion may be required in discussing such questions, it would be a great mistake to entirely refrain from such discussion because of the delicacy of the subject; for its very delicacy emphasizes its extreme importance. Yet speaking generally as apublic officer, it is only natural that my talk on girls must concern the evil of their lives; and I am frank to confess this has always been an unpleasant thing to do. We prefer to associate our thoughts of a little girl with all that is pure and good, and I thank God we can do this in most cases.

I have sometimes been so misunderstood in things I have said that I hesitate to make statements which might be seized upon by the alarmist or the pessimist, and exaggerated far beyond their real worth. The immoral girl is exceptional; and while I might sit down in the company of fathers and mothers, and speak frankly of my experience with some cases of girls, it would be necessary to almost constantly remind them that I was speaking of the exceptional case, and there was no occasion for becoming morbid, or believing, because there are such cases, it was any indication of an immoral condition in childhood.

And yet if we discuss the troubles of girls, we are compelled to discuss matters of sex, and the ignorance, thoughtlessness and viciousness of children with reference thereto. Ignorance of parents and children is the chief cause of vice in such matters. I will therefore have to preface what I have to say with this general statement: That every father and mother may take it as an absolute fact that nine-tenths of the school-boys and girls in city and country are extremely curious regarding questions of sex; and I have no hesitation in stating that boys frequently discuss it in a most improper and unfortunate way.

I have been amazed to find that this same condition exists among girls, to a much greater extent than I ever dreamed. I have learned this in the children's court, after repeated experiences in talking with little girls and their mothers in the privacy of my chambers, regarding their troubles brought to my attention by parents, officers and principals of schools. Of course, it is much better that such troubles should be corrected in the home and the school, if possible, without the intervention of the court.

In the Denver Juvenile Court, however, as a rule, no complaint is ever filed of record in such cases; no child's name is spread upon any book, no legal formalities are had; but in the privacy of the judge's chamber, always in the presence of the mother, and preferably both parents, the girl is talked to in the kindliest and most friendly and confiding way. The purpose of this is first to get the entire truth from the child. The truth may be suppressed through too much false shame and through fear of detection and punishment or other severity of court or parents, and the natural mortification that must come from the exposure.

Nothing but love, the utmost kindness, sane teaching, sympathy and encouragement should ever be used in correcting a little girl who has fallen into moral delinquency. Such delinquency begins generally through association with a corrupt and older girl, confidences exchanged on forbidden subjects without knowledge of parent or teacher.

I might better illustrate what I mean with a few actual experiences in the children's court.

An officer once brought to me two copy books containing some of the most improper literature that the fiendish mind of man could invent. Such stuff floating among children is a thousand times worse than the measles or smallpox. It was discovered that one of the copy books belonged to a 13-year-old boy; the other to a little girl of the same age.

The boy told me that the girl had obtained his copy book quite by accident and had obtained permission to copy its contents. The girl afterwards, in the presence of her mother, verified all the boy had said. He told me frankly that he knew six little girls in the school who had similar copies, and from some source unknown to him had similar literature, which they had shown him, but which he had not seen fit to copy.

This boy was bright and refined, stood well in school, attended his church, and at the time I talked to him was being prepared for confirmation, yet neither his father, mother, teacher or preceptor had the slightest knowledge of this pollution in his life. No grown person ever talked to him on such subjects except a hired man who talked to him in the vilest way, as is generally the case. He frankly told me that he had made improper suggestions to several little girls. I asked him about the girls he knew, and I found that he had several playmates among them. I said, expecting the same reply that always comes, "Tom, why did you ever have the same thoughts, or make the same suggestions to Anna B?" (Of course, no real names are used.) "Well," he said, "She was entirely 'different' from Jennie." "Well," I said, "What does Jennie say?" "Oh," he said, "she is kind of flip; she laughs and jokes about such things." "Well," I said, "If you were to say the same thing to Anna B, what would she do?" "Oh," he promptly responded, "she would slap me in the face, or never speak to me again; I could not think of such a thing. You know, judge, she is 'different' from Jennie."

This boy told me that among his playmates in school they frequently discussed Jennie K. Gossip among them was rife and common. Not a single father, mother or teacher suspected it.

When we remember that children read the daily papers, that they frequently hear discussions among their elders which are more or less veiled, with the idea that they do not understand, that they are constantly in the streets, back and forth from school, directly or indirectly in contact with those much older than themselves, it is no wonder that at a very early age their curiosity may take a dangerous turn; therefore the necessity for companionship between mothers and their girls, and fathers and their boys; and if there be no father, a discreet and tactful mother may, without danger take his place. I have had hundreds of children here in my experience, who were more or less involved in such troubles, and I have made it an invariable rule to ask a girl in the presence of her mother, and to always ask the boy if the parent has ever counseled and advised them in regard to such matters, and the invariable answer has been that their only information came from the street, and from boy companions. And I can say, without hesitation, that not more than one child in twenty has ever been able to tell me that father or mother had given them any counsel or advice on one of the most important matters of life—pure and holy when properly understood, and one of the greatest sources of corruption in childhood, and therefore in manhood and womanhood—when unexplained, or learned from the filthy, poisonous sources of the street.

But to return to my story.

I sent for the mother and the girl. She was a pleasant, sweet-faced child. Her mother was a hard-working woman, the bread-winner for a number of little children, and appeared to be a refined and intelligent mother.

I found that the girl was more or less forward. I explained to her that the proceeding was purely in her interest; that no one but her mother and I should know the facts, and in the most tactful way her confidence was gained. Of course, the mother was surprised to know that her girl could have written pages of vile stuff about which she supposed the child was ignorant. Yet the girl frankly told her mother she had known of such things since she was nine years old, and such forbidden subjects were a part of the conversation of a dozen of her companions since she was eleven. She also told her mother in my presence that at least fifteen boys in the school she attended had made improper suggestions to her; she admitted that, though she fully understood, she had never cried, had never slapped any boy in the face, never bowed her head in shame, never gone to mother or teacher with the slightest word. She also admitted receiving without detection many improper notes in the school-room, and that she had never informed either parent or teacher. She said she could give me the names of twelve girls in her school who talked just as much as she did about such matters, and to whom boys had said the same things said to her.

Of course, this case simply represented one of those exceptional conditions that arise in a neighborhood, which is not the fault of the school but rather of the home, and which only becomes the more aggravated because of the school life of boys and girls where they necessarily mingle more or less together. And because this is true is no more reason why the school should be blamed than we should blame it for the spread of the measles or the whooping cough. It is simply one of those dangers of association which can only be avoided by proper training in the home. It is more frequently discovered in the school.

I believe that more such cases come to the children's court of a town the size of Denver than the average children's court in the larger cities, simply because the personal work with the children is of a more systematic character, and there is a closer relation between school, home and court, all three of which work together for the redemption of the child, with the same interest of a wise parent. The result of this has been that the great majority of such cases among children will be found out, the parents informed, and the right education instilled in the child and the parent, which, after all, is the best method of protection.

The great trouble is that parents frequently do not know their own children. They think they do, and occasionally we find a mother who is very much insulted to be informed of the shortcomings of her daughter. I have never known of a single case out of the large number dealt with in five years, where the mother did not afterward admit her mistake, and confess, often with tears, that she did not know, and could not have believed, and left only expressions of thankfulness that a warning came in time to save the purity and virtue of her darling child.

The very day that I write this, a mother and father have spent an hour with me talking to their sixteen-year-old girl, who has fallen to the very depths. The girl admitted to me, in the presence of her mother and father, that her first knowledge of such matters came through notes passed about in the school, and the common gossip that floats among children at the curious age, and that impure suggestions had come to her from several boys before she was twelve years old; that she showed no proper resentment; that she knew of evil then, but did not understand; no sympathetic, fond and loving heart had ever explained. Yet her mother did not know.

With this mother was another daughter—sweet and pure, innocent and beautiful—seven years of age. I have no doubt that the sad experience of this mother with her sixteen-year-old girl may be the means of saving the one of seven; and yet the mother told me that the older girl at a similar age was even more beautiful, more sweet and fetching than the little child of seven, whose life seemed to be perpetual sunshine and joy.

Within a week I had four boys from homes on Capitol Hill complained of for a rather serious offense. I talked to those boys separately, and then to their fathers, who accompanied them to my chambers. First I tried talking to all together, but their embarrassment was so painfully apparent and falsehood so surely encouraged thereby that one of the more sensible fathers suggested that they withdraw. I soon put them at their ease; they knew perfectly that I fully understood them; that while I did not justify their conduct, there was a sufficient amount of sympathy to make the truth perfectly easy, and the truth is the most important thing in such cases. Each boy admitted he had said improper things to little girls, and with one exception, every girl had turned it away with a flippant side remark, as a mere joking, foolish thing, betokening an amount of smartness in the boy. Of course, no parent knew. The maidenly modesty that is the chief protection of every girl, that commands respect from every boy or man, is generally lacking in the girl who suffers insult.

These boys admitted to me that there were other girls to whom they would no more dare to say such things than to put their hands in the fire.

Now I am bound to assume that these troubles come more from an improper attitude on the part of the girl than on the part of the boy. With a boy, as with a man, there is a natural instinct which has its good and its evil side, and whether the good or evil comes to the surface in their relations with the opposite sex depends generally on the attitude, conduct and behavior of the female.

The lack of prompt rebuke may give encouragement to evil, however pure and proper may have been the intention of the insulted. I say then that if every little girl would show the proper maidenly modesty, under such circumstances as I have described, if she would slap the face of the little traducer, if she would hang her head in shame, if she would refuse to ever speak to him again, without apology and reparation, and above all things, if she would go straightway to teacher or mother, ninety-nine per cent of this kind of immorality among children and grown people would be abolished.

Therefore we must appeal to the parents to do their duty, to know and understand their boys and girls, if we are to make them pure and clean, if we are to preserve the home and the manhood and womanhood of to-morrow.

The four thousand people whom I have divorced since I have sat upon the bench have been to me a much more interesting study than the three thousand children who have been brought before me for offenses, largely against property. But most of the trouble began in childhood, and here is where prevention had its chance and neglect stored up trouble for the future. Then nine-tenths of the girls go wrong because of the ignorance, carelessness and inattention of their parents. They do not all land in the red-light district; in fact, a very small per cent reach this depth of shame. They are in society a part of its pollution and filth. They are responsible for many of the divorce cases, for the broken homes, desertions, sorrow, misery, blighted faith, despair and the great mass of social ills which infect society and of which we hear and know but little, except through the suicide, divorce, desertion, and the sensational exceptions which compel attention. But we feel it all, and we must all suffer in the end, as Jacob Riis so often says, unless our dangers and our duty be pointed out by those who know, and that duty learned and lived in every home.

I say unhesitatingly that the great majority of girls who enter into a life of sin and are generally forced to the attention of the courts at 18 to 20, after the real mischief is done, begin their wayward course, as early as eleven or twelve. It may be a small thing, it may not attract attention, but that it was there I have no doubt; and every wayward girl I ever talked to in my court has assured me of this truth.

And this is the time we are trying in Denver to do as much of it as we can by knowing facts, and informing parents and educating home and parents. After the girl has passed adolescence, no more hopeless task presents itself than complete redemption. Handicapped in a thousand ways, outlawed, ignored by her sisters in the world, there is little charity and little hope. The boy—the man—is either forgiven, his sin forgotten or even by some—the shame of it all—looked upon with a certain amount of sanction. Industrial homes and schools do much good, but they are a poor, feeble effort after all to correct mistakes that could have easily been prevented if learned in time.

An enlightened public sentiment should exact from men the same purity of life that is exacted from women. Boys and girls are more or less the creatures of example and influence, and until men and women set this example we may expect to encounter these awful difficulties in sacred childhood.

The greater good that must come to our girls by constant pounding away at the parents as to their duty in the home, in time, before evil comes, is to my mind so tremendously important, that I have here made no attempt to deal with the possibilities of Industrial Homes that deal with the soiled, broken and almost hopeless image.

We can do more to bring about happy marriages, to decrease divorce, desertion, infidelity and crime in a single generation by exacting and receiving from parents greater care and interest in their children than all the courts can do in a thousand years.

I am therefore convinced that this moral question among children is by far the most important problem that concerns the preservation of the American home; and beside it, the mere matter of the boy or girl who steals or runs away, is of small moment. If then, the nation decays—as it must, if the American home is undermined—it is because mothers and fathers have proven false; it is because mothers and fathers have become traitors to childhood's sacred cause. Schools, churches, children's courts can do much, but they cannot supply the deficiency of hopeless homes, for there, in the bosom of the American home, is the little child; and there also is the State—for the child is the State, and the State is the child.

Preserve the child and you preserve the State; take care of the child, and the State will take care of itself.—Hon. Ben B. Lindsey in the Juvenile Advocate.

AN ENJOYABLE SOCIAL.

At Which Mrs. Anna L. Gillespie Was the Central Star.

To the Editor:—On the evening of the 14th inst., another most delightful and enjoyable social function was held at the beautiful home of Mr. and Mrs. Eli Link of this city in honor of that undaunted truth-disseminator and steadfast friend of humanity, Mrs. Anna L. Gillespie. About thirty guests were present to participate in the bountiful hospitality of our genial hosts. After a most elaborate and delectable dinner had been served, during which there was a feast of viands and a flow of wit, the time was very pleasantly passed in social friendly conversation, charades, and music, both vocal and instrumental. Prof. John Bowen, Jr., contributed greatly to the enjoyment of the occasion by rendering several fine solos on the cornet. Such occasions are like oases in the desert of our too strenuous mortal lives. They tend to draw people closer to each other; to develop good, and to awaken the recognition of our kinship, our universal brotherhood. Time will not efface from the tablets of our memories the recollection of that evening spent so happily with Mr. and Mrs. Link, and we all agree in asserting, if they cannot entertain, then indeed is the word a misnomer, and no others need attempt.

Battle Creek, Mich. N. H. B.

Death by Drowning of F. C. Demorest.

On the 23rd of August my brother, Frederick C. Demorest, aged 30 years, and son of Mrs. Elizabeth J. Demorest of Pittsburg, Pa., passed to spirit life through drowning in the Ohio river, at Midland, Pa.

Everything possible being done at the time to recover the body proved unsuccessful. Hope had been given up by all but our mother, who declared he was buried some place, and she would yet get the body and carry out his wish to be cremated, as he always had a horror of being buried in the ground.

While he would come to us in spirit, still for some unknown reason we could not get from him where his physical body was, anxious as he seemed that we should have it.

At the request of friends in East Liverpool, Ohio, my mother attended a circle there. The mediums, young men, C. and Howard Powell, who are developing very fine mediumistic powers.

The younger medium on seeing my mother immediately became entranced, and my spirit brother told through his lips that the body we were seeking was found and buried, telling where, and to get it at once.

Mother and friends, after securing the necessary permit from the authorities, had the grave opened and oh! how true, for there in almost perfect condition was the body of our loved one for whom we had been looking so long.

His request to cremate the body, was carried out, October 23.

Rev. Geo. Day of Allegheny, Pa., conducted the impressive services of the Spiritualist church. Beautiful were the flowers from his many friends. With the sweet singing of Mr. and Mrs. Evens of the Spiritualist Church of Pittsburg, Pas, closed the last earthly rites of him who now lives in the soul life.

SOME NEEDS OF THE LYCEUM.

Paper by Mrs. Mattie E. Hull, Whitewater, Wis., Read Before the Fourteenth Annual Convention of the N. S. A.

I regret that I am unable to present myself in person at this your very important meeting, to consider the interests of the young people, and will do the next best thing, that is to comply with the request of National Superintendent John W. Ring, and prepare a brief paper on "Some Needs of the Lyceum."

I thank you for suggesting that theme, as it would have been my chosen one. I have given that side of the lyceum question, for many years, serious, careful consideration. While there may be many needs that could be mentioned, in my humble opinion, there are four which are fundamental, and according to my best judgment, if these could be met, the lyceum question could be easily managed.

First, there is need of a wider and deeper interest in the lyceum movement, among our workers on the rostrum. This does not imply that our itinerant lecturers or mediums could be expected to take up the lyceum work in connection with other work and enter into hearty co-operation as regards all details relative to the lyceum. I mean that their voice could be given in its favor and often in earnest solicitation for support in various ways. I have attended scores of meetings within a few years, including camps and mass-meetings, where earnest, eloquent appeals have been made for a generous suport of the Spiritualistic movement. Home circles have been urged also regular Sunday meetfor a generous support of the Spiritualistic press, a closer sympathy among those of our faith, etc. All this is good, I endorse it most heartily, but I have regretted that no mention was made on these occasions, of the needs of the children and youths among the Spiritualists. This would have introduced the lyceum subject, and I have felt many times, if the claims of the young in our ranks were duly set forth, much might have been done toward creating a place for the Spiritualist Sunday-school or Progressive Lyceum.

Second, parents and guardians of children are as a general thing wofully indifferent relative to the moral and spiritual development of their children. This condition has, for many years, been a continuous surprise to me. There is probably not a public worker present who can not recall instances where fathers and mothers have expressed their joy that they have become emancipated from the thraldom of orthodoxy, and at the same time were sending their children to some purely orthodox Sunday-school, on the plea that there was no other place for them to go. Sometimes such parents (seemingly in order to argue themselves into the thought that it was right) have said, "If I can have my children under my influence six days in the week, I have no fear of any influence that may come from church associations one day in the week." There never was a greater mistake, as hundreds of cases have proven. Children should be invited to the home circles when such attendance would not interfere with other duties. The writer has known of instances where children have cried themselves to sleep because of the baby that "died" or that papa or mamma had "gone," when in the house where the little ones have wept, and at the same time, "the dear departed" were manifesting in another room. These things are wickedly wrong. Is it not the duty of every parent who has learned death is not an enemy,—a terror,—to make an effort to rid the child mind of the torturing fear of death? In short, if Spiritualism has presented the best philosophy of life, and the sweetest, most rational religion to the fathers and mothers who declare they would not exchange it for naught else, is it not just as good for their children? I leave this point here by saying, such philosophy, such religion is the result of proper lyceum teachings.

Third, another need of the lyceum, and I would write these words in large italics, is that we have competent instructors. During the later work of the lyceum, I have found to my sorrow that in the estimation of many, the important requisites for a lyceum leader were those abilities relating mostly to the entertainment phase taught among the children especially in the large towns. I am reminded here of a worthy young woman who at one time applied to conduct a lyceum at a Spiritualist campmeeting, and although she was well qualified to teach along intellectual and moral lines she was not a professor of music or dancing and she was not wanted. Far be it from me to discredit any form of rational amusement, but there are persons especially trained for the teaching of music and dancing. As a general thing their services can be secured for a small consideration, but the tender, patient, wise and loving teacher adapted for the lyceum work cannot be found every day.

There are many excellent instructors for the larger boys and girls,—teachers who are enabled to present moral lessons and to give spiritual illustrations in a manner that can reach the youth, but the little folks so full of their questionings, so receptive, so watchful, so much alive to every glance and action of their teacher, they should have, if possible, instructors who, if not wonderfully inspirational, should be trained with the utmost care. Are there those present who say they have no time to enlist in such work? If so, I am sorry.

Our beloved and highly appreciated elder brother, Andrew Jackson Davis, did a great thing for Spiritualism when he described his visions of the schools in the spiritual realms. In his work, he builded a monument more enduring than bronze or marble. The Lyceum Manual is a wonderful volume, but nearly half a century has passed since that was compiled and the world has been moving ever since and will continue to move and our lyceum workers are stepping out of beaten paths. Schools are in session on the spirit side of life, and they can be of value to us if we make conditions favorable for the co-operation of the teachers in that larger realm of thought.

It is hoped that sometime a lyceum department con be created in the Morris Pratt School—the only Spiritualist School in the world as far as known. Why not? If our inspired young people—those who have been touched with the power of the spirit from the realm of spirit, if such are to be educated, encouraged in mediumship and otherwise trained for acceptable work in pulpit and on the rostrum, why is it not rational to hope that sometime such work may be supplemented by practical training for the Sunday-school work of the Progressive Lyceum.

Fourth, the last named need in this paper in connection with the lyceum, is the need of literature suitable for lyceum pupils. Several efforts have been made with poor encouragement from the Spiritualists. I am sure, if proper funds could be secured, there would be no lack of leaflets, papers and books and lyceum libraries, and also for instruction. How strange it seems to us, that Spiritualists so generally claim they cannot help to raise a fund for such printed matter as is absolutely necessary for the success of the lyceum, when money is so freely expended for volumes treating on the mysteries of the occult, the various theories of reincarnation, the expensive works from the publishing house of the Raja Yoga School, etc., and many a Spiritualist lyceum compelled to do without even the Lyceum Guide, and the helpful little sheet, The Progressive Lyceum."

My dear Brother Ring, that you may receive abundant encouragement and still hold the place of National Superintendent of Lyceum Work, is the wish of one who would ask no other epitaph on the slab that may sometime mark the spot where her dust lies, "She Loved the Children."

Most sincerely,
MATTIE E. HULL.

SPIRITUALISM IN ROCHESTER.

After Sleep of Several Months, the Society Awakens to Action.

For the past six months, the society of Spiritualists at Rochester, Ind., seemed to be in a Rip Van Winkle sleep, and fear was expressed by certain members that the sleep would continue indefinitely. The spirit world, however, seemed to feel differently, so without much warning, those valiant workers and honest mediums, Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague, came among us, much as John the Baptist did of old, crying, "Prepare ye the way."

Although these good people have ministered to the hungry hearts of this city many times before, and they were tired from the work and confusion of the convention, never did they acquit themselves with greater credit and glory for the cause of Spiritualism than at this last visit. The lectures of Mr. Sprague were clean and logical, breathing the fiery enthusiasm of a life devoted to a mighty truth.

The messages given by Mrs. Sprague were clear and concise. In fact she did better work than on any former occasion.

They went from Rochester to Warsaw and Lafayette, carrying the story of undying man to the weary and tired-hearted.

Will J. Erwood, missionary for the Indiana State Association, came to us Wednesday, November 7, and delivered three stirring lectures on attractive topics, which elicited not only applause, but carried the conviction of truth to the hearers. He gave a few psychic readings at the close of each lecture, which helped many to a greater understanding of the beauty in Spiritualism. Mr. Erwood has won his way into the respect and confidence of our citizens generally, and the writer is convinced if the Rochester society could keep him as a settled speaker, we could build a church in the near future that would be a credit to the Spiritualistic movement.

The society is small in number and not over-burdened with the "wherewith" that makes a church successful, but we are strong in heart and purpose, and believe if the spirit world sees we are deserving of help, some soul will be sent to our help.

We have made arrangements to have Mr. Erwood deliver four lectures every month, during his ministration in Indiana. We also hope to have such able speakers on our platform, before the winter is over, as Will V. Nicum, Dr. Geo. B. Warne and others, who hold the cause of truth on high.

WE SHOULD SMILE.

The thing that goes the furthest to-making life worth while—
That costs the least and does the most —is just a pleasant smile—
The smile that bubbles from the heart that loves its fellow-men
Will drive away the cloud of gloom and coax the sun again.
It's full of worth and goodness, too,
with manly kindness blent;
It's worth a million dollars, and it doesn't cost a cent.
There is no room for sadness when we see a cheery smile;
It always has the same good luck—it's never out of style;
It nerves us on to try again when failure makes us blue;
Such dimples of encouragement are good for me and you,
So smile away; folks understand what by a smile is meant—
It's worth a million dollars, and it doesn't cost a cent.

English Spiritualist Causes Spook to Issue From Archdeacon's Side on a Wager.

The new illusion which Mr. J. N. Maskelyne is producing at the St. George's Hall under the title, "A Side Issue," is the result of certain letters on Spiritualism that passed between Mr. Maskelyne and Archdeacon Colley. Archdeacon Colley volunteered to forfeit £1,000 if Mr. Maskelyne, as a conjurer, could reproduce a phenomenon which the Archdeacon declared had been produced by Dr. Monk as a medium. Mr. Maskelyne has described his illusion thus: "I fall into a trance, and then a vapor curls out of my side. The so-called materialization begins. First a hand, then other parts of the body appear, until the whole living, moving form stands revealed." The £1,000 has been duly claimed, and Mr. Maskelyne has announced that he will sue the Archdeacon if the money is not forthcoming.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Figures Won't Lie.

TheAndover Theological Seminary, one of the great institutions of New England for making clerics, with a former annual attendance of over one hundred students, has dwindled to eleven, only three entering the class at the beginning of the current school year.

The president of the University of Illinois has asked the trustees of the Seminary to remove the institution to this state, and connect it with our State University.

If reports can be trusted theological Seminaries are under the public ban. Their object, as the term seminary seems to half express, is to give students a half education, and it would seem the most worthless half at that.

But why is a theological seminary needed as an adjunct to a state institution which is sustained at public expense?

In our innocence we supposed church and state were divorced in this country; but turn the eye which way we may, and they seem coming together again. A priest as chaplain, is required to minister in all our legislative bodies, as in the army and navy. Wherever possible the Bible, with all its crudity and obscenity, is forced into our public schools, which often are opened by prayer. The founders of the American government contemplated no such condition. Indeed, by constitutional enactment they purposed to prohibit it. But constitution and law are disregarded by the clerics.

The French Revolution found a remedy for a similar evil which dominated France.

It is hoped the remedy France employed will not be needed in this country, and will not be if statute and fundamental law are not disregarded.

China to the Front.

An imperial edict of the Chinese government, just issued, referring to a previous command that the nation prepare a Constitution, now outlines many changes in the administrative system. The edict declares the present system is dangerous alike to high and low, and it calls on the ministers to act together, warning them if they disobey they will be punished. IT DECLARES THE LAWS AND REGULATIONS MADE BY THEIR ANCESTORS WERE GOOD FOR THAT TIME BUT THEY ARE NOW SUPERFLUOUS, AND MUST BE ABOLISHED.

If all the churches of Christendom will act as wisely as the "heathen Chinee" will doubtless act, they, too, will discard their inheritance from barbarism, consign their creeds, their narrow faith, and their false Word of God to oblivion, and build anew, along modern lines. They were well enough for primitive man. All else has advanced. Knowledge has taken a stronger and deeper root; the sciences have burst on us with great effulgence; the spirit world has opened communication between themselves and mortals, so why should the churches, with their false conceptions of life, of immortality, and of God remain as taught by our savage ancestors when just emerging into barbarism?

If the "heathen Chinee" can step up higher, why cannot the Christian clergy?

FELLOWSHIP.

The Golden Age we will revive,
Each man will be a brother;
In harmony we all shall live,
And share the earth together.
In virtue trained, enlightened youth
Will love each fellow-creature
And future years shall prove the truth
That man is good by nature.
Then let us toast with three times three
The reign of Peace and Liberty.
—Robert Burns.

The Sabbath of Babylonian Origin.

Rev. A. H. Sayce, M. A., Professor of Philology in Oxford University, in his "Fresh Light from the Ancient Monuments," p. 24, says:

"The seventh day was observed as a day of rest among the Babylonians, as it was among the Jews. It was even called by the same name of Sabbath, a word which is defined in an Assyrian text as 'a day of rest for the heart, while the Accadian equivalent is explained to mean 'a day for the completion of labor.' A calendar of saints' days for the month of the intercalary Elul makes the 7th, 14th, 21st, and 28th days of the lunar months Sabbath, on which certain works were forbidden to be done. On those days, it is stated, 'flesh cooked on the fire may not be eaten, the clothing of the body may not be changed, white garments may not be put on, a sacrifice may not be offered, the king may not ride in his chariot, or speak in public, the augur [prophet] may not mutter in a secret place, medicine of the body may not be applied, nor may any curse be uttered.'"

Here in Babylon, where time was first divided into weeks, and the days were first named after the seven planets, as Rev. Sacey relates, and where the story of the fall of man originated, as told on the monuments, where the "tree of life" stood, and where "the serpent of night and darkness" held sway, there, instead of being revealed to Moses by God, this sacred day was invented.

We are told the Jews were seventy years captives in Babylon. These same copyists extracted the laws of the province of Babylonia, and they were transferred to Jerusalem, and in process of time have come down to us, and are presented to us by Christians as commands of the Lord. He who doubts their divine origin is in Christian language a heretic, and, caught at it, is expelled from the church.

Note particularly, "a calendar of saint's days" which cuts such a large figure in the Roman Catholic ritual, and which Protestants are gradually adopting, existed many centuries before our era, and had a place on those ancient monuments. Truly, whoever was the Solomon who wrote the book of Ecclesiastes was correct when he said, "There is nothing new under the sun," yet he might have added with propriety: "But Bible writers had a faculty of plagiarizing ancient records, and imposing them on the world as the Word of God."

The Immortal Mind Remains.

The best literature of the world abounds with extended accounts of communications, from what purports to be messages from spirit life, to mortals yet in the flesh. It is common alike to profane as to sacred history. Homer, in his Iliad, book 23, line 122, 123, says:

"'Tis true, 'tis certain; man though dead, retains Part of himself; the immortal mind remains."

Homer relates the "shade" of Protroclus returning after being slain in battle, and says of him:

"In the same robe he living wore, he came;
In stature, voice and pleasing look, the same."

Then Protroclus arouses Achilles from his sleep, and addresses him for neglect to give his body burial. The whole chapter is thrillingly interesting, but we hasten.

On the evening of October 31, at his home on West State street, Rockford, Ill., Mr. C. C. Burroughs, upwards of ninety years of age, left the mortal form. Mrs. Sarah Winn, at 208 South West street, a close friend of Mr. Burroughs, living only three blocks from him, told a press reporter, published in the Republic, of that city, of date Nov. 2, that "The deceased appeared plainly before me, even as plain as though in real life, and said: 'Mrs. Winn, I will soon see your mother and father.' The voice was solemn, yet was mingled with joy, and seemed sweet. The vision vanished suddenly, and I was left alone in a state of bewilderment."

Mrs. Winn was at her sewing machine engaged in needle work, when she saw her aged friend, and the time seems coincident with the period the spirit left the body.

Similar cases are constantly occurring, and there is no motive for falsification. One such is worth a thousand "commercial" materializations, in which fraud is so liable to enter. In this case neither of the parties was a Spiritualist. Mr. Burroughs in life, as repeatedly expressed to the writer, was an Agnostic, with no faith in a continued life.

The Holy Ghost.

The primary sense of the word ghost, Kitto tells us, is wind, and is identical with the term spirit, air, ether, air refined, sublimated, or vitalized. "It is a divine inspiration or afflatus, by which the prophets and holy men wrote and spoke. It was the miraculous gift and power with which the apostles were endowed, to qualify them for the work to which they were called. Jesus breathed on them and said, 'Receive ye the Holy Ghost.' John 20:22."

This Holy Ghost, the third person in the Christian Godhead, seems identical with that influence the hypnotist receives when brought under the control of a successful operator. It is the condition every Spiritual medium passes into, when receiving messages from the departed dear ones. Jesus, in breathing on his subjects, and filling them with the Holy Ghost, employed precisely the same method some Mesmeric operators employ to pass their subjects into a trance condition, and further develop them into clairvoyants.

The source of the power was unknown to the ancients, so Christians in their ignorance, made it a third part of their God. An excusable blunder perhaps, but it is hoped we are not obliged to imitate them.

To Regulate Spiritualism.

THE FOLLOWING ARTICLE THAT HAS BEEN GOING THE ROUNDS OF THE PRESS, INDICATES THAT A MOVE IS TO BE MADE TO "REGULATE" SPIRITUALISM. THAT FEELING, WE REGRET TO SAY, IS ARISING IN ALL THE LARGE CITIES WHERE A BLATANT FRAUDULENT ELEMENT, UNDER THE NAME OF MEDIUMSHIP, HAS BEEN FLEECING THE PEOPLE MORE OR LESS FOR YEARS. IN LOS ANGELES, CAL., ONE WHOLE PAGE OF A SUNDAY PAPER IS DEVOTED TO EXPLOITING THE "GIFTS" AND "POWERS" OF THE WORST SET OF PRETENTIOUS "MEDIUMISTIC" FAKERS THAT EVER EXISTED. TO "REGULATE" SPIRITUALISM WOULD INTERFERE MORE OR LESS WITH THE INALIENABLE RIGHTS OF HUNDREDS OF HONEST MEDIUMS WHO ARE DOING THE WORK OF THE ANGEL WORLD. IF THE FRAUDS, CHARLATANS, AND TRICKSTERS THAT HAVE FASTENED THEMSELVES ON OUR CAUSE, COULD BE "REGULATED," THEN EVERY HONEST SPIRITUALIST WOULD HEARTILY ENDORSE THE SAME. BUT THE HONEST MEDIUMS MUST BE PROTECTED, ENCOURAGED AND SUSTAINED AT ALL HAZARDS. HOWEVER, THIS CONTEMPLATED ACTION TO "REGULATE" OUR CAUSE ARISES WHOLLY ON ACCOUNT OF THE FAKER ELEMENT THAT HAS FASTENED ITSELF LIKE BARNACLES ON OUR CAUSE. THINK OF ELSIE REYNOLDS, THE MATERIALIZING MEDIUM, BEING EXPOSED REPEATEDLY, AND EVERY TIME DRESSED IN ARTIFICIAL TOGGERY POSING AS A SPIRIT, DECEIVING THE INSATIATE GULLIBLES—IT IS SUCH DESPICABLE CONDUCT AS THAT WHICH GIVES RISE TO THE THOUGHT IN THE MINDS OF THE PUBLIC TO "REGULATE" SPIRITUALISM.

IMPORTANT MOVEMENT AGAINST FRAUD IN MEDIUMSHIP.

Society Formed to Prevent Fraud by Mediums and Psychics—Would License Genuine Hypnotists and Others of Same Class.

New York.—The formation of the Psychic Investigation Society, intended to prevent fraud by so-called hypnotists, Spiritualistic mediums and mind readers who ply their vocation for money, was announced to-day.

"All the founders of this society have had varied experiences with hypnotists, mediums, mind readers, mental scientists, Christian Scientists, clairvoyants, fortune-tellers, psychics and similar practitioners," said President Deutsch.

Alleged Fraud Denounced.

"Some have decided that fraud was practiced more or less obviously. ALL ARE OPEN-MINDED. ALL FEEL THAT SOMEWHERE IN THIS MAZE OF OCCULTISM THERE IS A PATH THAT LEADS TO POSITIVE KNOWLEDGE AND A DEGREE OF ENLIGHTENMENT BEYOND AND ABOVE THE MERELY MATERIAL AND PHYSICAL. We have therefore organized with the object of driving the frauds and the charlatans out of the business.

"There are fraudulent practitioners making between $20,000 and $30,000 a year by deluding people in this city under some 'psychic' or 'occult' pretense. We estimate that $200,000 represents the sum obtained yearly by honest and dishonest mediums, healers, etc.

Wants Mediums Licensed.

"Thousands of people, particularly women, whose honesty of purpose deserves all the guardianship the state can throw about it, consult these Spiritualist, hypnotic or clairvoyant advisers. Because of their number and the amount expended for such advice and the possibilities for good or evil we believe that such practitioners should be examined and if worthy licensed just as the state licenses physicians, dentists and lawyers."

The plan is to regulate hypnotism, Spiritualism, mind-reading and to a degree fortune-telling and clairvoyancy as the professions of medicine, dentistry and law are regulated. If it is obvious that practitioners have no such power as they claim and are accepting money for their services they will be prosecuted under the statutes forbidding the obtaining of money under false pretenses.

The Way to Do It.

The American Bible League, noticed at greater length in another article in these columns, before closing its session on October 31, set out to determine the source from which the "higher critics" derived authority, and came to the general conclusion that the universities and colleges were mainly responsible for insidiously spreading what they termed "the blight of higher criticism, whereby the sons and daughters of believers are having their ideas of the authenticity of the Bible distorted;" then they set out to determine the best method of battling the "peril." On their success, they said, "depends the prime doctrines of Christianity."

In the opinion of The Progressive Thinker, to make their success certain, they must turn the dial of Time back to the Middle Ages. They must reinstate Catholicism, give it control of civil governments, revive the Inquisition, rebuild their dungeons, arrest and burn at the stake all thinkers, burn the great libraries, reconstruct a new Bible, and enforce its reception as the inspired Word of God. This done they may get another lease of power for perhaps five hundred years, and they may make it perpetual, if all learning and literature shall be crushed as fast as its reappearance begins to dawn on the world.

Reward for the Hobo.

A grand reward for infidelity to those who desert home and loved ones, virtually becoming vagrants, after manner of the modern tramp, is related in Matthew 15: 28, 29—Peter told Jesus his disciples had forsaken all and followed him. "What shall we have therefore?" inquired the disciple. The Master replied:

"When the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel, and every one who hath forsaken houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my name's sake, shall receive a hundredfold, and shall inherit everlasting life."

Good for the hobo. He who deserted one wife shall have a hundred; his other relations shall be increased in like proportion, as will his houses and lands, and eternal life shall be added as a gratuity; the only condition, that such persons have "forsaken" all they owned and all they loved, "for Jesus' sake." No wonder the rabble, with the fishermen of Galilee, sang hosannas, and placed branches of palms in his way, when mounted on that jayhawked donkey and was riding to Jerusalem, probably expecting to be crowned "King of the Jews."

An Eye to the Windward.

The Clerical Union for the Maintenance and Defense of Catholic Principles, a national organization in the Episcopal church, decided on the 7th inst. to permit no ultra-liberal utterances of the "broad-church" clergy in various parts of the country to be made from time to time without protest. So says a Boston news dispatch.

That means the Bishop Crapseys, and the Rev. Coxes, must shut up, else there will be a howl all along the line. That is as it should be. By manacling the jaws of intelligence, ignorance and church rule may protract its power a little longer; but such methods will not win in the long run. The truth is, the church is death struck, and it is only a matter of time when its worthless creeds will be consigned to the domain of moles and bats from whence they came.

The glory of science is that it is freeing the soul, breaking the mental manacles, getting the brain out of bondage, giving courage to thought—filling the world with mercy, justice and joy.—Robert G. Ingersoll.

THAT "OTHER WIFE."

The Prominent Part She Acts in Fleecing Her Living Husband.

The fact that the "other wife" on the spirit side of life can communicate with her husband on earth is a consoling truth, one of priceless value; but you want to be sure that you are not mistaken as to her identity. The "other wife" is proving somewhat troublesome lately. She came to Mr. Amos of Indianapolis, Ind., and through the trumpet spoke to him, and wanted him to give his medium wife a large slice of his property, which he did, and afterwards came to the conclusion that the advice was a sham. And now comes another case where the "other wife" figures. The Denver (Col.) Post says:

SHADE OF DEAD WIFE FIGURES IN THIS SUIT.

Mrs. Thompson Says Father Was Induced to Part With His Property.

"His second wife urging that his dead wife had come to her as a medium and requested that her husband deed over $40,000 worth of property to her is causing a strong fight in the district court between Charles Willard Smart and Mrs. Julia May Smart, his present wife.

"The complaint is filed by Mrs. Emma A. Thompson as the next friend of her father, the plaintiff in the case, who alleges that her father is 81 years of age, and by reason of the improper influence of his second wife he is not capable of suing in his own name.

"In the complaint filed it is alleged that Mr. Smart's former wife died in 1900, and that he subsequently married the defendant in the case; that the present defendant immediately began to improperly influence the old gentleman. It is claimed that she is a medium, and through Spiritualistic influences unbalanced her aged husband's mind. When he was completely under her influence it is alleged that she pretended to commune with his former wife, who at every one of these seances said:

"'Tell Charles to deed over all of his property to you; that I said so from the spirit world.'

"Smart is a wealthy man, owning over $40,000 worth of realty in Denver, and it is alleged in the complaint that he deeded it all over to wife No. 2, and that he is now penniless."

The numerous facts afloat in reference to the "other wife" and her anxiety to have her living spouse deed his property to his second earthly wife, should set Spiritualists to thinking as to the advisability of testing the spirit, instead of testing and exploiting the matter from a legal standpoint. All along the line the "other wife" has figured conspicuously in Spiritualism, and her principal aim appears to be to fleece her former husband and make rich his earthly companion.

A Good Man Afflicted.

We learn with great sorrow that Dr. Minot Jay Savage, the distinguished Unitarian Clergyman of New York, more than half a Spiritualist, by reason of ill health, both mentally and physically, has been placed in a private sanitarium. One who knew the Doctor well, suggests his excessive smoking habit may have caused his trouble. Whatever the source of the calamity, we hope he will soon regain his health so as to resume his pulpit labor.

IMPORTANT NOTICE

The Missionary Field in Illinois.

Dr. Geo. B. Warne, 4203 Evans avenue, Chicago, president of the Illinois State Spiritualists' Association, having in charge the Spiritualist missionary work in this state, and being desirous of having the association lend a helping hand to such societies or bands of workers in our state who need assistance, hereby extends an invitation to all such to make their wants known. State who you want to assist you and when you want them.

DO SPIRITS REURN TO THIS OLD WORLD?

An Exposition on the Subject at the Grand, Sunday Night.

Dr. Henry J. Arnold, whose remarkable manifestations of spirit power have made him famous throughout both continents, will give a seance at the Grand under the auspices of the Religio Psychological Society, Sunday night, October 7, at which he will produce a number of tests that will fully demonstrate the methods employed by Professors Taylor, Bishop, Dr. Carpenter and other mediums, whose achievements in the occult science have completely baffled scientific explanation. Dr. Arnold has been an extensive traveler, and in the course of his peregrinations has appeared before the royalty of Europe, the leading officials of the Russian government, and has been subjected to the severest tests by the scientific world. In the program mapped out for Sunday night, Dr. Arnold will give his open seance, in which tables are elevated to mid-air, flowers passed by unseen hands and messages between the spirits and spectators exchanged. In all his work Dr. Arnold courts the closest investigation. All are invited.

The above is from the Marion, Ohio, Star. This Dr. Arnold presents on the public stage, in the full glare of light, remarkable phenomena—in no sense Spiritualistic—in no manner the work of spirits, yet he poses as a wonderful medium. His entire work is simply the result of legerdemain, and in that respect is exceptionally fine.

Under the pretense of presenting genuine spirit phenomena, the country is flooded with these tricksters, many of whom claim to have exploited their work before the "royalty of Europe," when, in fact, they have never been outside of this country. They are found in every large city—particularly in Los Angeles, Cal., where one page of the large Sunday dailies is filled with their pretentious advertisements. Thus it is that one of the grandest truths ever presented to the world is defiled and obstacles presented in the way of its advancement and proper recognition.

American Suffragists Rejoice.

At a recent business meeting the officers of the National Woman Suffrage Association adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, That we rejoice in the endorsement of woman suffrage, since our last meeting, by the United Mine Workers of America, the International Brotherhood of Book-binders, the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, the American Federation of Labor, the California, Colorado, Iowa, Indiana, Massachusetts, Maine, Michigan, Minnesota, New Hampshire, Ohio and West Virginia State Federations of Labor, and by the Democratic, Prohibition, Socialist, Independence League and Union Labor parties of California; in the granting of the full ballot to the two and a half million women of Finland, and the nomination for the Finnish Parliament of our friend, Baroness Alexandra Gripenberg; and in the decision of the two Courts of Appeals of Florence and Ancona that the women of Italy have a right to vote.

Women Needed in Public life.

The editor of the North American Review, in a late issue, announces his conviction "that the time has arrived when the welfare of the nation would be most effectually conserved by conferring upon women the right of voting and holding political office." He holds that the right to the franchise is not an inherent one, and therefore has no sympathy with those who claim it on those terms. He closes the long editorial by saying: "For the purposes, therefore, of purifying the ballot, of establishing and maintaining lofty standards as to the qualifications required of candidates for public office, of effecting an evener distribution of earnings, of providing a heavier balance of disinterestedness and conservatism against greed and radicalism, we reiterate the expression of our firm belief that universal suffrage has now become not only desirable, but almost a paramount necessity."

The dependence of liberty shall be lovers; the continuance of equality shall be comrades.—Walt Whitman.

The will of man is by his reason swayed.—Shakspeare.

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER.

We Remind you that the SPIRIT OF THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER NEVER SLEEPS! There is need of a WATCHMAN and WE ARE IN THE TOWER and ON DUTY for the best interest of TRUE SPIRITUALISM!

Another Announcement!

In Reference to the Remarkable Works of Andrew Jackson Davis.

A letter from Dr. Davis indicates that a change has been made in the price of a full set of his remarkable works. They will be furnished per set when republished at $20 instead of $30, as heretofore announced. There are thousands who ought to have a set of these books. Their publication at an early day depends on the number of subscribers that can be secured. His books are a fundamental part of Spiritualism; the history of Spiritualism can not be written without them.

O. F. Brand, of Faribault, Minn.; G. J. Willett, of Milwaukee, Wis.; and M. L. Sutton, of Port Chester, N. H., will each take a set. Spiritualists, aid in this grand work. Send in your names, and in the end get far more than value received for your money.

Since last week, the following subscribers to a full set of the Doctor's works have come to hand:

SEEKS FOR PURITY.

An Earnest Plea for Honesty and Purity in Our Ranks.

To the Editor:—In a recent issue of the Progressive Thinker is an article from the pen of P. A. Jensen of Los Angeles, Cal., a reply to Mr. Will C. Hodge of San Diego, on the fake practices of two old women, as he puts it, so-called materializing mediums of spirit forms.

I silently applauded the writer for his just arraignment of these oft-exposed characters as mediums, and endorse every word he has written as one personally acquainted with their work and questionable practices, and lest my thought waves should not reach the writer as well as the thoughtful readers of The Progressive Thinker, I put them out before the public in plain English, to add my mite to the work now so nobly begun by The Progressive Thinker and its writers in cleaning our Augean stables of the despicable characters and festering lepers known as the often-exposed materializing mediums.

Nothing succeeds so well as success, is an old adage, and from a worldly point of view these sleight-of-hand wonder workers have coined money extorted from the credulous dupes, giving nothing in return for their money, but the veriest shadowy Jack-o'-lantern performance, not as good as a Punch and Judy show of a dime museum.

But upon this STRONG SPIRITUAL AND MORAL LAW which has at last set in motion the heart springs of healthy intellectual minds, there has arisen a protest, and the glamour of dimly lighted seance-rooms, disguises and masks to personate the departed loved ones, have been thrown off by the Searchlight of Reason, and the miserable fake mediums have been shown up in their true revolting characters, to their shame and despair, and not only to these perpetrators of crime, but to the silly credulous dupes for their short-sightedness in believing too much.

The times are pregnant with radical reforms and changes in all departments of life, religious, social and otherwise, and consequently of much suffering, for all reforms must be met with earnest and valiant workers whose love of truth make them strong in moral integrity, seeking the general good of all, and placing their duty to man above all other considerations.

But our cause does not rest on a lie or upon the gross practices of charlatans, but is founded upon eternal principles, and its philosophy and teachings are grounded in the fundamental laws of nature and mind, where we learn the simple laws of cause and effect, AS YOU SOW, SO SHALL YOU REAP, and whether we see the fruits of our honest toil or not, we are happier for doing right and loving mercy.

Let us work for the purity of our cause, NOT IN MALICE OR HATE TOWARDS ANY ONE but to remember the battles we are waging against evil and wrong are not for the personal downfall of the evil-doers, but rather for their redemption, to learn them to see themselves as others see them, that they may turn from their evil practices and learn to do right, that truth and right may triumph and righteousness much more abound.

BISHOP A. BEALS.

Summerland, Cal.

Colonel Ingersoll's God.

God will not punish with eternal thirst the man who has put the cup of cold water to the lips of his neighbor. God will not allow to live in the eternal nakedness of pain the man who has clothed others. Here is a shipwreck, and here is some brave sailor who stands aside and allows a woman whom he never saw before to take his place in the boat, and he stands there, grand and serene as the wide sea, and goes down. Do you tell me there is any God who will push the lifeboat from the shore when that sailor wishes to step in? Do you tell me that God can be unpitying to the pitiful, that he can be unforgiving to the merciful? I deny it, and from the aspersions of the pulpit I rescue the reputation of the deity.—Ingersoll.

RELIGION OF SPIRITUALISM.

Words From One Who Has a High Regard for the Name.

The reference to Spiritualism as a religion seems to goad some of our good Spiritualists to a species of frenzy.

It makes little difference what definition Webster or any recognized authority may give religion, it is regarded the civilized world over as something connected with our standing in another world. People who profess religion are merely saying by both words and actions, that they intend to so live that when death comes they will have done all they could to secure peace.

No religion is more strenuous than Spiritualism in urging us to so live this life that we may be able to enter the higher sphere of usefulness, joy, and beauty, "when we go hence." Our behavior here has everything to do with our happiness in the Summerland.

The phenomena witnessed in the seance room are an indispensable part of religion, and are in the hands of an honest medium, what they are intended to be—a great blessing, and education.

In all the numerous messages received from the advanced spirits, we are urged to so live that there may be less regret on passing over.

Good, simon-pure Spiritualism is so satisfying, I can never be thankful enough for the light that shone round me when I became convinced if its truth.

I have not had smooth sailing, in life, and have had some sad experiences, but I would not exchange my KNOWLEDGE for my former ignorance, even if my experience should be even worse than already undergone.

MRS. M. M. BAKER.

A LESSON.

The birds begin the day with a song,
With a song that is joyous and bright;
They trust and are happy through all the long day,
They fear not the lonely night.
But when the dark shadows come creeping apace,
They warble a sweet good night,
Then trustfully sleep until time to awake
With a song for the dawning light.

Let us learn the lesson the little birds teach,
And begin every day with a song
Of praises to God the dear Father of love,
Then trust Him through all the day long;
And when the night comes, with a sweet little song
Of thanks for His love and His care,
Like the little birds, sleep till the dawning of day,
Then awake God's great love to declare.

ATTENTION, LYCEUM WORKERS.

To all lyceums and their noble band of workers, we send a loving greeting: We feel that in order to further the grand work begun by our friend and brother, Mr. John W. Ring, we must get into line, and be counted. I earnestly ask the secretary of each lyceum, or any society desirous of forming a lyceum, to write me fully the condition of their school—how many pupils, the average attendance, the text book used, the song book, and method of carrying on sessions. There are three standard Lyceum Guides—Andrew Jackson Davis's, Emma Rood Tuttle's and the British Manual. Which of these do you use? Tell me also who among your children are the best fitted as leaders and missionaries in lyceum work? I want to meet them, if only on paper. I want to know what is most needed, and what they can do. Let me hear from you soon.

"Lyceum, Lyceum, march, march ahead.
Never dead, file ahead!
Come, come, come!"

The Triumphant Decease of Lovina Bangs.

A Realistic Story, by Mrs. Ida Lewis Bentley, of Los Angeles, Cal.

The kitchen door was thrown open with a jerk, and a little woman with a plaid shawl thrown over her head, bounced into the room and exclaimed, "Loviny Bangs is dyin'!"

"So's your granny!" and without looking at her unceremonious caller, Abigail Luce shook out her dishcloth for inspection.

"But she is really dyin' this time," asserted the newsbearer. "Jason said she had been real pimpin' for a week or more, and he don't know but she'll fetch it this time sure. She says she's goin' at midnight, and she's asked in all the relations and neighbors to say good-bye to her. She says it's going goin' ter be a 'triumphant decease.'"

"Very likely," said Mrs. Luce, dryly, and she hung up the dishcloth and turned the water pitcher so as to have the decoration seen.

"Wall, I thought I'd come and tell you," said the caller, with an aggrieved intonation, "but of course you'll do as you please 'bout goin'. Jason said he was goin' to have popcorn and honey with the supper to-night, and I am goin' to go, for I love honey," and the speaker looked appealingly at the calm face of Abigail Luce as she unrolled her sleeves and took off her checked gingham apron.

"Well, I guess I'll go," she said slowly as she hung her apron upon a peg behind the kitchen door, as she had done hundreds of nights before. "I guess I'll go, but I'm dreadful tired to-night for I've cleaned cellar to-day and made soap and the lye wan't strong enough I guess, for the soap bothered 'bout comin'. I've got about sick of these dyin' spells, and if she don't fetch it about this time I shall be tempted to do something, for I do pity poor Jason Bangs. He might have had a good home of his own and taken some comfort with a wife, and children, maybe, but for Lovinv and her tantrums. If she'd put half the time and energy inter tryin' to live and do somebody some good, that she's put inter tryin' to die before her time, she and all the rest would be lots better off."

"Wall, I guess that's so, but I must hurry home and get on my new alpacy, for I guess they'll have quite a party to-night," and the kitchen door closed behind the plaid shawl.

Abigail Luce stood on tiptoe and peered into the dairy house windows which looked out upon a grove of sugar maples flaming scarlet, crimson, and gold in the paling light of the October sunset. Underneath this gorgeous banner gurgled a stream of clear water which was the outlet of the cold spring which supplied the dairy house. By the light of a kerosene lamp a small thin man with grizzled hair and beard was pouring milk from a large tin pail into a new tin pan. The man's face wore a resigned and patient look, as of one who having struggled long and fruitlessly says, "Thy will be done," feeling there is nothing else he can say.

"Jason!" At the sound of his name spoken in a tone of kindly sympathy, the man turned quickly toward the half open door.

"Oh! it's you, Abigail," he said, for the two had known each other from childhood; "step in, I'm glad you've come."

Abigail Luce stepped in and closed the door. "I see you've quite a gathering up at the house," she said, "is she really sick?"

"I guess she's pretty bad off this time; she's been runnin' down for quite a spell."

"Well, she's talked so much about dyin' and planned it out so many times, I should think she would begin to give out. The only reason she hasn't before, is because she took so much comfort in doin' it."

"I think likely enough, but I tell you what, Abigail, I was thinkin' while I was milkin' to-night, that Lovina may not be so much to blame as some folks think," and the patient face lighted with kindly interest. "'What's bred in the bone stays long in the flesh,' the sayin' is, and I've heard my mother say she almost died of lonesomeness the summer afore Loviny was born; she said she just hungered and thirsted for some one to love and coddle her. You know father died the spring afore Loviny was born, and mother took it in her head that nobody loved her or wanted her around, so she probably acted in a way that didn't call out much show of love—probably she was her own undoin', but she never mistrusted it."

"So you think Loviny has these dyin' spells so as to make folks coddle and make of her, do you?" asked Abigail.

"Wall, I guess that's about it, but I never said such a thing afore, and I dunno how this spell may turn out."

"Here you set down on that stool and let me wash that strainer—it needs a good scrubbin', and I want to talk to you. I've got an idea," and Abigail rolled up her sleeves and went to work.

Abigail Luce and Jason Bangs passed in through the low woodshed, and mounting the rough wooden steps looked through the open door into the large low-ceiled kitchen which presented a busy scene with no suggestion of solemnity. Some twenty men and women and numerous babies and little children were gathered there. Some of the men were engaged in shelling popcorn and some in eating apples and discussing their keeping and market value. The women were mostly occupied in setting a long table with dishes and carrying food between kitchen and pantry while the children and dogs got under foot, as numerous wails and howls testified.

The principal figure, a self-appointed manager at this gathering, was a very tall, thin woman, with small gray eyes, thin lips and thin black hair drawn tightly back from a high, narrow forehead. She was first cousin to Jason and Lovina Bangs and having never married, was known as "Miss Viola," because she had always insisted that the "Miss" should be used in addressing her. It was Miss Viola who cuffed the dogs and ordered the children about, and decided into how many pieces a pie or cake was to be cut, and how many doughnuts were to be put upon the second.

Jason, pausing a moment before entering the room hit his elbow against the dust-pan which with the broom and mop were hanging upon the wall just outside the door, and it fell with a clatter.

"Mercy sakes!" exclaimed Miss Viola, in a high, shrill a plate, and who was to sit at the first table, and who at voice, "I should think you'd be ashamed of yourself, Jason Bangs, makin' such a noise when your poor sister is dyin' all alone in the spare room. What are you two doin' out there, anyway? Where's your man, Abigail Luce?"

"Oh, he's comin' as soon as he feeds the hogs," said Abigail, good-humoredly, "but if Loviny is dyin' all alone, I guess I'll go and stay with her a spell."

Abigail Luce tiptoed carefully into the "spare room" and looked critically down upon Lovina Bangs lying in state upon the best bed. Her best silk log-cabin quilt was spread carefully over her angular form and her best ruffled pillow-slips, nicely starched and ironed, adorned the pillows upon which lay the shapely head with its abundance of soft brown hair scarcely touched with gray. She wore her best night-robe, which was a marvel of knit lace and embroidery, all the work of her own hands. The room was spotlessly clean and from the braided rugs upon the floor to the lace trimmed muslin curtains at the windows, everything bore testimony to the skill of Lovina's nimble fingers. Lovina opened her eyes with a start, and exclaimed fretfully, "Oh, it's you, is it? I thought 'twas Jason. What was all that clatter out in the kitchen? They haven't broken my best china platter that I got as a premium with the last box of tea, have they? Them Hooks' young ones are perfect little pests."

"There's nothing broken—the dust-pan tumbled down, that's all," said Abigail curtly, and her mouth tightened into lines that looked almost hard.

Suddenly the words of the patient Jason flashed into her mind, and her face softened. There came before her mental vision the little girl mother mourning for the husband killed by an accident six months before Lovina saw the light of day. How much was she responsible for Lovina's morbid life? As Abigail asked herself that question, memory took her back to her childhood and she again saw Lovina's grand-parents to whom Elnathan Bangs had taken his second girl wife. Old Mr. Bangs, silent, grim and exacting, was feared and respected more or less by those who knew him but was loved by name, and his timid little wife with her sorrowful face and hungry eyes was never known to express an opinion contrary to her husband's, or to indulge in any expression of emotion, so long and severe had been her training.

As Abigail thought, her face grew tender with compassion and she took the thin, hard hand of the silent woman into her own toil-worn hand and caressed it tenderly.

Why had old Mr. and Mrs. Bangs shut their daughter-in-law out of their hearts? Why had they not given her the love and sympathy she so longed for? The kind words she craved would have cost them nothing, and they would have made her happy and enriched their own lives as well.

"God is love." The words flashed into Abigail's mind with a distinctness that made her start—those words so little understood, so potent with power and happiness!

"Oh, why," thought Abigail, "are we so slow to learn a plain truth? Grandfather Bangs is the one who is responsible for Lovina's strange disposition." How did she know that?

Again Abigail started. "No," she said, "all of these whose lives have been so sad might have made their own lives and others' bright and beautiful if they had only known a few simple truths."

Lovina opened her eyes. "I have heard your brother Joseph has come back from out West," she said languidly.

"Yes, he has been here upwards of a week, and he has changed so you would not know him," Abigail said.

"I've heard," continued Lovina, "that he has taken up some new-fangled ideas about religion. It does beat all how many new religions are comin' into fashion now; seems if hardly anybody is satisfied with the old. I don't know much about the new ones. I tried Spiritualism a little once, and I was almost certain sure my poor little mother came and told me something, but our minister said it was the devil pretendin' to be my mother, and he talked in such an awful way he scairt me so I never went to one of their meetins' again. A Christian Science woman came in here one day and she talked and talked and it sounded just beautiful, and I wanted to try her religion, but we didn't have any big dictionary and so I had to give it up. Lately I've been hearin' about New Thought folks, but I've had no time to look after them. Oh, well, I guess the old religion is good enough for me. With it I have lived, and with it I can die triumphantly. It will not be long now before my tired hands will be folded in everlastin' peace and my freed soul will be walkin' the golden streets; but I will say that if I could have believed Spiritualism—and I guess I could if the minister had kept away—I think it would have been a real help and comfort to me."

"Loviny Bangs, I am ashamed for you," exclaimed Abigail. "If somebody had died and left you ten thousand dollars you would not have let any minister scare you out of gettin' it; no, not of he had brought all the devils in the Bible to help him, and Spiritualism is worth ever so much more than money to those who understand it and take it into their lives. I know as well as anybody can that money is mighty handy stuff to have, but all the best and most comfortin' things money can't buy, as folks who have lots of it have to learn to their sorrow. As for Christian Science and New Thought, somebody who had an unabridged dictionary handy picked the ideas out of Spiritualism and put lots of frills and furbelows on them and hitched on a name that wouldn't scare folks, and peddled them out to the poor hungry church folks. Lots of folks have got it in their heads that Spiritualism don't have much to do with anybody but dead folks, but that's because they don't understand it, for it teaches us how to live first of all, and if we know how to live we'll not have any trouble in dyin' gracefully. Spiritualism teaches us we can't cut up and then shirk the consequences off onto somebody else, but we have got to wear the clothes we cut out and make, and eat the victuals we cook, no matter how they taste. Spiritualism is not a cheap, crooked, one-sided affair, but rich, straight, round and beautiful, and it tells us we've got to be good and no foolin' or make believe about it, and it teaches the kind of good that has got no bad in it."

"Oh, well," said Lovina wearily, I'm glad if it is so, but it don't make much difference to me now."

"Excuse me," said Abigail, rising hastily, "I want to speak to Jason a minute."

"Yes, go and leave me alone until midnight, and then all come in and bid me a last good-bye," and Lovina turned her face to the wall.

She remained in a quiet half-dreamy state for what seemed to her a long time. From the kitchen came in sounds of suppressed laughter, the clatter of dishes and the babbling and fretting of sleepy babies, and the appetizing odor of popcorn and boiling maple sugar greeted her nostrils. Dying did not seem to her as she thought it was going to. The calm sense of heavenly blessedness she expected to feel did not come to her and the noise from the kitchen drowned the strains of melody from the celestial choir, if any were borne her way, and a sharp sensing of her unfitness and incompleteness came to her instead.

"What have you done that you should deserve a home in heaven?"

The words startled her into alertness. From what source did they come? Did she really hear them? A sensing of something new coming to her, of possibilities undreamed of quickened mind and body. Little everyday occurrences that she had cried and fretted and worried over suddenly appeared in their true light—she might have held them as good instead of evil and been happy all the time.

"My whole life has been wasted," she thought with a sense of torture, "and yet I have had and have got what our minister calls the 'savin' faith.'"

"Faith without works is dead," the words flashed before her in letters of fire that seemed to burn into her soul, and she covered her face and groaned aloud. There was a sound almost like a knock at the head of her bed, and she lifted herself and listened. Was it possible anyone had got into the preserve closet? She had locked it and given the key to Jason and charged him to guard it carefully. She wanted Jason to have those preserves when she was dead and gone and could do nothing more for him. What had she ever done for him? She had cooked and washed and mended for him, but during all the long years of his self-sacrifice and devotion to her comfort, she had scarcely given him a word of appreciation or even a smile. She had magnified her own trials into mountains and given no thought to his.

A man's voice deep and earnest broke the stillness of the room.

"O Lord," said the voice, "look Thou in mercy upon this woman, Lovina Bangs. Open her eyes that in Thy light she may see light; open her ears that she may hear Thy truth. She is by no means an old woman, and Thou, O God, didst give her a comely face and figure which she has nearly spoiled by thinking dark and gloomy thoughts of illness and death when she ought to have been thinking thoughts of health and happiness. O Lord, help her this night to see that within herself lies the power to change her weak, narrow, gloomy, selfish life into one that is strong, broad, beautiful and helpful. Help her to see herself as she is and as she may be. Show her, O Lord, that she has but to give love and kind words to others to receive them a hundred fold, and in living rather than in dying she shall be blest."

The tall old-fashioned clock in the kitchen began to strike twelve and the party assembled were beginning to look anxiously toward the spare room, when a tall figure wrapped in a bed blanket suddenly appeared among them. Her brown hair fell in a wavy mass about her shoulders, her eyes were dark and brilliant and red spots burned upon her thin cheeks. She looked about for a moment upon the wondering, speechless company, and then in a firm voice spoke:

"My friends, I have got through dyin'. I shall never have but one more spell of it and that won't come for quite a while, I guess. I might have been happy and made others so during all these miserable years—I can see it now. It's no use cryin' over spilt milk, but there'll be no more of this sort of thing. You came here to see me die, and I am dead and a new Loviny Bangs lives from this day on. I'm an old fool and may keep on being one, but it will be a different kind of one."

Stepping to where the astonished Jason stood she exclaimed: "I've made a slave of my poor, patient brother; I've robbed him of everything that would have made his life happy. Oh, Jason, my brother!"

The words ended in a choking sob. Jason caught her in his arms and Abigail Luce arose and motioned to an adjoining room where the out-door wraps had been laid aside and the company with silent consent filed out and left brother and sister alone.

Two years later the people who left the Bangs' kitchen so unceremoniously the night of "Loviny's triumphant decease," as it was called, were gathered there again. The house was filled with flowers, music and laughter, for it was the eve of Lovina's wedding. In all the company there was not a happier face than Abigail Luce's, for was it not her brother Joseph's wedding also?

After the congratulations, Abigail went up to her brother and said mischievously, "Would you like the key to the preserve closet so you can pray for your bride?"

"Do you know," said Lovina, "I thought for a long time that it was a spirit that prayed for me that night?"

Abigail looked at her brother fondly and said, "It was a bright and beautiful spirit. If you get to thinking that only dead folks can give good advice, you'll come to grief. Folks who have learned to live in their bodies wisely and well are the ones who can give the best advice, whether their bodies are dead or alive."

"Yes," said Jason, smiling contentedly, "but I find it is a great comfort to hear from those I've lost, and to know they still live and love me even if they can give me no better advice than I can give myself."

WONDERFUL SUCCESS OF "ACTINA"

In the Treatment of Afflictions of the Eye

Every person with impaired eyesight or suffering from weak or diseased eyes should write for our latest free booklet, entitled "Positive Evidence."

The records of phenomenal cures by the "Actina" treatment, as described therein by grateful patients themselves—names and addresses given—will satisfy the most skeptical that "Actina" is not only a remarkable, simple and harmless invention, but effects cures after specialists have pronounced the cases incurable.

Following are a few of the successes produced by "Actina," described in our free booklet, "Positive Evidence."

A Chicago gentleman, after suffering 12 months with inflammation of the iris, used "Actina" a few weeks. He says he can now see as well and as far as anybody.

An Iowa lady writes that after being under treatment of specialists for 15 years, "Actina" completely restored her eyesight and she no longer uses glasses.

Astigmatism and granulated lids impaired the eyesight of a Hartford (Conn.) lady. Specialists failed to cure. As a last resort, against advice of friends, she tried "Actina." She writes:—"For many months I have written almost daily without glasses. No pain in my eyes and drooping eyelid is restored."

"Actina" removed a cataract from the eye of an Oklahoma lady; relieved the closure of a tear duct for a well known Chicago lady, and in scores of instances people have been able to discard eyeglasses through the faithful use of "Actina." To get an idea of the enthusiasm of our patients the entire letters should be read.

"Actina is built on common sense principles. Its simplicity, effectiveness and lasting qualities will appeal to any one that will investigate. Let us send you one on ten days' trial. Use it as often as you please and if you are not benefited, or for any other reason are not satisfied, send it back and no charge will be made. Write today. Address New York & London Electric Ass'n. A NEW CATECHISM

BY M. M. MANGASARIAN.

Fourth Edition—Six Additional Chapters—200 Pages, Bound in Cloth, $1.00.—Containing Likeness of the Author.

"A New Catechism" has enjoyed a remarkable sale both in America and England. George Jacob Holyoake, in his introduction to the English edition of "A New Catechism," says:

"A New Catechism" is the boldest, the brightest, the most varied and informing of any work of the kind extant. The principal fields of human knowledge, which the churches have fenced round with supernatural terrors, the Catechism breaks into, cherishing what is fair and showing what is deformed. The notes, of which there are many, both ancient and contemporary, are as striking as the text. The book is a cyclopedie of theology and reason in a nutshell.

From President Barrett.

About Matters and Things, and Also People.

Since the adjournment of the National Convention, the writer has not been idle, even if there has not been the usual amount of strenuosity in connection with his work.

October 1, in company with the honored vice-president of the N. S. A., Dr. Geo. B. Warne, and Mrs. E. L. Nicholson as message bearer, I attended a mass meeting in Rockford, Ill. Dr. Warne's addresses were as usual, full of wit, wisdom, pathos and sound logic. He touched the hearts of his hearers, captured their reasoning faculties, and converted them by the spell of his own intense earnestness and sincerity. His tribute to mediumship and to spiritual healing will long be remembered by those whose privilege it was to hear it. The Chicago Chronicle rightly characterizes Vice-President Warne when it calls him "One of the most influential and notable leaders in Spiritualistic circles."

Mrs. Nicholson's messages were spiritual in the fullest and best sense of the word. They were modestly and impressively delivered—presented in a helpful, uplifting manner without a particle of sensation or fanfaronade, to which many public psychics resort. All of them were recognized, and those who received them felt as if "a holy air were breathing round, an incense from above," while all others were touched by the spirit of the occasion and felt as did Peter of old when he and his friends received a visit from the angels, that it was good for them to be here.

Mrs. Nicholson certainly has a bright future as a bearer of messages of comfort to the sorrowing ones of earth, if her work at Rockford can be taken as a criterion of what is to follow.

On October 28, I visited Paw Paw, Mich., where I was the guest of my old friends, Dr. and Mrs. B. O'Dell. A restful spiritual atmosphere fills their home from "garret to cellar," and no one can stay within those walls for even a day without being benefited thereby. He will go forth rested, uplifted in spirit, strengthened in body and encouraged in soul through the influence of that home. Art, science, philosophy, religion, poetry and even politics were subjects of discussion. Perhaps we "boxed the compass of conversational topics" both ways, but if we did, we enjoyed it and spiritual enjoyment is about the highest reward one can find in this world of ours.

Dr. O'Dell was a soldier in the war between the North and South, hence has a reason for the love he entertains for Abraham Lincoln and for that great patriot's principles. The Doctor is as much opposed to industrial and ecclesiastical slavery as he was to negro slavery in former years, hence he votes as a free man should—according to the promptings of his conscience.

Mrs. O'Dell is the poet and rhetorician of the household. Books, books, books on all sides; Longfellow, Whittier, Browning, Ella Wheeler Wilcox and some of the matchless prose poems of the orators of the world are to be found in her library. Her scrap-books contain some of the finest poetical gems, as well as prose excerpts that it has ever been my privilege to read. Unknown writers, authors whose offerings to the world consist of but one or two short poems, are found here, and their works so far as one brief record goes, will not fade into forgetfulness. From their vantage ground in the higher life, they can now realize the truth of the old adage, "It is better to be ruler of one fond heart than to be monarch of many a throne!"

Nearly thirteen years have passed away since I last spoke in Paw Paw. Very few of the old friends are now in the form. They have arisen—returned home after their earth visit, to enjoy for a time the real life of the soul. Good audiences greeted me at both of my lectures, despite the heavy storm. I sympathized deeply with all who braved the elements to honor me with their presence.

I was cheered and helped at both services by Bro. H. L. Chapman of Marcellus, Mich., who gave most excellent improvisations at the opening of the exercises. His efforts, or those of his unseen helpers, were more than mere rhymings; the elements of poetry were there, and his words told us of reform, of progression and spiritual illumination. "Do sp some more," Brother Chapman! It will do us good.

The Spiritualists of Paw Paw and vicinity are loyal friends to the N. S. A., and are earnest supporters of its good works. The Progressive Thinker is a popular favorite, not only in Paw Paw, but also throughout the entire state of Michigan.

From Paw Paw I took a run over to Lansing, where I renewed old friendships and I hope found several new ones in the days I spent in that city. During my stay there, the trustees of the Michigan State Association held an important meeting at which every member, save Brother Harris of Petoskey, was present. The efficient president, Mrs. A. E. Sheets, presided and was most ably as well as harmoniously supported in all her work by Vice-President E. W. Sprague, Secretary Miss Genevra Spaulding, Treasurer C. A. Clement and Trustees E. E. Carpenter and O. E. Spaulding. I was honored by being invited to be present at this meeting of the board, and I must say that it was a genuine pleasure to note the harmony, good will and spiritual zeal that characterized every officer present. "None were for a party, but all were for the cause," hence they accomplished some excellent work. The Michigan State Association is as sound as a dollar, and its every official on guard to defend its rights.

I next visited Jackson, where I gave three addresses during the week I spent in that city. I found my old friend, John Hutchinson, seriously ill from an attack of gastritis, but was pleased to note that he was on the road to recovery ere I left the city. Brother Hutchinson is one of the illumined ones in our ranks—a zealous friend of the N. S. A., and a firm believer in dignity, law, and order in Spiritualism.

On Friday, Nov. 9, we celebrated his seventy-fifth birthday, very quietly, to be sure, because of his illness, but none the less enthusiastically in spirit. We sensed the presence of many dear ones from the unseen side of life, all of whom contributed their full share to the spiritual and intellectual joys of the hour, even though they gave no sign, nor spoke one word. The impress of the Soul in the Silences of being is most potent for good and is ever felt by those ready for its inspiring touch.

Jackson is the home also of Dr. Julia M. Walton, former president of the Michigan State Spiritualists' Association, and at all times an earnest worker for the "good cause." An informal reception was tendered your scribe at her residence, on Monday eve, Nov. 5, on which occasion I had the pleasure of meeting many old-time friends, to say nothing of the yet more numerous new ones who came out to give me welcome. It was an evening for earnest questioning on the part of those who are in search of truth. Fatalism, Foreordination, Re-embodiment, Reform Work, Mediumship, Phenomena, etc., were all discussed and the questioners all had "a reason for the faith that was in them." Social converse, good cheer and fraternity prevailed throughout the evening.

My quarters were in the spiritually quickened and highly magnetized home of Mrs. G. M. Stanley, whose devotion to our cause is well known throughout Michigan. Here, in company with Mrs. A. C. Mix, and Mrs. Alene Turner, who were also guests of Mrs. Stanley, your correspondent was made to feel perfectly at home, and sent on his way rejoicing at the close of his visit, refreshed in body, spirit, soul.

I managed to get some work done while in Jackson, writing sixty letters, besides giving three lectures, and making such calls as there was time for. The Spiritualist societies in Jackson have united in one body, and are doing, as a unit, most excellent work under President Gray's efficient leadership. If all local societies are as fortunate in their secretaries as is the one in Jackson, Spiritualism as a movement will flourish as a "green bay tree" in all quarters of the earth.

Presto! Change! Jackson to Milwaukee, Wis., where I spoke Sunday evening, Nov. 11, to an interested audience. Mrs. Sophia B. Seip and Mrs. Julia Smead most kindly and generously gave up their Sunday services in order that their friends might attend my meeting. It was a most harmonious gathering, and I thoroughly enjoyed meeting my Milwaukee friends again. Mrs. Seip, I find, is working in Milwaukee for November, and may remain there throughout the season. Mrs. Smead has a regular society of which she has long been leader. She is a sister of the late Dr. W. E. See, formerly of Lily Dale, N. Y.

While in Milwaukee I was the guest of ex-Congressman Henry Smith, who is now and long has been a leading member of the city council. Brother Smith is a born reformer, and he always spells that word with a capital letter at the start. No man in Milwaukee is better known than is he, and no one exerts a more potent influence for good in behalf of the poor than he does. He is a friend of the oppressed, and the foe of the oppressor at all times. No political party, ecclesiastical clique, or creed-bound church owns him. He is a free lance, but he always uses his lance on the side of the poor and needy. He has the courage of his convictions, and the citizens of Milwaukee owe him a lasting debt of gratitude for what he has done for them. Instead of building a costly monument in his honor after he has taken leave of earth, I hope they will say some of the good things that may then be spoken while he is in the form to hear them. They could not show their appreciation of him and his efforts in their behalf to better advantage than by placing him in the mayor's chair at the next city election. His home is a certer of spiritual thought, peace, soul-repose and good will—thanks to his own influence and that of his good wife, his son and daughter who are yet beneath his roof.

From Milwaukee "deponent sayeth not." You and your readers will hear from me ever and anon, whether I wander in the astral or the physical form over the earth. Success to The Progressive Thinker!

DEFENSE OF WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Woman Would Exercise Refining Influence in Politics.

I read in The Progressive Thinker of No. 884 an article by Mrs Corbin, President of the Illinois Anti-Woman Suffrage Society, in which article Mrs. Corbin says, "I am opposed to woman suffrage in the United States because the plan is patterned after European Socialism." She says, "A great many woman suffragists are in the movement," not knowing that it is a direct outgrowth of the teachings of Carl Marx and Liebknecht—advocates of free love. "What an insult this," to the woman suffragists.

Look at the noble characters of Frances Willard, Susan B. Anthony, and many others and their noble work of reforming humanity.

Does Mrs. Corbin think that these noble, high-minded women were too ignorant to know what they were doing? Again, she speaks of free love in the Socialist ranks; certainly there are none of the advocates of socialism to-day that teach the doctrine of free love.

But now let us stop and look for a moment at the so-called higher classes of society. Mrs. Corbin, take a good look; observe closely, and see if you cannot see more free love than there would ever be any danger of being found amongst the advocates of Socialism and Woman Suffrage.

She says the doctrines breed many evils, and that she discovered in her work in the slums of New York City, that Socialism was at the bottom of many evils.

Now, I will ask the good lady, what was the direct cause of the existence of the slums in New York City? Was it not the outgrowth of the great capitalistic "Demons?" Paying those that are in their employ a mere pittance to subsist on? And still others walking the streets in a vain endeavor to find employment, and finally hunger drives them to resort to desperation and crime?

Under a Socialistic government each and every producer would have that which is justly due every producer, a home with plenty to live on, and all the comforts that to-day the capitalistic class only can enjoy.

And then she says political corruption would be tremendously intensified if the privilege to vote was granted to women.

Well, now, let us take a good look back into the past, and see how conditions were prior to the time that woman took a hand in public places of business then existing. In many instances they were not fit places for decent men to enter into, let alone women. How is it to-day? Since woman has taken a hand in the affairs of public business, those places have been purified of all filth, and I am sure that Woman Suffrage would to a great extent purify the political arena.

Mrs. Corbin cites to Colorado for example, and says that reports from cities in that state show that women from the slums were compelled to vote for unprincipled politicians, and were often forced to repeat.

While such is much to be deplored, is it any worse than the men of the slums, who can be made to do the same thing for a few dollars or often a drink of whiskey?

Again, is Mrs. Corbin willing to continue to be domineered by a set of corrupt politicians and capitalists, who have no regard for good morals or common decency, and who look upon the daughters of parents amongst the poorer classes as playthings in their hands? Is there anything more deplorable than such? We need the co-operation of woman in politics as well as in every other department of life.

Mrs. Corbin fears the taint of politics, and says the privilege to vote would bring woman into contact with the game of politics, involving all the elements employed by the corruptionists in party strife. And she says woman cannot risk the taint of politics, her inherent sense of decency and purity will not permit her doing so.

It is well enough, perhaps, to close our eyes to keep from seeing things as they really exist, especially if we have a purpose in view. Could woman get into a worse condition by declaring for herself the right, the privilege that is hers by divine right, to go to the polls on election day with her husband, her son, her daughters? Would it lower her to go to Congress, to the Senate, and there clear the foul and corrupt atmosphere, the same as she has done in other public places of business? I say no! Forever no! and contrary to Mrs. Corbin, I urge upon womankind that they devote themselves to politics the same as their husbands and sons. And they can take care of their home affairs just the same as the husband takes care of his business affairs. A mother that becomes familiarized with the political world is all the better fitted to consult with her husband, and to point out to the growing up son the dangers of corrupt politicians. And we will then have good citizens, and good voters, and not till then.

BY M. M. MANGASARIAN.

HOW THE BIBLE WAS INVENTED.

A New Lecture.—Price, 10 cents.

This little pamphlet should be placed in the hands of every American citizen. The attention of preachers, theological students, and all church members should be called to the wonderful story of the Invention of the Holy Bible, which this lecture tells.

See that at least one orthodox neighbor of yours reads this lecture.

MORALITY WITHOUT A GOD.

With letter to Right Reverend Bishop Anderson, of Chicago. Price, 10 cents.

JESUS CHRIST A MYTH.

A New Book.—Price 25 Cents.

This book examines the evidence for the historical existence of Jesus, and finds it quite insufficient to prove that such a man as Jesus ever lived. It is a most important contribution to Modern Thought. It is prefaced by a letter to the Christian Clergy, and concluded by an answer to an editorial in one of the Chicago morning papers, attacking Mr. Mangasarian's position. Send your orders at once, as the first edition will soon be exhausted.

Germs of Mind in Plants.

By R. H. France, Translated by A. M. Simons.—Cloth, Illustrated, 50 Cents.

A cardinal point in the philosophical systems favored by the ruling classes is that the mind of man is something unique in the universe, governed by laws of its own that have no particular connection with physical laws. Modern science has proved that not only animals, but also plants receive impressions from the outside world and use data thus obtained to modify their movements for their own advantage, exactly as human beings do. These facts are told in this book in so charming and entertaining a style that the reader is carried along and does not realize until later the revolutionary significance of the facts.

HEROES AND HERO WORSHIP, AND THE HEROIC IN HISTORY.

By Thomas Carlyle.

A remarkable book by a remarkable man. Marked by terse strength and vigor, deep thought, philosophy and dramatic tensity of earnestness. A notable literary effort. A fine edition in cloth. Price 50 cents.

General Survey.

The Spiritualistic Field—Its Workers, Its Work, and General Progress, the World Over.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper. Please bear this in mind.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

THIS GENERAL SURVEY DEPARTMENT IS ONLY INTENDED TO CHRONICLE THE ENGAGEMENTS AND WORK OF SPEAKERS AND MEDIUMS. A REPORT OF WHAT THE VARIOUS SPEAKERS SAY WILL NOT BE PUBLISHED, AS WE HAVE NOT SPACE SUFFICIENT FOR THAT PURPOSE.

The Song Cards for sale at this office at $4 per hundred, are the help you need in society work.

Mrs. Elizabeth Schauss, Ohio State Missionary, writes from Martinsferry, Ohio: "Sunday, Nov. 11, was spent with the White Key Society at Bellaire, Ohio. The day being cold and misty, the attendance was not as large as might have been. People from Martinsferry, Bridgeport, Wheeling, and Bellaire were in the audience. C. A. Sollinger of Cleveland, spoke in German and English; to me was assigned the part of psychometrizing articles. Mrs. L. A. Wilson has been serving this society as pastor for two years and to her untiring effort is due the fact that a rally of the Spiritualists of the Ohio Valley was possible. The parlor meetings in her home each week are well attended, and good work for the cause is being accomplished. I go from here to Uricksville, Nov. 14, 15 and 16; thence to Massillon, for Nov. 17, 18, 19 and 20."

Harry J. Moore is now at San Diego, Cal., lecturing. The good Spiritualists there will find his lectures highly interesting and instructive. He is delighted with the climate and surroundings.

The Duplin Journal of Faison, N. C., has the following: "Mr. Geo. H. Letford, the popular salesman of the well known H. E. Bucklen Co. Medicines, was in town Monday and renewed his ad in the Journal and restocked the Drug Store. He is not only popular but an interesting spiritual medium, who holds services with the spirit land, and can give his friends an hour or an evening when at leisure, of interesting and astonishing facts and illustrations of Spiritualism."

Mrs. F. V. Jackson, inspirational speaker, test and message medium, of 114 Canal street, Grand Rapids, Mich., is open for engagements. Address her as above.

Mr. O. A. Edgerly writes: "I think the paper is better than ever; in fact, the best that ever was."

K. W. Grove writes: "The series of meetings that are being held by Mrs. Hamilton Gill at the Van Buren Opera House, are attracting excellent audiences from among the best class of people. Last Sunday evening she delivered an interesting lecture on Buddha, that was greatly appreciated. She has resumed her Thursday night circles, at her home, 891 West Adams street, second flat, and also holds a ladies' circle every Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock."

Mrs. Geo. Williams writes from Cleveland, Ohio: "The Ladies' Spiritualist Temple Fund Society of Fullerton street, Cleveland, Ohio, have the pleasure of having with them this month and next, Mr. Oscar Edgerly, who is a trance speaker. He also gives seances every Thursday evening at the church annex at 8 o'clock sharp. The admission is 25 cents, the proceeds to help the church fund along. Large audiences are always in evidence whenever Mr. Edgerly is present. The ladies also meet every Thursday to sew for a fair in the near future. Everybody welcome."

Samuel A. Huntington writes from Malden, Mass.: "We held our first supper, social and circle of the season, on Thursday evening, Nov. 8. A fine company met in Louise Hall, and from 6 to 7 held an informal reception; then forming in twos, with the president at the head, marched to the strains of beautiful music to the banquet hall below, where a bountiful supper was enjoyed. After supper a circle was held, and many beautiful messages were given. The first supper and social of the season proved a grand success. November 11, the 3 o'clock circle was turned into an experience meeting, and proved one of the most interesting held this season. The subject discussed was 'Our Experiences in Spiritualism.' The evening meeting opened at 7:45 with a beautiful praise service. Mr. Thomas Cross of Fall River was the speaker and message bearer. He delivered a very able and eloquent address on 'What Spiritualists Believe,' after which he gave several fine messages. Mrs. Alice M. Whall will be the speaker and message bearer on Sunday evening, Nov. 18. At our last board meeting, six copies per week, for one year, of your grand paper were ordered."

AS A GENERAL RULE, IN THIS OFFICE WE PAY NO ATTENTION TO ANONYMOUS COMMUNICATIONS. THE NAME AND ADDRESS OF THE WRITER SHOULD ACCOMPANY ALL MATTER, OF WHATEVER KIND, SENT TO THIS OFFICE.

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

ALWAYS GIVE YOUR FULL NAME AND ADDRESS WHEN SENDING NOTICES AND COMMUNICATIONS FOR PUBLICATION, OTHERWISE THEY WILL FIND THEIR WAY TO THE WASTE BASKET.

Boston Meetings.

The First Spiritualist Ladies' Aid Society meets in Appleton Hall, 9 Appleton street, Boston, Mass., every Friday.

The Ladies' Lyceum Union meets in Dwight Hall, 514 Tremont street, Boston, Mass., every Wednesday.

The Ladies' Industrial Union meets in Dwight Hall, 514 Tremont street, every Thursday.

Correspondent writes: "The Illinois Sunflower Club will have a dance in Assembly Hall, Fraternity Building, 70 E. Adams street, on the evening of Nov. 26. All friends are invited to join us in this, an informal affair. On the afternoon of Nov. 27, the Monthly Tea Party, will be held in Lincoln Hall, Fraternity Bldg., E. Adams street, between the hours of 2 and 6 Mesdames Elizabeth Delphin and H. M. Kellar will preside. Mrs. Henrietta L. Lichtig, our efficient corresponding secretary, has been called to the pastorate of the Temple at Galveston, Texas. While we regret our loss, we are proud and confident that our sister will entirely fill the position in the larger fields of usefulness with credit to all concerned."

Miss K. P. Distelhorst writes from Omaha, Neb.: "Too much cannot be said in behalf of our honest workers in their efforts in the interest of Spiritualism, and it is with this thought in view that I pen these lines, telling you the good work here of Rev. G. C. Love of Portland, Oregon. We were captivated with the grandest flow of inspiration we ever listened to from any of the lecturers we ever heard. He formed a class here, and it is really too bad the whole world could not hear the talks of his guides while he is entranced. His tests were fine and convincing. We have a promise from him that on coming East again in the spring, he will serve the First Spiritual Church of Omaha, of which he is founder, as many Sundays as he can spare to us."

Mrs. Mattie Burnham writes from Macomb, Ill.: "Our society has succeeded in securing the services of that highly gifted medium, Mrs. Nellie Davis of Kewanee, Ill., and to say that we were pleased with her work would be putting it mildly. She is a noble woman, and the lectures that she gave could not be excelled. Her subject for the morning services was, 'Is Spiritualism Worthy to Call Forth the True Spirit of Sacrifice?' Evening subject: 'What Is Spiritualism?' She presented both subjects in such a beautiful way that the audience was highly pleased, and showed their appreciation in a very substantial way when the collection was taken. During her stay of one day with us she gave twenty-five or thirty messages, from departed loved ones, many times giving the names. Every one was recognized. Words cannot express our gratitude towards this blessed medium. She has promised to be with us again in two weeks, and stay one week beginning Nov. 25. Macomb Spiritualists have not had such a treat since dear Brother and Sister Sprague were here."

Mrs. May A. Price of Washington, D. C., is serving the First Spiritualist Association of Philadelphia during November. Good audiences are present. Each lecture is followed by tests which are very clear and recognized by those to whom they are given. Mrs. Price will be glad to make further engagements with other societies, or with camps for summer work. Address her at No. 1614 North 13th street, Philadelphia, Pa.

G. L. Willms writes: "Sunday evening, Nov. 11, the North Star Spiritual Union, 1546 Milwaukee avenue, had the pleasure of greeting Mr. Max Hoffman who had been engaged for Nov. 11 and 18. He is one of the most remarkable mediums in the United States. He selected the subject, 'Is the Bible the Foundation of Modern Spiritualism?' He spoke for one hour and was applauded repeatedly. Mr. Hoffmann and Sister Mueller, gave some very fine tests, and they were all recognized. The North Star Spiritual Union and The Progressive Thinker are certainly revolutionizing the Northwest Side for the simple reason that both are fairly upright and honest in the convictions."

Rev. Albert P. Blinn writes from Norwich, Ct., of the First Spiritual Union: "Considering the disappointing weather, excellent audiences assembled both forenoon and evening last Sunday to hear the writer who spoke in the morning upon 'The Power of Thought,' and in the evening upon 'Evidences of Immortality.' The members of this society are working together harmoniously for the common good of all, and the result is apparent in the increased interest and attendance. At the present time we are holding our annual fair, and if enthusiasm counts for anything, it is to be the most successful ever held by this society. On Thursday evening, Dec. 6, our young people are to give a dramatic entertainment after the supper, which will include character sketches, monologues, skits, and solos. Our young people are the kind of members we appreciate, for they are firm supporters of the grand work of the older ones. With 'Success' as our watchword, we cannot fail."

Zella A. Owen writes from New York: "Your paper is prized above all others. Your denouncement of frauds and fakes is commendable, and cannot fail to check many in their disgraceful career. The lectures are fine, and the various experiences given by the tried and true, with the excellent poems, are all food for mind and soul. Long may you live to continue your work."

Correspondent writes from Philadelphia: "Mr. J. W. Nigh (Station K) Washington, D. C., has just closed a month's engagement with the Philadelphia Spiritualists Society. As a speaker he is full of magnetic force, and inspires a feeling of fellowship that makes warm friends and infuses new life into a society and the cause. Societies in need of such service, and wishing an interesting and effective presentation of this grand and comforting truth, address as above."

Arzelia C. Clay writes: "We like to speak a good word for The Progressive Thinker, as it gladdens our room with its weekly visits. The literary gems given through the mediumship of Beatrice St. George, Dr. T. Wilkins, Ella Dare and others, are a credit to our cause. A vote of thanks is extended to Helen Stuart Richings for her correct readings. We give her our best thoughts as she journeys along life's rough highway."

R. S. Cobb writes from Gonzales, Texas: "Mrs. Isa Wilson Kaynor of Dallas arrived in our town on Tuesday, the 6th of this month, and lectured at the W. O. W. Hall on Spiritualism, after which she gave quite a number of tests, all of which were readily recognized. She also lectured Thursday and Friday night to very attentive audiences. Mrs. Kaynor is a medium of high standing, and is very much admired and loved by all who know her. This is the second trip she has made to Gonzales, and we hope that in the near future it will again be our pleasure to have her in our midst."

The growing interest in the meetings of the Golden Rule Spiritualist Society gives much satisfaction to those who have labored so earnestly to establish it. A large audience was in attendance on the afternoon of Sunday, Nov. 11, with Mrs. Nora E. Hill as speakers, and Brother Travis and Prof. McLane as message bearers. For the evening every available chair was filled, and Dr. J. H. Randall was at his very best, with Mrs. McIntyre and Mr. Schmidt as message bearers. Our speaker for Sunday evening, Nov. 26, will be the pastor, Mrs. Nora E. Hill. Read carefully the following: "This card with 10 cents, entitles the holder to a chance on a hand-painted sofa pillow, and admission to the Christmas Gift Bazaar, to be given by the Golden Rule Pleasure Club, December 15, afternoon and evening, followed by dancing. O'Donnell's Hall, Paulina street, between Washington Blvd. and Park Ave. The pillow is donated by Cameron & Martin, 54 N. Ashland Ave. The person holding the lucky number will be entitled to an enlarged portrait of self, relative or friend. The same offer applies to the person selling the most chances."

Eva L. Stewart writes: "On the 11th inst., Dr. Geo. E. McNeil gave a fine talk to the Hyde Park Occult Society. Mrs. Dr. Caird, the noted medium, was with us, and gave many messages—all recognized. Her ways are such that she is winning many to her. We hope to have her with us again soon. Our circles on Tuesday evenings are growing in number and interest. Mr. Fraser gives splendid satisfaction. Our next dance will be on Dec. 6. On Nov. 25, we hold a Memorial Service in honor of Mrs. Emma Guckert, who was a member of our society, and also our medium for the past few months. She was sick only 3 weeks, and then passed to spirit life on Nov. 3. A number of speakers and mediums have been invited to be present and take part in the ceremonies of the evening. We commence at 8 o'clock. Don't forget the place, 319 E. 55th street, corner of Monroe avenue."

Correspondent writes: "And still the good work goes on with the Psychical Research Society at Rockford, Ill. Mrs. Alice C. Barry, with her genial ways, masterly ability and spiritual unfoldment, is holding her audiences almost spell-bound each Sunday evening; and her messages from the loved ones who have gone before are always welcomed as truthful by those who are so fortunate as to be favored by their reception. Accretions to the membership continue, and the Progressive Thinker is still increasing its list of patrons among the faithful. That the spirits will bless it, its publisher and the cause he so zealously represents, is the sincere hope of this writer, and of all who read the paper."

Clarence S. Tisdale writes: "Kindly allow us to say a few words to Chicago Students of occult, psychic, spiritual and metaphysical, as well as natural sciences that there will be given free open services, devoted to all lines of this study, conducted every Sunday evening at 8 o'clock, in the Grand Temple of the Ancient Order of the Magi, Chicago, Ill. These services are designed as a general preparatory course of lectures in the various lines of occult and known science, and will be in charge of an initiate of the Order of the Magi. Clarence S. Tisdale, D. M., teacher in charge."

Mamie Young writes: "Divine Spiritual Church had an appreciative audience, both afternoon and evening of Nov. 11, receiving to their satisfaction messages from spirit land. The pastor, Rev. Lucy A. Hodge Koontz, took for her subject at the evening services, 'The Game of Life,' which could not help leaving impressions to her hearers to look more to the interest of spirit life than material things. Next Sunday, our pastor will christen three children to the Spiritual cause."

W. W. Kincaid writes from Meadville, Pa.: "I thought it might interest you to know how our new Meadville Society is progressing. We are not yet as strong and active as we are ambitious to become. The officers and people connected with our society are some of the very best people in our city, and we have not had the opportunity to do missionary work in trying to get others to join our society. I feel that we can easily double the membership if some one had the opportunity to go among the people and invite them individually to become members. We have, however, succeeded in arousing a strong interest in our community among the reading, thinking and progressive class. People belonging to every religious faith attend our meetings in large numbers. We have just closed a series of three meetings held here by Madam H. Stuart-Richings of Boston, and they have been most successful. Although the last two nights were very stormy and inclement, we had very good audiences, and a week ago Sunday evening the Odd Fellows' Temple, where we hold our meetings, formerly the old Baptist church, was packed to the doors and at least one hundred people were turned away. We are endeavoring to introduce speakers in Meadville who are able to appeal to the intelligence as well as the heart of the people. We believe we have succeeded to a large degree in carrying out our polity. We solicit correspondence with any of the speakers who may be coming this way with view of booking an engagement with them."

D. H. Cassman writes: "Henry Ellis, the well-known medium, is now located at 395½ E. 33rd street. He holds circles various evenings through the week. His telegraphic guides are still with him and give many convincing messages."

Mrs. Alice Baker, State Missionary of Oklahoma, writes: "With your kindly permission I will write a few lines in reference to the progress the new Spiritual Church is making in Dallas, Texas. Sunday, Nov. 4, was a banner day. The writer lectured upon 'The Missing Link,' the lecture was followed by an illustrated musical poem by Miss Cox of Boxton, Mass. Our audiences have been of a high and intellectual class. I am now in Oklahoma, making a tour of the state; am in Walters, holding meetings every night, the first Spiritualist meetings ever held here. Our audiences are good and increasing every night. Bro. H. Nash is the leader of the movement here. The opera house has been donated for our public meetings for five successive nights. We feel that his labors will be rewarded by the organization of a good society here. Bro. C. S. Simmons, the state president, is the right man in the right place, bringing with him an inspiration and helpfulness. The 15th I go to Lawton; from there to Hedrick and other points. During my absence my work in Dallas will be carried on by the assistant pastor and other local talent. I want to hear from all Spiritualists in Oklahoma, so I can judiciously form routes for future work. Home address, 449 Live Oak street, Dallas, Texas."

The Illinois Sunflower Club will give the first of a series of dancing parties, to be held at Fraternity Hall Building, 70 East Adams street, on Monday evening, Nov. 26. Dancing from 8 to 12 o'clock; good music. Price of tickets, 25 cents. Coffee, 10 cents; sandwiches or cake, 10 cents. Come and have a good time, young and old.

Mrs. Annie J. Quinn writes from Dallas, Texas: "Sunday, Nov. 11, was a day of pleasure for the Truth Seekers Spiritualist Society of Dallas, Texas. We were favored with a fine lecture by Oscar, one of Mrs. Isa W. Kayner's guides, in which he told us of the life in the spirit world. After the lecture six persons were taken into the society. The Declaration of Principles was read and accepted by them, and then the right hand of fellowship was extended to them by the pastor and members. Each one received a rose with appropriate remarks by Mrs. Kayner. Several new converts have given in their names and will unite with our church at our next meeting. A greater interest is being taken in Spiritualism in Dallas, and in our meetings also, which is very encouraging to the earnest workers. The reliable Progressive Thinker is kept on the secretary's desk for distribution, that the public may have an opportunity of reading true Spiritualism."

Louie A. Stanton writes from St. Joseph, Mo.: "The First Spiritualist Church of St. Joseph commenced its meetings the first Sunday in October with Bro. W. F. Peck of St. Louis as lecturer. He will be with us the remainder of this month and the first two Sundays in December. We feel greatly encouraged. Our audiences are large and appreciative. But considering that we have the very best mediums in the field, we should be able to do a great work. The well known trumpet medium, W. S. Jessup, has kindly given his services for this month and is following Brother Peck with messages. He is the best it has ever been our lot to hear. We held our annual election of officers the first Sunday in November, resulting as follows: Mr. W. C. Jessup, president; Mr. H. Korf, vice-president; Louie A. Stanton, secretary; Miss Pasha Mathis, treasurer; Mr. E. F. Snowdon, Mr. S. J. Turner and Mr. J. O. Stevens, trustees. Our mid-week meetings are creating quite an interest, and are proving very successful, as we usually select some subject, and every one is given an opportunity to express themselves. We hear some very interesting and instructive talks. We hope to make this the most successful year we have ever known and as we are progressing so nicely we do not feel that we will be disappointed."

Harrison D. Barrett, president of the N. S. A., is now in Seattle, Wash., where he can be addressed in care of the General Delivery.

Mrs. N. S. Baade has been exciting a good deal of interest with her lectures at Pontiac, Mich.

C. A. Sollinger, secretary of the Ohio State Association of Spiritualists, writes: "The White Key Spiritual Society, Bellaire, Ohio, auxiliary to the O. S. A., held a rally meeting Sunday, Nov. 11, afternoon and evening. The afternoon service was conducted in German, I and Rev. Mrs. Elizabeth Schauss of Toledo, being the speakers. The evening lecture was delivered in English by myself; psychometric readings followed by Mrs. E. Schauss. The German service attracted many from Wheeling and other surrounding towns. Many had never heard Spiritualism in its philosophy nor phenomena explained in their native tongue, and all expressed a desire to soon be able to attend such meetings often. In the evening the hall was filled again by a very appreciative audience. The psychometric work of Mrs. Schauss, O. S. A. missionary, in both languages, could not have been better, as all her readings were perfectly understood. Monday evening, Nov 12, the society gave a reception in honor of the speakers at the home of the pastor, Mrs. L. A. Wilson, 128 Hanover street, Martinsferry, Ohio. A circle was formed in which about twenty persons took part, with six mediums, and a very enjoyable evening was spent. We can congratulate the White Key Society in having such an able and efficient pastor, and we hope a lasting benefit to all may have been accomplished."

On Tuesday evening, Nov. 13, a surprise party was given Mrs. M. E. Jenkins, at her home in Windsor, Canada, by the officers and friends of the First National Spiritual Society, Detroit, Mich. They arranged to come over by the same boat, bringing with them refreshments, cake, ice cream, etc. Beautiful music was rendered on the organ and violin. A delightful evening was spent by all. Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Carpenter, Mr. and Mrs. Sprague, of Detroit, and many others were present.

Robert Schmus writes from Rockford, Ill.: "After an extended vacation the Spiritual Science Society re-opened its public meetings on Sunday, Oct. 7. Madam Brunswick, our worthy coworker, served the society during the entire month, and the meetings were crowned with success, both in attendance and the deep interest shown by the large number of investigators. She is rapidly coming to the front as one of the best psychics in the field. Her messages are not of the sensational or flowery kind, but honest, straight-forward and and convincing."

The First National Spiritual Society of Detroit, Mich., is meeting with great success. Services opened in October, Mrs. M. E. Jenkins being the speaker for that month, Mr. Sprague and wife following in November. The meetings are drawing large crowds, and adding considerable to the prosperity of the society by enrolling new members. Mr. Nelson Goucher is the president of this society.

Fred D. Dunakin, president of the Ohio State Association of Spiritualists, writes from Cecil, Ohio: "We are trying our best to build up the cause we love in our own state. We had a grand mass-meeting and board meeting at Columbus, Ohio, on the 3rd and 4th of this month, and the board elected Mrs. Elizabeth Schauss of Toledo, Ohio, as state missionary, and we hope to do good work through the fall and winter months, by holding mass-meetings in different cities throughout the state, and organizing new societies besides strengthening those already organized. Mrs. Schauss is a good honest worker and medium, and a gifted and eloquent lecturer, and we expect good results from her work."

Dr. and Mrs. Sumner Chapman of Wells street, were given a very pleasant surprise party at Union hall, Wednesday evening, in honor of the 49th anniversary of their marriage, by their friends in the Greenfield Spiritualist Society, Greenfield, Mass. Supper was served and an entertainment program was given, Mrs. Carrie S. Thomas of Brooklyn and Wellman C. Whitney of Springfield contributing. President R. F. Churchill expressed in a happy manner the regard in which the society holds Dr. and Mrs. Chapman, at the same time presenting them with a substantial gift. Dr. Chapman was born February 1, 1835, at Windsor in Hillsboro county, N. H., where he grew up on a farm. He attended the public schools and graduated from Tubbs Union academy at Washington, N. H. After teaching school for a time he engaged in the machine business at Elmira, N. Y., and later worked in Winchendon. He abandoned this vocation in 1876 for the profession of clairvoyance and magnetic healing. Mrs. Chapman before her marriage was Miss Maria E. Hurd of Lempster, N. H. There are two children, Clifton M. Chapman of Holyoke and Mrs. Grace C. McVey of Greenfield.

John M. Markley writes: "The Spiritualist Quartette (the Wattles family) of Winchester, Ind., has just closed a tendays' meeting here, which has been the grandest uplift we have ever had. Their beautiful inspirational singing, especially that of Russell H. Wattles, touched every heart, and the powerful dramatic work of Miss Florence was most effective. Professor Wattles is a great speaker, and thoroughly versed in the Spiritualist philosophy. His lecture, 'Jesus—the Man and His Work,' was pronounced by all who heard it, to be one of the finest addresses ever delivered in Elwood. Our society has been greatly unified and built up by these meetings, and several new members added, and more will follow. We shall try to secure these gifted workers for a two weeks' meeting later in the season."

Mrs. Carrie M. Hinsdale, president of the Texas State Spiritualist Association, writes from Fort Worth, Texas.: "The Fort Worth Spiritualist Society, of which I am the speaker, holds regular services every Sunday night. We have very good audiences and almost every Sunday night fully half the audience is composed of strangers, indicating that people of all classes are interested in the truths we teach. We have recently moved into the Odd Fellows' Hall, in the handsome new I. O. O. F. building. The hall is one of the handsomest in the state, and magnificently furnished."

To Spiritualists of Indian Territory.

I have a call from Madill, I. T., to lecture at that place, and I would like to hear from those interested in securing a speaker for other towns in the Territory. I will probably make a tour of the Indian Territory, and therefore would like a list of places where Spiritualists are to be found. Address,

MRS. CARRIE M. HINSDALE,
President Texas State Ass'n of Spiritualists, R. R. 5, Box 61, Fort Worth, Texas.

THE TEMPLE FUND SOCIETY.

I suppose the members of the Temple Fund Society are wondering why they do not get the promised receipt for the $1 membership fee they paid me while at Chicago. After we returned home we decided to have official receipts printed, which would also serve as a certificate of membership, and enclose a copy of the Constitution and By-laws with each receipt.

I find in looking over the list of members, that I have the following names without any address; if those whose names appear in this list will kindly drop me a card giving full address, they will receive their receipt at once. G. Bodmer, Mrs. Anna Dodge, Mrs. Dietrick, Mrs. K. T. Hary, F. Obrock, Mrs. C. Parkhurst, Dr. Geo. Von Langstray and Mrs. O. B. Wilson.

Memberships are coming in almost every day, but we must have many more before we can meet the calls for help. Fraternally yours,

CARRIE H. MONG,
N. S. A., 415 S. Franklin street, Muncie, Ind.

MEMORIAL SERVICES

In Honor of That Great and Good Worker in the Cause of Truth, Mrs. Sarah A. Byrnes.

Memorial services in honor of our arisen sister, Mrs. Sarah A. Byrnes, were held by the First Spiritualist Ladies' Aid Society, Boston, Mass., on Friday, Nov. 16. There was a good attendance, and many of the old workers were present to pay a loving tribute to Mrs. Byrnes. The meeting opened with singing, after which a short message was read that had been written by Mrs. Byrnes. Mrs. Alice S. Waterhouse then opened the meeting and spoke of the work of Spiritualism and of the faithful ones who stood by the cause in the early days.

Miss Etta Willis read an original "In Memoriam."

Mrs. Carrie F. Loring of Braintree, spoke lovingly of our sister, Mrs. Byrnes; her work speaks for her. We can never fill her place. Her nobility of character stands out clearly before us. Let us rejoice that she lived with us, and let us profit by her teachings.

Miss Bernice Abbott of Lawrence, then gave a very fine whistling solo, which was very feelingly rendered.

Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn said that now she is one of the oldest pioneer workers; there are only a few left, and she told of the work associated with Mrs. Byrnes in the early days. She loved and respected her always; she loves her now; she hated to have her go from our presence (physical), but she knew of course she could and would come to us when it was necessary. Mrs. Byrnes was a Spiritualist, true and tried; her words and deeds will never be forgotten.

Mrs. Haidee Hall then sang one of C. P. Longley's beautiful songs that was finely rendered.

Rev. F. A. Wiggin sent a letter of regret that he was unable to be present, and he sent a loving tribute to be read, which was much enjoyed.

Mrs. N. J. Willis was controlled by one of Mrs. Byrnes' guides, and she told of the welcome she had received in spirit; also of her (Mrs. Byrnes') work in the earlier days, and how faithful she had been.

Mrs. Nellie Abbott spoke briefly along the same line.

Mr. Edgar Emerson came from his home in Manchester, N. H., to pay his tribute to the memory of Mrs. Byrnes. He told of her worth, and how she encouraged him when a young medium. How sorry he was to have our pioneer workers pass away from us.

Mrs. R. W. Belcher, president of the Ladies' Industrial Union, spoke lovingly of our sister, of the way they had worked together in the past; how she always gained strength and a blessing when associated with her; how she hoped that Mrs. Byrnes' influence would aid and assist her to grow, and that although Mrs. Byrnes was not visible in the mortal, she knew she was present in the spirit.

Mrs. Annie Chapman spoke of Mrs. Byrnes and the dignity of her work; how we were always proud to have her with us; how willing she was to give the hand of fellowship to every honest medium, but would frown upon all dishonest methods. We all loved her; we all hope to feel her presence sometimes.

Mrs. M. J. Butler was present, but said she was too much overcome to speak.

Several songs were sung during the evening, Mrs. Haidee Hall leading, Mrs. Mary Lovering presiding at the piano. There were many floral offerings decorating the tables, and the American flag draped the altar. The flowers were all sent to sick members—some to our good sister, Mrs. Hattie C. Mason, who has been at the hospital over two weeks, where she had to undergo an operation.

The meeting closed with a benediction by Mrs. Loring, and singing, "God Be With Us Till We Meet Again."

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Mr. J. H. Prebble of San Diego, Cal., passed to spirit life, Saturday, Nov. 3, aged 47 years. He was a Spiritualist for many years. The Woodmen of the World, assisted by the writer, conducted the funeral service.

HARRY J. MOORE.

Passed to spirit life at 511 West Madison street, Chicago, Mrs. Mary Frances Shumway, a good woman, and a devoted Spiritualist since 1887. Born in Catskill, N. Y., 1825. A resident of Chicago since 1854. After an illness of only a few days she peacefully and quietly passed to spirit life, Nov. 11, 1906.

GEO. A. BISHOP.

Last Sunday, by an accident, one of our young and prosperous lyceum scholars, Oscar Wittig, was shot and killed by a neighbor out at their home place while hunting, leaving a widowed mother, four brothers and three sisters to mourn the loss of the material body. He was also a member of our society that we have formed at Plainwell, Wis. Rev. Anna Mehrtens was called to conduct the funeral services. DR. FRED L. MEHRTENS.

Milwaukee, Wis.

The funeral of Mrs. Lulu Warner, wife of the editor of the Potterville Press, took place at the home in Potterville, Mich, Saturday, Nov. 11. She leaves, beside a beloved companion, three children and a host of friends. She was a highly esteemed member of a fraternal order of the place. Six of the sister members, clad in white, acted as pall bearers. While Mr. Warner is not a Spiritualist, he is one of the most advanced thinkers of this part of the state. Mrs. A. E. Sheets officiated.

COR.

Sam Barratt, a prominent Spiritualist of Novinger, Mo., passed to spirit life, October 23.

Passed to spirit life, at No. 83 Florence street, Cleveland, Ohio, Nov. 12, Brother Daniel R. Fox, aged 71 years. Brother Fox was a man respected and loved by all who knew him; always of a liberal turn of mind, and in later years was strongly impressed by the philosophy and truth of Modern Spiritualism. Brother I. W. Pope officiated, giving words of comfort to the only daughter and friends present.

LIFE'S PROGRESSION.

"There is no death; there are no dead."

These words stand out on the cover of Edward C. Randall's new book. They are a challenge to the orthodox world, and through all of its pages runs this challenge to those whose ideas of God, of heaven, of hell, of a future life are based strictly upon the Bible. Yet Mr. Randall believes in life hereafter, based on positive knowledge given him from the living friends passed to the life beyond. Price $1.50. For sale at this office.

Prof. Lockwood's Books.

Store your mind with the great but demonstrative truths found in consecutive order only in these writings.

Prof. Lockwood is the only writer, thinker and lecturer in this country who affirms that the evolution of the soul of man is in strict accord and agreement with the evolution of the soul of nature; and that the only proof of immortality inheres in an analysis of nature's fundamental principles and the co-relation of cosmic elements and energies.

These great truths are explained and demonstrated from the plane of the Spiritual Philosophy founded on Nature itself.

The Molecular Hypothesis of Nature and Its Relation to the Philosophy of Spiritualism. A scientific demonstration of the invisible principles and attributes of nature and Modern Spiritualism. A mint of scientific truths as the basis of its phenomena. Price 25 cents.

The Infidelity of Ecclesiasticism—A Menace to the American Civilization. The entire hierarchy of Ecclesiasticism arraigned as infidels for subverting the scientific demonstrations of universities and colleges, by substituting the immoral phantoms of the Mosaic Hypothesis. It is a hot shot. Price 25 cents.

Historical, Logical and Philosophical Objections to the Dogmas of Reincarnation and Re-Embodiment. A concise and masterly review of the historical origin of Reincarnation as an ancient dogma. Its illogical claims and inconsistent assumptions. Its glaring defects and dogmas dissected. Price 25 cents.

The Spiritualism of Nature. Modern Spiritualism has its basic truths in nature, and is proven not by the bible or any sacred cosmogony, but by an analysis of nature's self-existent principles. Price 15 cents.

Continuity of Life a Cosmic Truth. The greatest book, and the greatest truth of any age; a book of 212 pages with several telling scientific illustrations. Continuity of life and the association of spirit realms demonstrated to be in scientific accord with principles of the Co-relation of Force, and the Conservation of Energy. The greatest book ever written in the defence and support of Spiritualism. Price $1.

The Relation Science Holds to Natural Philosophy and Its Conflict with Every Phase of Religion. In this essay the author shows that science is not a thing—a corporation or individual, but a process of inductive and deductive reasoning. Its acceptance means the death of Theurgical religions. Price 15 cents.

All of Prof. Lockwood's publications are on sale at The Progressive Thinker office, Chicago, Ill., and at the rostrum when he lectures. These treatises contain the wealth of a vast historical and scientific research.

MOSES HULL'S BOOKS.

Encyclopedia of Biblical Spiritualism; A Concordance to the Principal Passages of the Old and New Testament Scriptures which prove or imply Spiritualism; together with a brief history of the origin of many of the important books of the Bible. Price $1.

Our Bible. Who Wrote It? When, Where, How? Is It Infallible? A voice from the higher criticism. Price $1.

Two in One, being a combination of the two books, The Contrast, and the Question of the Spiritualism of the Bible Settled, together with a series of startling contrasts between creedal Christianity and the facts and philosophy of Modern Spiritualism. Price $1.

The Spiritual Alps and How we Ascend Them, or a Few Facts as to How to Reach the Altitude. Price, cloth, 40 cents

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE.—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Geo. A. Williams: Q. Herbert Spencer had a book published a short time before his transition, or it was ready for the press. Can you give me the title of the book and where it can be obtained?

A. The book referred to, probably was Herbert Spencer's Autobiography. It is published by D. Appleton Co., New York. The price is $5.

John Hoberger: Q. My wife, who enters trance, never sees colored spirits. Am I to infer from this that such go to a sphere by themselves?

A. Unless such spirits come into the sphere of the entranced they would not be recognized, and this is exactly what should be inferred from the fact. On the well known principle that like attracts and gathers those in harmony together, there is a segregation of races on different planes, but this is not the cause of the unrecognition of any one of them by those entranced. The subject may not see them because they are not present, and he may not, because they are not en rapport with him.

W. G. Henderson: Q. What is the meaning of Dog days?

A. Dog days or Conicular days are the forty days between July 3 and August 11. This embraces the heated term of summer and is of ancient origin. The name was derived from Sirius the Dog Star, which then had its heliacal rising at the beginning of these days. The connection was altogether accidental, but to the ancient mind which did not comprehend phenomena beyond appearance, the rising of this brilliant star at the beginning of the higher temperature, made it the cause. This star by procession no longer marks the beginning of the days. The superstition still prevalent that the days and star have especial influence on dogs, causing rabies, is also entirely a fancy. If the rubbish which has come down to us from the past was blown away, what a small measure of truth would remain!

Mrs. Marietta Hammer: Q. Why should we be represented in our organic movement by those who strictly speaking are more Theosophists than Spiritualists? I am informed by one of the "inner circle" that seven of the active leaders in our movement have "advanced" out of Spiritualism! Is it safe to give the interpretation of Spiritualism into such hands?

A. For those who have "advanced out of Spiritualism," and taken up the dogmas of Theosophy, Occultism, New Thought, or other isms, to come before the public as its representatives is as dishonest as dishonorable. I am sure the officers of the National Association are above this reproach. It has been, and is, difficult to draw sharp lines in the definition of Spiritualism. It is protean in form, and is the ideal of the individual, yet there are fundamental principles which form its foundation, and those who do not accept them should not pretend to represent the cause. If they are allowed to do so, instead of a solidarity of thought and purpose, Spiritualism will be divided into petty cliques, each maintaining some crass and befogged speculations, and instead of a solid phalanx, advancing clad in the armor of knowledge, there will be an irregular skirmish line armed with conceited fancies.

All that is true in theosophy, occultism, new thought, and Christian science, has been pilfered from Spiritualism. It is the source of all these, and after having supplied them, has scarcely diminished. It is infinitely more than all these combined. Those who claim to have advanced out of Spiritualism simply reveal the narrowness of their knowledge and egotism.

Spiritualism in its broad sense, is the knowledge of the Spiritual universe. There is no word that more fully expresses, or carries such infinite significance. It carries us out of and above the physical, to the exalted realm of the ideal—away from selfishness, to self-devotion. Theosoph, Occultist, New Thoughtist, Christian Scientist, are not to be blamed when they want to get aboard the good, strong ship of Spiritualism; but it is not safe for the ship to give them command. We are sailing into uncharted seas, and only loyal souls should stand on the bridge or in the pilot house.

Lee N. Wallis: Q. We have, a small company, been sitting with planchette, had moving of table, rappings, etc. We have none of us settled opinions as to the cause of source from which the messages come. My investigation has been so curiously successful that I am convinced that any small number of persons who may have a mind to make the attempt may become convinced beyond a doubt of the genuineness of the phenomena. I state no belief, nor theory as to the source, only the fact. Now what is the scientific explanation?

A. If this question was not so constantly asked it would be amusing, and our answer would be a hearty laugh. If Mr. Wallis should have friends come to his home, engage in conversation, and by characteristic communications constantly prove their identity, when they went away would he ask, what is the scientific explanation of their appearance? So when he makes the necessary conditions for the coming of spirit friends and receives messages, is it not as ludicrous to ask, what is the cause and explanation? There is but one interpretation. It is just as it is represented. The messages come from the sources they claim.

There is one point, which this correspondent makes plain, and his conclusions are those of the many who have investigated. "Any small number of persons who have a mind to make the attempt may become convinced beyond a doubt of the genuineness of the phenomena." In other words, the plea for the home circle, so constantly advocated by The Progressive Thinker is substantiated. It should not be made amusement or pastime, but the home circle should be like a meeting for prayer—of earnest concentration of thought. It is inferable from known spiritual laws that spirits find the conditions most favorable for communicating at the home gathering, by the beloved hearth, at the table around which they sat with friends in earth life. Collusion and deception are not vitiating elements. The results may not be in any one instance startling, but by cumulation they will convince the most skeptical.

NONE BUT CHILDREN ARE CHRISTIANS.

Believed and Be Saved—Doubt and Be Damned.

The plastic age of childhood is the beginning of the Christian life. Fond parents pour into the ears of attentive listening children line upon line and precept upon precept of a religion hedged about with barriers for its own protection.

"Believe and be saved," cheers the young mind onward. "Doubt and be damned," prods the lagging, weary one to greater efforts to believe, until fear, like the sword of Damocles, hangs over the youthful head, compelling him to turn neither to the right nor to the left, nor permit himself to doubt if he would escape eternal damnation.

Years go on and the child is a man in everything but his religion. There has been no growth there. He has given his thinking over to the educator of his father, his grandfather, his great-grandfather, on and on back to Calvin, Martin Luther, Paul and a host of leaders and organizers, who in their very natures were combinations of truth and error, whose earnestness commanded respect, but many of whose teachings he would not accept as truth, had they not come to him through the plastic mind of childhood; through a mind disarmed by fear and not capable of carefully analyzing the weighty matters pertaining to his soul.

From a religious point of view, he is in every sense a child. He has followed the teachings of his fathers and fought against doubts, and has succeeded each time they have arisen, in delivering himself back into his original dwarfed condition which has precluded the possibility of his ever having an independent thought. If perchance one, overcome by a conviction of errors, casts aside fear, entertains doubts and dares to think, his ideas expand, the breach widens, he announces advanced ideas, he is tried for heresy and is no longer a Christian; but the church moves along serenely without him, being controlled by men of superior business acumen and training.

Only the most thoroughly educated, organized and trained body of men could approach success in the twentieth century with a fourteenth century religion; and the only way they can hold together the old religion in its entirety, which all their disciplining compels them to do, is for each one to keep himself a watcher on the battlements, to overcome Satan, or doubt—synonymous terms to the Christian—and hold exactly to the religion that was taught him in the tender years of his life, or in other words, remain a child in his religious thinking.

Oh, Christians! Awake from your childhood dreams and fears and superstitions. Do not dwarf your spiritual nature longer by forcing it into a garment outgrown. Do not dim the light of your Christian character by clinging to theories that the passing centuries have proven to be errors.

Are you a successful business man? Then use the same prerogative in matters pertaining to your eternal life that you do in business. Think!

Are you a leader of men? And are you leading your fellow creatures along paths made slippery with the blood of the Inquisition, of Holy Wars, and of persecutions incited and carried on in the name of a God of love to perpetuate a religion that, through inheritance, has fallen to your lot?

THINK! OH, THINK! Place yourself on the watch-towers of your spiritual life. Cut away any obstructions that may obscure your vision. Take the old book, so dear to our fathers, and that still is a part of your worship. Times change and forms change, but spirit remains unalterable, true, kind and loving. Head! Read! Examine the life, character and work of Jesus. He stood in the doorway between the seen and the unseen. Angels ministered unto him and aided him in his work. His sermon on the Mount was typical of his high spirituality. His humility and helpfulness showed forth his brotherly love and kindness; and in his wonderful healing power, the life giving currents were passing from the unseen world to the sick, the lame, the blind, and the dumb. So great was his power that he was called the Christ, the Anointed, the Messiah.

It was not Jesus alone who had the power to heal, but it was shared by his disciples and many others whom the disciples reported as casting out devils and healing the sick in the name of Jesus; but priestly interference closed the door between the two worlds and plunged the earth into midnight darkness. The love of Christ was supplanted by a devil's hate. Hope grew dim and love withered in the heart of man; but the Angel world kept knocking, knocking, knocking. Brave hearts responded to the signals and the door is again ajar. We have emerged from the dark ages. The spirit of the Christ, of the Anointed, again reigns upon earth and earth is ablaze with the light flashed to us from the Angel world. You can not escape from so great a light if you would. It lights up the dark places about you and bids you live. It gleams into the future, showing you the spirits' pathway and bids you hope. With that light comes brotherly love and desire to lead an upright life.

There is much more of joy in knowledge than there is in faith intermingled with doubt. Supplementing the great light that now spans the chasm between the seen and the unseen, all nature bids us to look up! and press forward!

"Yesterday, to-day and forever," are terms that express our lives. Cherishing the memories of victories achieved, and honors won, we drift from the yesterdays of life and cast anchor on the rock-bound shores of the land of to-day; where we toil in hope, until the sun's parting rays bring us a promise of the bright magic isle of to-morrow. Never receding, but always advancing, we look forward to the promise that Nature and all the powers of light give of Eternal life.

It is ours to work out on each to-day the problems of life and helpfulness to our brothers, ever striving to bring mankind into one vast spiritual Brotherhood; advancing step by step in love, and day by day increasing in knowledge as we approach the Divine.

Take these truths to your heart. Act your part in the great work of the present century. Man must be transformed from a striving, grasping, selfish being to a noble, generous brother. Do not wrap the mantle of Christianity about you and lie down to childhood's dreams. There is wisdom and beauty in childhood, but Nature has provided for growth. If you are in the prime of your life, and are overcoming doubt by force of will rather than by investigation and growth, and still are thinking as a child, you are wasting your life.

THE NEED OF THE AGE IN RELIGIOUS THOUGHT IS MEN. BROAD-MINDED, PROGRESSIVE, GREAT-HEARTED MEN.

Take your place. Act your part. Your independent thought will help to transform the race and move the world.

COLORS.

Are children born to live in light,
Whose beauty wakens with the sun?
Asleep when stars peep forth from night
In morn their drama is begun

In childhood's memory colors had Attractions savoring of heaven;
The greatest joys they made more glad,
Like from some Paradise been driven.

Dear children, scattered like ourselves,
All unbefitting, lose their caste,
But Science, master chemist, delves
Into the mysteries ignorance passed.

A search reflector sent from thought,
When blending, finds the soul's delight,
From living truth its ego caught,
On wings made pure from heavenly light.

It Seems Like a Fairy Tale.

An Old Battle in the Air Testified to Under Oath.

In January, 1643, was published "A Great Wonder in Heaven," a thin pamphlet republished as an appendix to Lord Nugent's Life of John Hampden.

Its statement was to the effect that on a Saturday in the by-past Christmas time, there occurred in Kenton in Northamptonshire, the apparition and noise of a battle in the air, a ghostly repetition of the conflict which two months before had taken place on the adjacent fields at Edgehill between the forces of the King and the Parliament.

It was between twelve and one in the morning that there was heard by some shepherds and other countrymen and travelers, first the sound of drums afar off, and the noise of soldiers, as it were, giving out their last groans; at which they were much amazed, and amazed stood still, till it seemed by the nearness of the noise to approach them; at which, too much affrighted, they sought to withdraw as fast as possibly they could; but then on a sudden, while they were in these cogitations, appeared in the air, the same incorporeal soldiers that made those clamors, and immediately with ensigns displayed, drums beating, muskets going off, cannons discharged, horses neighing, which also to these men were visible, the alarm or entrance to this game of death was struck up; one army, which gave the first charge having the king's colors, and the other, the Parliament's, in their head or front of the battles, and so pell-mell to it they went, the battle that appeared to be the king's forces seeming at first to have the best, but afterwards to be put into apparent rout. But till two or three in the morning in equal scale continued this dreadful fight, the clattering of arms, noise of cannons, cries of soldiers, so amazing and terrifying the poor men, that they could not believe they were mortal, or give credit to their ears and eyes. Run away they durst not, for fear of being made a prey to these infernal soldiers; and so they, with much fear and affright, stayed to behold the success of the business. * * * After some three hours' fight, that army which carried the king's colors withdrew, or rather appeared to fly; the other remaining, as it were, masters of the field, stayed a good space triumphing and expressing all the signs of joy and conquest, and then, with all their drums, trumpets, ordnance and soldiers, vanished. The poor men, glad they were gone, made with all haste to Kenton, and there knocking up Mr. Wood, a justice of the peace, who called up his neighbor, Mr. Marshall, the minister, they give them an account of the whole passage, and averred it upon their oaths to be true.

What follows is most remarkable of all. The gentlemen thus apprised of what had taken place, suspending their judgments till the next day about the same hour. They with the same men and all the substantial men of that and the neighboring parishes, drew thither, where about half an hour after their arrival, on Sunday, being Christmas night, appeared in the same tumultuous warlike manner the same two adverse armies, fighting with as much spite and spleen as formerly. The next night they appeared not, nor all the week. * * *

But on the ensuing Saturday night, in the same place and at the same hour, they were again seen, with far greater tumult, fighting in the same manner above mentioned for four hours, or very near, and then vanished, appearing again on Sunday night, and performing the same actions of histility and bloodshed. * * Successively the next Saturday and Sunday the same tumult and prodigious sights and actions were put in the state and condition they were formerly.

The rumor whereof coming to his Majesty (the king) at Oxford, he immediately dispatched thither Colonel Lewis Kirks, Captain Dudley, Captain Waithman and three other gentlemen of credit, to take full view and notice of the said business; who, first hearing the relation of Mr. Marshall and others, stayed there till Saturday night following, wherein they saw and heard the forementioned prodigies, and so on Sunday, distinctly knowing divers of the apparitions by their faces, as that of Sir Edmund Varney and others that were there slain (in the battle of Edgehill); of which upon oath they made testimony to his Majesty.

A DECIDED NEGATIVE

Shall Spiritualists Organize Secret Societies?

Shall we have secret societies organized to better teach the truths of Spiritualism?

The argument for this is an old one. Some of our advanced teachers from the rostrum at different times have said that Spiritualism was too far advanced for the masses; "Only the few could understand and advocate the cause."

The ancient Egyptians did not reveal their religious ceremonies to the public; only the priests that were carefully educated for the purpose were initiated into the secret work that consisted of many rites and ceremonies, and only gave out what they thought best to the people at large.

The Hebrews of the bible had their inner temple and the altar of the Holy of Holies, where only the high priest might enter and give out to his people what he thought best through the revelations that were given to him because he was careful to obey all the laws that were laid down to him in that holy place.

The Lamaists have their one Great High Priest, whose temple is situated upon a mountain top in Thibet, surrounded at the base by the dwellings of his many attending priests. This Great Lama is monsidered by his followers to be their God-vicegerentupon earth and the more ignorant of them look upon him as God himself, and worship him as such, believing that the Lama never dies. So shrouded in mystery, and so far away from the common people have they kept themselves that the real facts cannot be known.

The Fakir of India, goes away into the jungle and there in the silence and alone, he learns of the occult, hidden forces that are revealed to him because he is faithful to the cause. While the works from time to time are shown, the how and the wherefore are not told.

The Catholic church has its hidden and secret work that is kept from the common people.

The Theosophists have their outer and inner sections; the last of these is only for the initiated, and they must have an understanding of the occult forces that are around and about, but without research and experience they can not enter the inner sanctum.

All the way along throughout the various walks of life it has been given out to the common people to give, and to serve, to watch and to pray, that salvation might be theirs; but not to know of the hidden facts through it all that has been revealed to the elect, to those that have consecrated their lives to the work, and through this development they have enshrouded the people and the world in mystery, who dying, have left little that is consoling to the masses of the people that through this secrecy do not and cannot know what the truth really is. So all through the history of man, wrong, devastation, cruelty, superstition, unbelief and misbelief have been everywhere weighing all down with burdens that were brought about by fear of the terrible consequences that would be theirs if they did not blindly obey what was told them by these teachers that hid themselves behind rites and ceremonies of all kinds, some of which were very revolting in order to delude and mislead the ignorant uninformed masses that did not and could not know.

The cry always was, let me repeat it, serve, serve that you may live and have salvation, serve ignorantly and superstitiously or eternal damnation is your fate, imposed by a great God who only reveals to the few and lets the many be devastated.

Oh! the pity of it all! The trials, the suffering, the untimely death, the torture, ignorance, and the combination of all that history gives us and that is still with us.

And are we to still hide our light under a bushel and not place it on the hill-top when we can? Was it not our Elder Brother who has said: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature?"

There is but one answer to, shall we organize secret societies to teach Spiritualism? No! a thousand times, no!

In all the history that time has handed down to us, has there ever been the great improvements accomplished in the same length of time as within the past fifty-eight years? What has brought this about? The taking away of fear and ignorance that hinder priestcraft has surrounded us with, and allowing men and women to think for themselves.

We have found out that we have brains and a right to use them, and consequently the outcome.

Fear and ignorance being removed, the angel world, ever ready to help, is manifesting through every avenue that they have thought best to open, and the Truth from all sides is pouring in. It came first to little children who were not old enough to belong to a secret society, by the gentle little rap that meant, I wish to come in.

It has come by byways and hedgerows, in high places and low places, where it can reach all classes of people in all lands, and all nationalities. It has come to stay. Organize secret societies if you wish. Mediums, seers, prophets, call us what you may, will develop around you and shout to the outside world a higher Spiritualism, a greater wisdom philosophy than you will have with rites and ceremonies, and closed doors.

There is not and never will be a patent on Spiritualism; it is for the upliftment of humanity in general; it is for the betterment of all. Spirit bands educated to care for and teach earth's children are back of the movement. They will not let obstacles stand in the way. It is and shall be, "Thus saith the Spirit." They are in every household, silently working for the good of all. If means cannot be found in one way, it will be found in another, until there will be a complete "Fatherhood of God, and Brotherhood of Man."

EXPLAINS HIS POSITION.

The Noted Italian Alienist Tells How He Stands in Reference to Spiritualism—At Present He Doesn't Believe That Spirits From the Other World Communicate With Mortals.

"I know that I shall be asked by all whether I believe in Spiritualism or not," said Prof. Lombroso, whose conversion to that doctrine has aroused much comment, in an interview today. "I shall reply that I do believe in the manifestation of Spiritualistic phenomena. What has become of my materialistic theories? Such theories have nothing to do with my associations in Spiritualism, and even if there were a conflict there is no theory that I, as a searcher after truth, would not sacrifice in order to reach my life ideal.

"For fifteen years I have been repeating that I believe Spiritualistic manifestations to be undeniable facts and not contradicting the postulates of positive science. But I am far from identifying myself with those who believe that the souls of the departed are the authors of these manifestations. I repudiate any suggestion of supernatural agency.

"All Spiritualistic phenomena can be understood and explained without reference to the intervention of the supernatural. The Spiritualists affirm that the soul emanates from God. I affirm that the soul emanates from the brain. This is the whole thing in a nutshell. Mediums are merely abnormal persons whose brain conformation exhibits physical anomalies.

"I am a Spiritualist in the sense that I admit the existence of a mysterious force subject to scientific laws, which, as yet, are unknown, and by means of which are produced such phenomena as levitation, reading with closed eyes and thought transmission. What I do not admit is the spiritualistic theory of seeing in each manifestation the intervention of God's power."—Cable Dispatch to the Chicago Daily News.

Abstract of His Lecture Delivered Before the Worcester Association of Spiritualists, on "The Future in the Light of Spiritualism."

Throughout all ages man has questioned concerning a future life, ever seeking to penetrate the mystery of death—that mystery which has been called the twin brother of sleep. When we lie down on our bed at night the cares and perplexities of material life are laid aside; we close our eyes in sleep, and another world opens up to our view. But as we have not broken connection entirely with the material life, the scenes we visit, the forms and shapes we see, seem visionary, and in our waking hours come back to us like pictures in a dream. And yet some of the so-called dreams are so vivid, so beautiful, they leave their lasting impressions, and can never be forgotten.

This future life is of vital interest to us all, for every human soul must one day experience this change which men in their ignorance call Death.

Every religion that has been given to the world has tried to tell us something concerning the life beyond. They bid us hope, and have faith to believe in a future life, but the only religion that gives us knowledge of Immortality is Spiritualism.

Without this knowledge, this life at its best is imperfect, incomplete. Let us illustrate: We see a home where love and peace abide. We see father, mother and children living in harmony together, each working for the interest of all, and yet in their happiest moments, the thought of death, of separation that may come at any moment, and cast a shadow over all is ever uppermost in their minds, for this is a world of change.

But with this knowledge that we possess, how beautiful is life, for we know there can be no separation between souls who are united by love, here or hereafaer.

The greatest scientists of the world are stepping beyond the border line, in their investigation of illuminated matter, and radium, and entering the domain of spirit.

That future life is a world of progress, a natural world. In the years past and gone Theology taught us there were only two conditions in that world beyond—a life of eternal happiness and a life of endless misery. Theology taught us a mother could be happy in heaven looking down upon her son suffering endless torture in the depths of hell. I cannot conceive of such a mother. But these ideas are passing; only on rare occasions do we hear them presented at the present time.

The world out there is a brighter, better world than this, our earthly world. When we step out of these forms of clay we shall be clothed upon by a new body, more ethereal, more spiritual than the forms we wear today.

By the testimony of the dying, and by our friends returning who tell us of that life upon which they have entered, we know whereof we speak. They tell us of the beauty of that spirit life, a world of light and illuminations, and clairvoyants who have seen pictures of that other life alike, describe its brilliancy and wondrous beauty.

We know it to be a world of progress, and those of us who have been restricted in our development along certain lines by conditions and environments surrounding us, will find out there opportunities for growth and development.

I would say to the mother whose little one has passed to spirit life, do not mourn her as lost, she will have kind and tender care and she will be loved out there; she is infinitely better off than the orphans of earth, for while they may have good care, many of them are not loved, and love is necessary for their growth and development. And when you come to meet her and mark her growth and development in spirit life you will be glad she has escaped the trials and hardships of the material world.

You ask, do they have schools in spirit life? And I say to you, certainly, they have schools and institutions of learning, libraries, theatres and churches, and everything you have in material life, with the exception of factories where men and women toil from early morn until late at night—we do not need them here. Many of us in earth life who have not had the opportunity of attending the theatre as often as we desired, will find the opportunity out there without money and without price.

Do you suppose all the great teachers and reformers who have lived in the past have been idle through all the countless years since they entered spirit life? Ah! no! my friends, the spirit world is a life of activity. Do you think a Shakespeare, who could so truthfully portray human life and human passion would sit with folded hands? No; he is still working, still creating greater plays than he ever dreamed of while dwelling in the material life. And the great musicians who have dwelt among us, who have given to the world their wonderful compositions are not idle, but are still composing more beautiful sonatas in the higher life.

Although I have not been able to express music in the earth life, I do not believe God would create such an intense love of music in any human soul without the possibility of sometime, somewhere, being able to express it.

And what of the great inventors that have been given to the world? Many of our greatest inventors tell us after they have worked for some time to complete an invention and are unable to do so, it comes to them in a dream; everything has been made clear, and on the morrow the invention is complete.

The future life, in the light of Spiritualism, will be a life of growth and progress; we shall be the same individuals when we enter the other life, the same personalities there as here, with the same likes and dislikes, the same ideas, thoughts and aspirations we entertained while dwelling in the material.

We know we are responsible for every act of our lives; we know we must be our own saviors. In the light of this knowledge it behooves us to so live that when the summons comes we may be ready to enter a life of eternal progress, where the wondrous possibilities of the human soul shall sometime, somewhere be realized by every child of earth.

Lake Helen Camp, Florida.

The first words of the season concerning the Southern Cassadaga Camp are as full of promise, hope and cheer as the gentle zephyrs that blow across the Florida lakes and over her uplands, sighing through the pines, are filled with the fragrant perfume of many flowers.

Nearly all the cottages are opened. Many are here enjoying the balmy breezes and attractions peculiarly Floridian.

The first symposium of the season was held on Sunday, Nov. 11, an earlier date than ever before, with an attendance of over fifty, and many on the grounds were not present.

The exercises were very interesting—singing, remarks by the chairman, the venerable E. W. Bond, of Willoughby, Ohio, who very feelingly alluded to his son Frank, a resident of DeLand, Fla., who had such a vital interest in the success of Southern Cassadaga. Then an invocation by Mrs. Wheeler and a few remarks from her spirit guide; a few words from Mrs. Stumpf, formerly of Brooklyn, when she, under spirit influence gave very comforting messages to many present.

A committee on music was chosen, and a meeting appointed for next Sunday, and all felt that the bud of promise of the coming camp would open into the full blown flower of psychic hope to all who may come.

Never in the history of the camp have there been so many people present so early in the season and all who intend coming had better make arrangements as to rooms early as possible, all omens point to a larger attendance than ever.

NOW IS YOUR TIME—

PRICE REDUCED.

In order to place that valuable book, "MYSTERIES OF THE SEANCE," (written by a life-long Spiritualist) in the hands of as many Spiritualists and investigators as possible this winter, I have decided to CUT THE PRICE IN TWO, and will, until the supply on hand is exhausted, mail it to any address for 12 cents per copy—less than half the former price. This book gives all the methods employed by fake mediums in producing bogus manifestations in all the different phases, and instructs the reader how to detect and expose the fraud. A silver dime and red stamp brings you the book, prepaid, by return mail. Get it and avoid being fooled. Address, ED LUNT, Roxbury, Mass.

INDIVIDUALITY THE LOGICAL RESULT.

Lecture Delivered Before the World's New Thought Federation, Chicago, Oct. 25, 1906, by Dr. Alexander J. McIvor-Tyndall, of London, Eng.

The assignment to me of this subject, "Individuality," is an evidence—a proof—of the truth of the New Thought principles that we "attract to ourselves tnat which we most desire.

I think that Individualism is my "hobby." I have heard it said that I am a crank on the subject, and perhaps I am, but it seems to me that upon this—the awakening of the individual consciousness—the individual responsibility, rests the success or the failure of the New Thought message.

The world is filled with systems, cults, creeds and methods of reform. Enough surely to bring peace upon earth if it could be accomplished that way.

Politically the principles of Socialism cannot fail to appeal to our common sense, our ideas of justice and equality and brotherly love. Politically it looks as though Socialism were designed to solve all the difficulties with which we have to deal.

And so it would but for one thing. That thing is individuality.

If human beings could be lumped together and driven like sheep wherever the herder wished to lead them, any of the methods employed in the past, at various stages of the worlds history would have won out.

Our dear old mother Orthodoxy formulated an excellent device to lead the mob consciousness into the shelter of the fold.

So excellent were her plans that they have been copied ever since by those who would emulate her and so "save" the race upon the "kill two birds with one stone" plan.

But this subtle, unconquerable thing called Individuality has from time to time asserted itself, and some of the sheep have refused to be driven to shelter without investigating the manner of their "sheltering" and knowing something of the character of the "fold" into which they were being driven. (I suppose they had a "hunch," as they say out in Colorado, that the "fold" might be built after the plan of the Chicago packing establishments, and they preferred not to take any chances.)

At any rate there have been individuals who have stepped aside on the march, and they have reported the advantages of freedom from the devices of those who would lead us.

They have even dared to say that the very penalties attached to the privilege of freedom are to be welcomed and even embraced.

And so there has grown up in this era of the world, a cort of new species of human—the Individual.

The individual can never be labeled. He wears no dog collar. Like all newly-discovered species, he can't be classified, because he realizes that what he knows to-day is but a step toward what he may know to-morrow.

Doubtless many of you, like myself, have often heard the criticism on New Thought philosophy, something like this: "But Dr. McIvor-Tyndall, if we think so much about ourselves and our own development, what will become of the rest of the world? Isn't it selfish to put in all our time upon ourselves and own affairs?"

I believe that this is what is the whole trouble with the world to-day. We have all thought we must attend to some one else's affairs.

Universal Individuality means that each of us must attend strictly to our own business (so you can see how far away we are from universal individuality.)

It is because of this ancient and long accustomed idea of leaders of special revelation and divine appointment that we find some even among those who advocate New Thought ideas, the desire to establish orders, found colonies or in some way get off in a corner by themselves and be led into the fold again by another route.

If we are going to be "put" here and there to "stay put" like inanimate things, we can't do better than to stick to the orthodox methods. If New Thought were to result in the establishment of various methods of salvation with churches and leaders, I would say that it has no excuse for being. But I think I can safely predict that such an outcome is not possible.

Each day finds us nearer the ultimate of Individuality—the logical and legitimate outcome of the New Thought teachings.

The enlargement of the individual consciousness precludes the possibility of sheep-like submission to the dogmatic rule of outward suggestions.

Once we have come into consciousness of the ego, the "I," the separate individual within the physical covering called the body, that moment we assert the "I" and take the consequences—the penalties if there be penalties.

And there generally are seeming penalties because we know that for present at least there are advantages in labels.

Those of you who came here from various parts of the country know that had you belonged to a certain religious denomination you could have obtained half-rate tickets. If you came as an individual you had to pay full fare. Like all good things there is a tax upon being one of these newly evolved species—an individual.

A woman came up to me after one of my lectures in Los Angeles last winter and said: "Well, I always wondered what you called yourself (you see I had tried not to be labeled). Now, I know," she said, "you are one of those new-fangled God Almightys."

I suppose she thought that would show me the error of my ways, but I only thanked her and told her I was glad she had recognized me.

If one has to be labeled we can't do better than to be called "God Almighty." It sounds inclusive.

But, you may ask, "Are we not individuals anyway? I know that I am myself; that I am different from those with whom I come in contact. My hair is black instead of red, and my eyes are dark instead of blue, and thank Goodness, I don't do what So-and-So does."

You know there are lots of people who think that this is Individuality. But there is a wide distinction between personality and individuality. Personality is the sum total of externals. Individuality is the conscious use of Universal Power, and it is not dependent in any sense upon personal appearance and environment.

Individuality does not mean fame or distinction or wealth, and yet it is the highest attainment so far reached upon this plane.

It is the A B C of New Thought, that fame and honor and position—externals are nothings—less than baubles that break in our hands when we grasp them.

These things form part of the personality. They have nothing to do with the individual.

Individuality is recognized by the conscious use of power. By our conscious grasp upon the Almighty. (So you see that the term "God Almighty" as applied to the individual is as good as any.)

It is only when we recognize our unity with the ALL-POWER that we dare to stand alone.

It is because we have not recognized this grasp upon the Infinite that we have in the past leaned upon forms and ceremonies and personality. We have been unconscious of the unlimited power and satisfaction that comes to those who dare to assert the divinity of the "I" consciousness. We have been like a king seeking alms at his own palace gate under the delusion that he is a beggar.

The moment that we assert the right and the Omnipotence of the individual soul, that moment we have begun to claim our own. We have awakened from the hypnotic delusion that we are beggars and we know that we are kings—rulers of our own destiny, master of our own environment.

We know that we are our own savior, our own judge, our own magnet of attraction, and that we need not beg or cringe or whine at the foot of the Infinite. We are heirs to all that life can give, and the supply is not niggardly.

We comprehend as in a flash of illumination what is meant by the old teaching that we are "free-will agents" and yet subject to the "law of God."

And this recognition but serves to make us conscious of our oneness with all life, instead of impressing us with the sense of aloneness or isolation which the unawakened soul dreads and suffers.

Instead of feeling as before we have felt that we alone have been singled out from the rest of mankind to bear a heavy burden as a punishment for past sins ignorantly committed, we know that each unpleasant experience is merely a lesson that shows us whither we are tending. It is the blank wall that reminds us that there is "no thoroughfare" the way we are traveling.

I claim tthat nine-tenths of the world's population are asleep. The higher consciousness is drugged by the glamour of the senses. These people are individuals—that is they have within themselves the right and the power by which they may lay hold of the realization of Almightiness, but they have not established their positive relation to this power. They are negative individuals.

They are in the position of the beggar who is heir to a throne, but does not know it.

You probably have heard it said that New Thought people are conceited. I know I have. I was lecturing one time in Butte, Montana (I don't know whether I ought to tell here what Mark Twain said about Butte, but perhaps it might serve as a warning to some of you should you ever be tempted to go there.)

Anyway, Mark Twain said: "If I owned only Butte and Hell, and had to choose between them, I would rent Butte."

As I was saying, I was talking one time in H—, I mean Butte, and I tried to make clear to my audience the difference between the personality and the "I" consciousness. I spoke of the power and strength of the "I." At the close of the meeting a friend told me that the lady who sat next to her was perfectly disgusted with me. She said she never heard so conceited a person in all her life. "Why," she said, "he talked about 'I,' 'I,' 'I,' all the time as though there were no one else in the world."

What I want to make clear is the fact that this grasp upon individuality is not in any degree comparable with the self-satisfied person who attaches undue importance to his personality his wealth, his social or business position—to externals.

It is only by recognizing your integral importance that you can be of service to another, because real service consists in pointing out to another the truth that he or she is a factor in life. That he must uncover his own soul, assert his own ego.

Which means that he must claim his own salvation without dependence upon anything, but the power that is accessible to all.

The moment you begin to live another's life, or say what another should do, that moment you are "off the track" and inharmony is the result. No one can, by any possibility, avoid obstacles, or live harmoniously if he encroach by so much as a thought, upon the domain of another. This is one of the very first lessons for the candidate for illumination: To let each person about you live his own life in his own way.

The moment we say "If I were you I would do thus and so," that moment we have sown the seeds of inharmony, because we are usurping another's place and another's use of power.

This mental attitude of attending strictly to our own business as it were, does not involve the necessity for "aloofness" or the "holier than thou" feeling of the Pharisee. It is the attitude that comes from the knowledge that if you could fill another's place there would be no other place to fill. There would be only oneself.

The more we recognize our own distinct place and purpose, the more we respect that of another. The person who seeks to express his individuality does so without encroaching upon the domain of another by so much as a thought. The missionary habit is pernicious and is not possible to an awakened soul. The person who has attained the goal of individual soul awakening radiates help and happiness, just as the sun radiates warmth, because it is his nature to do so, and not from any desire to have his kindly offices returned, nor to spread any favorite method of "salvation."

The New Thought student in time becomes the occult initiate, and this means the realization that, although we are one and interdependent yet we must each be a law unto ourselves.

We must stand alone, independent and yet recognizing our unity with all life.

We must be absolutely our own way and truth and light, because nothing that the external can offer, neither method, nor form nor ceremony devised by man, can alone promise freedom to the enslaved and slumbering consciousness.

I would say to those who are seeking light: Despise not experience. Do not seek to avoid what the world calls "temptation."

Seek light. Demand freedom. Grasp power, and let your individual will lead you, willingly taking the consequences of your choice.

One who does this, will in time find himself upon the heights—triumphant.

SIX HISTORIC AMERICANS.

A Book That Every American Freethinker Will Delight to Own.

By John E. Remsburg.

The work consists of two parts, "The Fathers of Our Republic," and "The Saviors of Our Republic." In regard to Paine's religious views, Mr. Remsburg establishes the negative of the following (1) Was Paine an Atheist? (2) Was he a Christian? (3) Did he recant? Page after page of the most radical freethought sentiments are culled from the correspondence and other writings of Franklin and Jefferson, which show that these men were as pronounced in the rejection of Christianity as Paine and Ingersoll. That Washington was not a Christian nor a believer in Christianity. In support of Lincoln's infidelity he has collected the testimony of more than one hundred witnesses.

The book is handsomely bound in cloth, giving fine portraits of George Washington, Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Paine, Thomas Jefferson, Abraham Lincoln and U. S. Grant; also portrait of the author.

This book contains 365 pages, printed on heavy paper, well bound in cloth. Price, $1.25. For sale at this office.

The Progressive Thinker.

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 35 CHICAGO, ILL., DECEMBER 1, 1906. NO. 868

Letter From an Old-time Worker, Now In England.

To the readers of "The Progressive Thinker:

I have often thought I might interest some of my old friends and acquaintances scattered up and down the Middle West, by writing a few lines occasionally from this side the great Atlantic. It has been a long time since anything from my pen has appeared in the columns of The Progressive Thinker; although at one time I was a frequent contributor. Times have changed, however, with me, and from being an itinerant lecturer, traveling up and down the country working for the cause of truth, as I believe (for the devil, as my orthodox friends believed), I am now rather an active business man, with my time pretty well filled in various ways, so that my time for writing letters to newspapers is very limited, but my mind often wanders back over the field I formerly traveled, and I remember many pleasant days spent among friends in the states.

One of my last trips in the interest of our philosophy was through Northern Minnesota, and I often think of friends I made in the lovely park region, as it is called. One of the pleasant remembrances I have of that trip was a few weeks spent at Wheaton, a little out of the Park region, it is true, but where at that time a good strong interest in our philosophy prevailed. I am somewhat afraid, however, that many of the best workers have left that point, an outbreak of Canadian emigration fever having broken out among them.

Two earnest workers, O. F. Brown and his esteemed wife, moved away to Washington soon after my visit to try their fortunes in that far off Western region. I hope they have prospered, for they well deserved success. They were of the right stamp of Spiritualists.

Many others I remember, though some of the names I do not readily call to mind.

Eagle Bend, Alexandria, and some other points I visited, and I trust there is still a good interest in that section.

One thing made a vivid impression on my mind while traveling in Northern and Central Minnesota, and that was the preponderance of the German Catholic element. It was my ambition to get in as many lectures in that region as possible, for I thought I saw a great need. In small towns I noticed very large churches with two spires or towers instead of one, buildings which must have cost a large sum of money, and must have been a great burden on the farming communities which constituted the principal part of the population. Fat, clean-shaven and well dressed priests were plentiful on the trains, and these, too, must have taken a good proportion of the fruits of industry to support them. I contrasted their condition with my own at the time. While every town had a large Catholic church, Spiritualist societies (much less Spiritualist churches) were few and very far between. At every small town the priests could gather a good congregation and be assured a hearty welcome; the Spiritualist worker had to make long journeys and take mighty slim chances sometimes when he did stop.

Wheaton, with its own church and active society, was like an oasis in the desert of Sahara. I hope it is still doing a good work, and I should very much like to hear from any of the friends I became acquainted with there.

To all my friends and fellow workers in Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska, Iowa, Minnesota, Illinois and Indiana, I would say, that although I am out of the public work at present, so far as giving lectures on the Spiritualist rostrum is concerned, my sympathies and best wishes are with all those who are in anyway helping to crush out priestcraft, and make better conditions for the poor, spiritually or otherwise; to rid the world of the war spirit; to build up a better system of government in all countries; to help humanity onward and upward to better and brighter conditions.

I look to the new liberal government of England to help wipe out the evils of a state church, and to the new Education Act which will soon be passed by the English Parliament to do still more for England's people.

Morris Pratt Institute.

It becomes a duty as well as a pleasure to the secretary to acknowledge her deep and heartfelt gratitude to the friends who have so generously and thoughtfully aided the school, both in money and in that which represents money. We feel that they have a right to hear an occasional report through the courtesy of our Spiritualist papers for what purpose their contributions are used. First I wish to assure the patrons of the school that every dollar sent to the Institute is used to defray its expenses, and that every department is managed with the strictest economy. Nothing is wasted or unwisely appropriated. With one exception we have no salaried officers or teachers. The work mainly is done by those who are so situated that they give their time and talents for the good of the cause which they love. The Institute is not endowed, and is therefore dependent in a manner upon the generosity of its friends. There are many expenses aside from those daily incurred in common household necessities.

The building was a gift, and is valuable which necessitates carrying a heavy insurance. There are occasional repairs outside and inside. The plumbing is not immune from expense. The printing of catalogues and advertising matter is a yearly requisite, which with many other incidentals, in the aggregate amounts to quite a sum.

Located so far inland away from any water outlet, we are obliged to pay a high price for coal, which makes our heating expensive.

But we are optimistic for the future of the school and are working to make it possible in the near future for it to become self-sustaining. Will the friends of education and all Spiritualists who are desirous of sustaining a school where students can be educated and developed along the lines which will best prepare them to go out as workers in the great field of progress and reform, which appears more and more an essential need as the years come and go, will these friends rally to its support?

Any information relating to the school, and its management will be cheerfully answered.

We intend to publish as often as necessary the names of all contributions have been received and are appreciated.

The following is a list of contributions received since the secretary office came into my hands:

August—Wonewoc Camp, through Moses Hull, net $9.80.

Clinton Camp, through Moses Hull, net $12.56.

Julia S. Carroll, $5.

E. O. Bogardus, $5.

Harriett Duell, Elmira, N. Y., $2.

Mrs. G. F. McLead, Chicago, $1.

Mrs. Alice Phillips and Mrs. R. M. Hunton, Hot Springs, Ark., $9.

Dr. C. W. Burrows, Detroit, Mich., $10.

Mrs. Wallace, $1.

A Friend, $1.

Mrs. Pemberton, Peoria, Ill., $1

Mrs. Emma C. Bergman, $1.

Mrs. J. S. Whitwell, $1.

Mrs. Hugh Colom, Chicago, $1.

Mrs. Emma R. Abbott, $25.

Mrs. Mattie E. Hull, oak mantel bedstead, with mattress and pillows, a large amount of fruits, vegetables and canned fruits.

Mrs. Mills, Albany, Wis., gave a very beautiful silk quilt from which we hope to realize many dollars; also pillow-slips and towels.

Mrs. H. M. Ryerson, Seattle, Wash., nice oak set and furnishings for one large room.

Mrs. Clarissa Mullins, Chicago, pillow-slips, sheets and towels.

Mrs. Chas. Martin, Whitewater, Wis., a lovely silk quilt, a pair of pillows, over 40 jars of canned fruits.

Mrs. M. J. Donaldson, Brookfield, one long linen table-cloth.

Mrs. Loebel, Milwaukee, cans of jam.

Mrs. E. W. Sprague, Detroit, Mich., a web of sheeting containing 55 yards, made into sheets and pillow-slips.

MOST EXCELLENT TESTS.

For the Good of the Cause, and Wonderfully Convincing.

By long experience we know spirits can come back and converse with us by giving them the proper conditions—a channel by which they can reach us. You cannot get a communication by telegraph unless you have an operator to receive it, one who is properly a medium, for all middle-men, such as interpreters and postmasters, and even mail carriers who receive from one and give to another, are mediums, and if they do not give just what they get (when it is for another), they are frauds. If they do give you just what they get, and no more, they are genuine, and worthy of their position.

I have received many tests that knock out the mind-reading theory. I have a nephew who is a telegraph operator, and somewhat skeptical on this subject, and like many others, he wanted some advice from the other side, but he believed the medium to be a good mind-reader, so he wanted me to take ten questions to him, sealed and marked so that he would know if they had been opened. I was not to know one word that was in them, saying to me, "The medium can't read your mind if you don't know what is in them, and I know he can't read mine while I am in my office a mile away."

I took the questions in a sealed envelope. We sat down at a table facing each other, in a light room with a bay window. We had to wait a few minutes for his control to come. Presently he said, "Lay your questions on the table. The control is here." He took up pencil and commenced to write from right to left, the letters leaning to the left, making it very hard to read unless you hold it in front of a mirror, and read in the mirror. His hand seems to be under perfect control of the spirits. He converses on any subject while writing, and did with me in this case. When about half-done, he asked me if I knew Fred Bickford.

"No. That is a new name to me."

Then he said, "My control tells me that your nephew (Charley) has asked Fred Bickford a question in telegraphic characters, using dots and dashes, and asked him to answer in the same way, and he will, but we will have to do the others first, as we will have to make the dots and dashes read from left to right, or Charley cannot read it."

Then I said, "Do you understand telegraphy?"

"No."

Nor did I.

As he commenced on the dots and dashes I happened to think I did know one letter, the letter S, the call of our railroad station in Iowa.

"Yes, Fred is just making S in one of the words, and said it is three dots, which was correct. When he finished he signed his name in both telegraphy and writing.

The questions that C. asked were answered, and the predictions have since come true. My nephew acknowledged that every question was answered, with names signed in full.

Now if Fred Bickford and others who signed their names were not at the other end of the line, will some skeptic who has got good common sense, please tell me who did the answering?

If I could believe the fish story, the whale and Jonah, or if I could believe the sun, moon and stars were made on the third day, as there could not have been any day before the sun was made, as it makes the day, then I might believe the skeptic's explanation if it did differ from what I have written here about these wonderful tests.

I have always been cautious about fraud, and know it is ofttimes practiced in Spiritualism. It is practiced also in the church, for I have attended church fifty years. I am sorry that it is so in both. If I had lived 150 years ago, and had written a letter like this, I would have been burned at the stake just like every medium of that day was who made any public demonstration.

Always address your question to some departed spirit, and give their full name, so that the guide or control can find them. Always sign your own name to your question so that they may know who it is from.

Always be cautious about fraud and when you are certain you have found it, be ready and willing to expose it, just as the good editor of this paper always does.

I have been a reader of The Progressive Thinker for many years. I am always pleased to read its newsy pages.

Now, with a hearty wish for the prosperity of yourself, your paper, the cause of truth and Spiritualism, I am still at the home of the president of the Spiritual Temple League, 50 M street N. W., Washington, D. C.

Remarkable Manifestations.

Through the Mediumship of Oren Dunakin—A Letter Describing the Tests of Spirit Presence Given.

Chanute, Kansas, September 17, 1906.

Dear Mr. Rockwell:—This letter is going to be all about Spiritualism, and I am writing to you because I am sure of an appreciative hearer. I feel that I must tell you about my experiences because you are the one who has persistently urged me to investigate.

You know I told you I believed my daughter had mediumistic powers, and I have felt for nearly a year now that I simply must know whether spirits do make themselves evident, and must know it by personal experience, yet when I went to clairvoyants for private readings, I got nothing definite. Last month, being here in Kansas, and learning that a Spiritualistic camp-meeting was to be held at Ottawa, I went up there for two days in August, but while I saw some wonderful things happen to others, nothing came to me; but while there I met a medium—a Mr. Oren Dunakin of Chanute, and after he had returned home here I became pretty well acquainted with him and his wife, and they have held several circles for my especial conversion.

This man I believe is a high-class medium—at any rate they are a high-class family morally. I know this, for I have come to know them quite well. Mr. Dunakin is a brother of that Mr. Dunakin whom I see mentioned as an officer in the Ohio Spiritualists Association, and it seems he has had mediumistic powers from boyhood.

I need not recount all the spirit people who came to others. I had never sat in a circle before, and every circumstance was wonderful to me, but at the first meeting my husband came, and with a good deal of difficulty announced his name, "George," and then told me he did not want to "pass over" when he did—especially as it left me in such financial embarrassment.

Now, not a soul in the room knew my husband's name, nor that I had been financially embarrassed.

This was done through a trumpet, and there was a cabinet.

When he had finished talking he patted me several times around the head and cheeks, kissed my hair twice (I felt the pressure and heard the sounds), and said good night, and went away.

The second night he came again, and with stronger voice. That night also the trumpet came and tapped my head and a voice said, "Mother"; then, "I'm so glad to be here"; then "Good night" (hurriedly), and the trumpet fell almost to the table, but was caught up by one of the other spirits who explained that she was too weak to hold it. She, too, kissed me before going away. I heard it but could not feel it.

Of course, through both these evenings there were innumerable pats and caresses. The first evening they had not the feeling of human hands, but felt more like strokes from blotting paper or something else lifeless, but of pleasant surface; but the second evening they had the feeling of warm, comfortable, velvety human hands, patting and petting around my hair and face and neck and shoulders.

That second evening we had a light seance also. The room was nearly as light as in usual in the evening. There were the medium, his wife, his little girl and myself.

The cabinet was simply a dark curtain across the corner. I really wish you were here to sit with this medium. You see the medium and I sat before the cabinet and facing the middle of the room. His wife and child sat over on the other side of the room, facing the middle of the room. So I could account for every living pair of hands in the room, yet a fifth, left hand was pushed out between the two curtains and waved at me several times. I took from it a flower that Mrs. Dunakin had placed behind the curtain, but when I attempted to take also one that was held out to the medium, the hand tossed the flower to the medium and dealt me a back-handed slap in the face. And it felt, too! And it was my husband's hand in shape though a little larger in size. What do you think of that!

I am saying nothing about the guitar that lifted itself off a chair and went floating around through the air, playing as it went, and occasionally coming down and resting gently on our heads or shoulders or hands.

Nor am I mentioning other characters who came and talked with others present.

Next time I helped get the cabinet and things ready. This time the trumpet and guitar were not used. Different spirits made the medium personate them. Suddenly I felt something near me, and said to the others, "I know there's some one close to me," and a voice not a foot away from my head at once whispered plainly, "George." I said, "If it is you, George, touch me," and instantly was patted on the arm.

This came out of the air with no trumpet or other aid. Later another spirit through the medium gave his name as "Charley" (the name of an uncle of mine who committed suicide in 1883). I asked him to touch me if it was my Uncle Charley, and immediately felt a pat on the arm. A little schoolmate did the same.

At one of these meetings, Mr. Dunakin got up unconsciously and after walking around the room restlessly, came before me and acted my husband's sufferings in his last sickness, and took my hands and pressed them on his body over the various organs that had been affected, and even said the word "Bright's."

Of course at each coming of my husband I asked if he had seen my daughter lately (she is still living), and if she was all right; he always told me he had seen her that day and she was "all right," emphatically.

At the last meeting it seemed as if almost every person came I had ever known who had died. By the way, I must go back and say that at next to the last meeting there came a dear old lady whom I took to be a certain friend of mine as she gave her name as "Nancy." She complained that she could hardly close her mouth and some of those present thought she might have died of some disease of the throat or jaw. I was not aware that she had died at all, not having heard of her for about ten years. I said to the company present, "I'm going to write to-morrow, if possible, and find whether she has passed away."

Well, at the last meeting (last night), a spirit who is often present—an Irishman—said, "Say, Mrs., did you write that letter?" I told him I had not yet done so but would. He said, "Oh, it's all right; I just thought I'd remind you of it." I said, "Jerry, I'll do it before I sleep," but he said, "Oh, no, sleep first."

This same spirit Jerry at another time when something specially convincing had been done, turned to me and said abruptly in his Irish brogue, "Well, what d'yer think of us now—are we frauds?"

At another time when I complained that a certain voice didn't sound natural, a boy spirit, Johnny, snapped out, "Say, how'd you expect a voice to sound natural through a tin horn?"

At last night's seance, as I said, pretty near everybody I knew came. My mother, announcing herself by her maiden name, "Fannie F—h". Certainly no one in Kansas knew my mother's maiden name. And there was no uncertainty or slowness or indistinctness of utterance. My little brother came and announced himself as "Sammie." I said, "Why, Sammie, I remember you as a little boy four years old." "Yes, you wouldn't know me now; I'm nearly forty." "You've changed, I suppose?" "Yes, you know I passed over thirty—no, thirty-two years ago." He had died in 1872, really, 34 years ago.

A darling old Scotch woman that I knew when she was eighty, who used formerly to work in my grandfather's family, came and gave her name as "Nancy" and when I failed to recognize her by that, she began to croon an old Scotch tune in her dear trembly old voice, and I knew her instantly.

This uncle who had committed suicide, came again and gave his name. This time it was in a good strong voice, "Charles F—h." I had not told the circle, of course, about his suicide and did not intend to, so I said, "Uncle Charley, I want you to tell me the real reason why you went away when you did," and then he told me the whole story, winding up with "and I thought I could end it all, but I made a great mistake."

A former schoolmate of mine, whom I have not seen since 1876, came. I told her I didn't know she had died, and she said, "I passed away about a year ago." (I have written North to-day to find out about it). Just at the last my splendid old grandfather came—my mother's father—one of the staunchest old men the Lord ever made. He just came and gave his name, "Henry F—h," but I know he'll come again.

It was from him that all Spiritualistic tendencies in us as a family came. It was he who took the Banner of Light at a time when it took nerve to do so. And so it was the first paper aside from the "Maine Farmer" associated with my childish recollections. He had courage, fidelity and sense of right, and magnanimity enough to endow a state. I was his favorite grandchild.

FAITH BASIS OF ALL ESOTERICS.

The Rev. Van Ness Talks of Ancients With Psychic Powers.

"Ancient records are so filled with accounts of seership, power over sickness, second sight and the ability to flash thought telepathically over long distances, that unless we want to disbelieve all history and put Hebrew, Hindoo and all classic records on a par with fairy tales, we must believe that many long forgotten men and women had really an instinctive spiritual perception and were enjoying the possession of psychic powers, which even now seem well night marvelous," said the Rev. Thomas Van Ness, at the Second Church, Copley Square, yesterday morning.

Continuing, he said in part: "Hypnotizers, Spiritualists, Christian Scientists, mental healers, prophets of the New Thought, Babists, crystal gazers, Esoteric Buddhists, Theosophists, call them what you will, think of them as you please, are all people who, more or less, come to an appreheision of the fact that there is something beneath the something that is the only true belief. "At times their efforts to come into communion with the spiritual are so bungling, so crude, so extravagant as to make the Judics grieve, yet for that reason we ought not to lose sight of the fact that the quest upon which they have entered is a right quest.

"In examining any one of these modern movements we see that it is founded essentially upon the same basis, the same principle that formed the heart of the ancient esoteric systems.

"That principle was faith.

"It is impossible to achieve anything substantial except as an act of faith.

"The discovery of Columbus was made possibly because of his unbounded faith; the cable enterprise of Cyrus Field came into use because he had faith.

"Faith is of the soul. It is the soul

LYCEUM EDUCATION.

A Paper Read Before the Fourteenth Annual Convention of the N. S. A.

Greetings:—We come with a few thoughts from the golden West, where the waters of the Pacific Ocean embrace the land of sunshine.

To us has been given the knowledge of spirit return. Being a new country just in the budding, so to speak, our form of work among the children, is also in a budding state. As in our balmy climate all vegetation grows and matures quickly and luxuriantly, so the minds of the young unfold very quickly; and rapidly are they grasping the truths of Spiritualism. We find also that as the lands of California are arid and lack the fertilizing waters, so our broad spiritual field needs seriously enthusiastic truth-giving teachers. We need teachers who are not only able to instruct the minds of adults in the principles of Spiritualism, but those who recognize the importance of unfolding the minds of youth. The children, like buds, will be the flowers, and in their education lies the hope for the desirable fruition of our beloved cause.

Each teacher or lecturer going into the field should be familiar with lyceum work and able to organize and sustain an active lyceum. Each society should maintain its lyceum, if only a few are gathered. The lecturer and society should labor together to keep the children and young people interested. They work together. If you keep the children interested you will secure the attention of the parents, for they will follow the children to encourage and assist them. The usual struggles of societies will be greatly relieved when proper attention is given to proper education, as furnished by the lyceum system, is furnished the children. We must give attention to the young as well as the old. When the entire family is recognized full success is assured.

Would that each missionary and organiser were equipped by the National or state association which he repre- educational purposes, and stay with the new officers and leaders until they have ideas of how to conduct the work successfully. In this way you appeal to the parents through the child. You are interesting the parent in the society. The parent is interested in bringing the child and seeing the joy beaming in its eyes, a greater activity is secured. The two must go hand in hand. As the parent leads the child, so the child brings new joy to the parent. A more perfect organization and a spiritual Spiritualism is to be had by educating the child and by holding the attention of the parent through the child. Families will not be divided on Spiritualistic issues, and harmony will prevail in societies as the influence of the lyceum work gains hold. We will receive the blessings of the parent and the angel world.

NOTICE TO SPIRITUALISTS EVERYWHERE.

The Temple Fund Society asks for members at one dollar per annum. Also desires speakers, mediums and societies to secure funds for the purposes of this society. All such donation of money will be used for aid to local societies of Spiritualists in temple building. This fund is sure to grow. We are getting members from all sections. The outlook for success is very promising. The time has come for Spiritualists to show their zeal. We have faith that they will. Your donations will find proper use for practical benefit of our cause. You are urged to be an agent of this society and its fund in your locality. You can do much if you will try! Shall the cause of mortals and spirits have your co-operation? The Temple Fund Society is already an active and aggressive body of earnest Spiritualists. Will you be known as one of them?

Address either George W. Kates, President, Cheyney, Pa., or,

Yours fraternally,

SARAH A. DANRIH E. MONG.

UNPLEASANT MEMORIES.

In Order to Spiritualize Your Nature, Form Within Yourself a Nest of Pleasant Thoughts.—"None of us yet know, for none of us have been taught in early youth, what fairy palaces we may build of beautiful thought, proof against all adversity—bright fancies, satisfied memories, noble histories, faithful sayings, treasure houses of precious and restful thoughts which care can not disturb nor pain make gloomy nor poverty take away from us—houses built without hands for our souls to live in."

Shakspeare, who is sometimes called "the myriad minded," seems to have observed and referred to if not described in his plays every single virtue, vice, foible and peculiarity of human nature. One of these relates to the operations of the mind when in a state of idleness or brooding.

It is well known to physiologists that the body exhibits both voluntary and involuntary muscular action and that involuntary action is most active when voluntary action is reduced or suspended, as in sleep. It is a singular thing that there is something analogous to this in the mind and that as soon as it ceases to exert itself under the control of the will it begins another kind of activity of its own, which is always of a disagreeable character. This singular mental phenomenon has not escaped Shakspeare.

In "Macbeth" he makes Banquo say:

Merciful powers,
Restrain in me the cursed thoughts that nature
Gives way to in repose.

What these "cursed thoughts" were the poet does not say. They may have bee a sort of premonition of Banquo's fate, for immediately after uttering these words he was assassinated, or they may have been ruminations on the recent battle scenes through which he had passed and the prophecies of the weird sisters to which he had recently listened, or they may have been all of these put together. The point is that they were "cursed thoughts," that they were natural and that they were inflicted on him "in repose."

Banquo had led a troubled existence and was placed in a critical position, but it was not when fencing in an engagement nor when facing Macbeth that his thoughts were torturing. It was when he dropped all these objective concerns and lapsed into meditation that his thoughts were "cursed." The question is whether he was not, after all, like everybody else, and whether every human being, whether happily situated or not, does not as soon as he is "in repose" have "cursed thoughts."

This is certainly the testimony of a great many thinking people. As soon as they stop work, forsake company, conversation and reading and take a solitary walk, for instance, all the unpleasant memories of life form themselves into a procession and pass in solid column through his mind. In this procession are all his failures, all his humiliations, all his wrongs, all his misfortunes and especially all of his sins and follies. On such occasions if he ever did or said a creditable or decent thing it is forgotten. Look which way he will, backward, forward or sideways it is the unpleasant memories that assail him, and every object on which his eyes rest reminds him of some of them.

The man who has such thoughts may be a really good man, his position in life and society may be enviable and he may possess youth, good health and fortune. Indeed, it is questionable if these blessings do not, by way of contrast, make his solitary thoughts more "cursed."

The philosophy of this phenomenon is past comprehension. Possibly the power of memory is in proportion to the depth of impression and the depth of impression is in proportion to the pain inflicted, so that if memory is awakened without being given willful direction it can only recall the saddest of past experiences. This may be the explanation and it may not.

It is encouraging to think that this doleful habit may be reversed and that by cherishing a great number of pleasant recollections our thoughts in repose may be agreeable and refreshing. This was the opinion of Ruskin and this is the way he puts it:

"Make yourselves nests of pleasant thoughts. None of us yet know, for none of us have been taught in early youth, what fairy palaces we may build of beautiful thought, proof against all adversity—bright fancies, satisfied memories, noble histories, faithful sayings, treasure houses of precious and restful thoughts which care can not disturb nor pain make gloomy nor poverty take away from us—houses built without hands for our souls to live in."

Possibly this is true, but it is necessary always to bear in mind that these "cursed thoughts" come to us when we are alone and when we begin to think about ourselves. The lesson is that it is not good for man to be alone and that it is positively bad for him to brood over himself.

The above from the Chicago Chronicle contains some wholesome advice for Spiritualists to consider.

THE BABY.

(As Seen by His Brother.)

Just guess what that there doctor did
When I was gone one day.
He went and brought a raggy kid,
An' left it here—to stay.
An' now my muvver's got to 'tend
To him all day, an' she
Don't never have no time to spend
A-doin' things for me.

She thinks he just a reg'lar saint,
An' never seemed to care
When I says, scornful: "Humph! He ain't
Got any teeth nor hair!"
An' when I showed her how he'd cry
At just a little slap,
She says: "It's too bad of you to try
To hurt the little chap!"

I have to go to bed alone,
An' lay awake an' hear
The awful ghosts an' goblins groan—
They're thick this time o' year.
An' no one tells me stories now,
But every one says: "Keep
As still as any boy knows how—
Dear baby is asleep!"

I knew that doctor man was bound
To play us some mean trick,
An' now he's gone an' [illegible]

STIRRING THOUGHTS

On the Responsibilities of Societies Toward Lyceums.

At the request of the National Superintendent of Lyceum Work, John W. Ring, I give this paper on "The Responsibilities of Societies Toward Lyceums," and submit the few thoughts I am able to cull from the many presenting themselves.

That the lyceum is, or should be considered one of, if not the most important work in the religious thought of Spiritualism to-day, and one most neglected, I fear. There were, in the early time of this movement lyceums attached to nearly all the prominent societies in the land. Once the proof established of immortality, the questions answered "If man dies, does or shall he live?" the older ones seemed satisfied, and kept too much to phenomena, I fear without realizing what effect that has had upon the minds of children, "our natural questioners," the ones who confound us the most. Beginning in the homes, I do not find the Spiritualist father and mother teaching their children the beautiful truths of Spiritualism. They still say the prayer that asks "lead us not into temptation" and end prayers, "for Christ's sake," send the children to the Sabbath-school, but going themselves to hear lectures on the religion of spiritual living, responsibilities, etc.

Who will take the places of the veteran workers when they go up higher? If Spiritualism is good for the middle-aged and old, doubly so the the helpful influences of the angel world upon the children. No society can be as successful without the children, as with them. If there should be but two or three even, there will the spirit of good and truth be in their midst, and the lyceum does not, or should not, comprise alone the little children, but many an adult, many a grey-haired child has need of the lessons taught regarding Spiritualism.

If the importance so truly understood by the church, when the priest says, "give me the child until he is ten years old, and I snap my fingers at the influence after that," why not think more of what is to follow? What shall our harvest be? What can we say when we are asked, "What have you done for the children?" Societies should recognize this truth. Nothing or no one is too good for Spiritualists, the best is none too good. Put the best men and women before the people, those who by their lives are demonstrating the grand religion of right thinking and living, then bring in the children.

There is nothing to make the children ashamed or afraid. If it is the truth to be advocated by the societies, it is what the children need to be taught. Educate the teachers along the lines of this, our religion, and have them ready to teach and answer the question the busy minds will ask. Make the lyceum work a part of our spiritual obligations. Do not be afraid to copy the old organized methods in any way that will help to strengthen our work, but learn of the past and in no way know fear, save of ignorance and wrong. Every society is responsible for its influence, and the children have a greater claim upon us than the older ones. My plea is for them and their spiritual education. "I would not have them ignorant regarding spiritual things," and if there is one thing which should appeal strongly to societies and speakers, it is this of the education spiritually of the children.

Many children are returning from "that land beyond" who have claims upon us as well as in our homes. I wish I could call loud enough to every society, to cause them to awaken to the knowledge that something more is required than the lecture and the seance room. Look to the minds of the children, know how eagerly the child drinks in the subtle influence which develops fear. Counteract that by making them conversant with the grand truths of Spiritualism. No child should fear death; no child should be ignorant of the laws pertaining to either their spiritual or physical being. Societies have an influence in the community, and the ideas are being held that children are ostracised from society if they do not attend Sabbath-school. If that is so, then it may be the fault of the society. Investigate that, but hold to the need of education—educate the children. I claim this for them as their right.

No society can be fully equiped until it has its lyceum, and all who love children (and who does not?) and know the grandeur of our teachings, should enter into this work heartily. When the bell calls the group together the older ones should not straightway move toward the door. Children like to know that their elders are interested in them, and there would never be a meeting but some grand truths might be learned. Do your duties, ye who are the heads of societies. Do your duties, ye who constitute societies, and above all things study the laws, or rather, the principles which are the foundations of our religion, and forget not, "Little Children" first interpreted them to us. Go ye now, and do likewise for them.

I trust when we meet another year there may be reported from every society, "we too, have a lyceum in our ciety."

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 35 CHICAGO, ILL., DECEMBER 1, 1906. NO. 888

Letter From an Old-time Worker, Now In England.

To the readers of "The Progressive Thinker:

I have often thought I might interest some of my old friends and acquaintances scattered up and down the Middle West, by writing a few lines occasionally from this side the great Atlantic. It has been a long time since anything from my pen has appeared in the columns of The Progressive Thinker; although at one time I was a frequent contributor. Times have changed, however, with me, and from being an itinerant lecturer, traveling up and down the country working for the cause of truth, as I believe (for the devil, as my orthodox friends believed), I am now rather an active business man, with my time pretty well filled in various ways, so that my time for writing letters to newspapers is very limited, but my mind often wanders back over the field I formerly traveled, and I remember many pleasant days spent among friends in the states.

One of my last trips in the interest of our philosophy was through Northern Minnesota, and I often think of friends I made in the lovely park region, as it is called. One of the pleasant remembrances I have of that trip was a few weeks spent at Wheaton, a little out of the Park region, it is true, but where at that time a good strong interest in our philosophy prevailed. I am somewhat afraid, however, that many of the best workers have left that point, an outbreak of Canadian emigration fever having broken out among them.

Two earnest workers, O. F. Brown and his esteemed wife, moved away to Washington soon after my visit to try their fortunes in that far off Western region. I hope they have prospered, for they well deserved success. They were of the right stamp of Spiritualists.

Many others I remember, though some of the names I do not readily call to mind.

Eagle Bend, Alexandria, and some other points I visited, and I trust there is still a good interest in that section.

One thing made a vivid impression on my mind while traveling in Northern and Central Minnesota, and that was the preponderance of the German Catholic element. It was my ambition to get in as many lectures in that region as possible, for I thought I saw a great need. In small towns I noticed very large churches with two spires or towers instead of one, buildings which must have cost a large sum of money, and must have been a great burden on the farming communities which constituted the principal part of the population. Fat, clean-shaven and well dressed priests were plentiful on the trains, and these, too, must have taken a good proportion of the fruits of industry to support them. I contrasted their condition with my own at the time. While every town had a large Catholic church, Spiritualist societies (much less Spiritualist churches) were few and very far between. At every small town the priests could gather a good congregation and be assured a hearty welcome; the Spiritualist worker had to make long journeys and take mighty slim chances sometimes when he did stop.

Wheaton, with its own church and active society, was like an oasis in the desert of Sahara. I hope it is still doing a good work, and I should very much like to hear from any of the friends I became acquainted with there.

To all my friends and fellow workers in Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska, Iowa, Minnesota, Illinois and Indiana, I would say, that although I am out of the public work at present, so far as giving lectures on the Spiritualist rostrum is concerned, my sympathies and best wishes are with all those who are in anyway helping to crush out priestcraft, and make better conditions for the poor, spiritually or otherwise; to rid the world of the war spirit; to build up a better system of government in all countries; to help humanity onward and upward to better and brighter conditions.

I look to the new liberal government of England to help wipe out the evils of a state church, and to the new Education Act which will soon be passed by the English Parliament to do still more for England's people.

It becomes a duty as well as a pleasure to the secretary to acknowledge her deep and heartfelt gratitude to the friends who have so generously and thoughtfully aided the school, both in money and in that which represents money. We feel that they have a right to hear an occasional report through the courtesy of our Spiritualist papers for what purpose their contributions are used. First I wish to assure the patrons of the school that every dollar sent to the Institute is used to defray its expenses, and that every department is managed with the strictest economy. Nothing is wasted or unwisely appropriated. With one exception we have no salaried officers or teachers. The work mainly is done by those who are so situated that they give their time and talents for the good of the cause which they love. The Institute is not endowed, and is therefore dependent in a manner upon the generosity of its friends. There are many expenses aside from those daily incurred in common household necessities.

The building was a gift, and is valuable which necessitates carrying a heavy insurance. There are occasional repairs outside and inside. The plumbing is not immune from expense. The printing of catalogues and advertising matter is a yearly requisite, which with many other incidentals, in the aggregate amounts to quite a sum.

Located so far inland away from any water outlet, we are obliged to pay a high price for coal, which makes our heating expensive.

But we are optimistic for the future of the school and are working to make it possible in the near future for it to become self-sustaining. Will the friends of education and all Spiritualists who are desirous of sustaining a school where students can be educated and developed along the lines which will best prepare them to go out as workers in the great field of progress and reform, which appears more and more an essential need as the years come and go, will these friends rally to its support?

Any information relating to the school, and its management will be cheerfully answered.

We intend to publish as often as

MOST EXCELLENT TESTS.

For the Good of the Cause, and Wonderfully Convincing.

By long experience we know spirits can come back and converse with us by giving them the proper conditions—a channel by which they can reach us. You cannot get a communication by telegraph unless you have an operator to receive it, one who is properly a medium, for all middle-men, such as interpreters and postmasters, and even mail carriers who receive from one and give to another, are mediums, and if they do not give just what they get (when it is for another), they are frauds. If they do give you just what they get, and no more, they are genuine, and worthy of their position.

I have received many tests that knock out the mind-reading theory. I have a nephew who is a telegraph operator, and somewhat skeptical on this subject, and like many others, he wanted some advice from the other side, but he believed the medium to be a good mind-reader, so he wanted me to take ten questions to him, sealed and marked so that he would know if they had been opened. I was not to know one word that was in them, saying to me, "The medium can't read your mind if you don't know what is in them, and I know he can't read mine while I am in my office a mile away."

I took the questions in a sealed envelope. We sat down at a table facing each other, in a light room with a bay window. We had to wait a few minutes for his control to come. Presently he said, "Lay your questions on the table. The control is here." He took up pencil and commenced to write from right to left, the letters leaning to the left, making it very hard to read unless you hold it in front of a mirror, and read in the mirror. His hand seems to be under perfect control of the spirits. He converses on any subject while writing, and did with me in this case. When about half-done, he asked me if I knew Fred Bickford.

"No. That is a new name to me."

Then he said, "My control tells me that your nephew (Charley) has asked Fred Bickford a question in telegraphic characters, using dots and dashes, and asked him to answer in the same way, and he will, but we will have to do the others first, as we will have to make the dots and dashes read from left to right, or Charley cannot read it."

Then I said, "Do you understand telegraphy?"

"No."

Nor did I.

As he commenced on the dots and dashes I happened to think I did know one letter, the letter S, the call of our railroad station in Iowa.

"Yes, Fred is just making S in one of the words, and said it is three dots, which was correct. When he finished he signed his name in both telegraphy and writing.

The questions that C. asked were answered, and the predictions have since come true. My nephew acknowledged that every question was answered, with names signed in full.

Now if Fred Bickford and others who signed their names were not at the other end of the line, will some skeptic who has got good common sense, please tell me who did the answering?

If I could believe the fish story, the whale and Jonah, or if I could believe the sun, moon and stars were made on the third day, as there could not have been any day before the sun was made, as it makes the day, then I might believe the skeptic's explanation if it did differ from what I have written here about these wonderful tests.

I have always been cautious about fraud, and know it is ofttimes practiced in Spiritualism. It is practiced also in the church, for I have attended church fifty years. I am sorry that it is so in both. If I had lived 150 years ago, and had written a letter like this, I would have been burned at the stake just like every medium of that day was who made any public demonstration.

Always address your question to some departed spirit, and give their full name, so that the guide or control can find them. Always sign your own name to your question so that they may know who it is from.

Always be cautious about fraud and when you are certain you have found it, be ready and willing to expose it, just as the good editor of this paper always does.

I have been a reader of The Progressive Thinker for many years. I am always pleased to read its newsy pages.

Now, with a hearty wish for the prosperity of yourself, your paper, the cause of truth and Spiritualism, I am still at the home of the president of the Spiritual Temple League, 50 M street N. W., Washington, D. C.

Remarkable Manifestations

Through the Mediumship of Oren Dunakin—A Letter Describing the Tests of Spirit Presence Given.

Chanute, Kansas, September 17, 1906.

Dear Mr. Rockwell:—This letter is going to be all about Spiritualism, and I am writing to you because I am sure of an appreciative hearer. I feel that I must tell you about my experiences because you are the one who has persistently urged me to investigate.

You know I told you I believed my daughter had mediumistic powers, and I have felt for nearly a year now that I simply must know whether spirits do make themselves evident, and must know it by personal experience, yet when I went to clairvoyants for private readings, I got nothing definite. Last month, being here in Kansas, and learning that a Spiritualistic camp-meeting was to be held at Ottawa, I went up there for two days in August, but while I saw some wonderful things happen to others, nothing came to me; but while there I met a medium—a Mr. Oren Dunakin of Chanute, and after he had returned home here I became pretty well acquainted with him and his wife, and they have held several circles for my especial conversion.

This man I believe is a high-class medium—at any rate they are a high-class family morally. I know this, for I have come to know them quite well. Mr. Dunakin is a brother of that Mr. Dunakin whom I see mentioned as an officer in the Ohio Spiritualists Association, and it seems he has had mediumistic powers from boyhood.

I need not recount all the spirit people who came to others. I had never sat in a circle before, and every circumstance was wonderful to me, but at the first meeting my husband came, and with a good deal of difficulty announced his name, "George," and then told me he did not want to "pass over" when he did—especially as it left me in such financial embarrassment.

Now, not a soul in the room knew my husband's name, nor that I had been financially embarrassed.

This was done through a trumpet, and there was a cabinet.

When he had finished talking he patted me several times around the head and cheeks, kissed my hair twice (I felt the pressure and heard the sounds), and said good night, and went away.

The second night he came again, and with stronger voice. That night also the trumpet came and tapped my head and a voice said, "Mother"; then, "I'm so glad to be here"; then, "Good night" (hurriedly), and the trumpet fell almost to the table, but was caught up by one of the other spirits who explained that she was too weak to hold it. She, too, kissed me before going away. I heard it but could not feel it.

Of course, through both these evenings there were innumerable pats and caresses. The first evening they had not the feeling of human hands, but felt more like strokes from blotting paper or something else lifeless, but of pleasant surface; but the second evening they had the feeling of warm, comfortable, velvety human hands, patting and petting around my hair and face and neck and shoulders.

That second evening we had a light seance also. The room was nearly as light as in usual in the evening. There were the medium, his wife, his little girl and myself.

The cabinet was simply a dark curtain across the corner. I really wish you were here to sit with this medium. You see the medium and I sat before the cabinet and facing the middle of the room. His wife and child sat over on the other side of the room, facing the middle of the room. So I could account for every living pair of hands in the room, yet a fifth, left hand was pushed out between the two curtains and waved at me several times. I took from it a flower that Mrs. Dunakin had placed behind the curtain, but when I attempted to take also one that was held out to the medium, the hand tossed the flower to the medium and dealt me a back-handed slap in the face. And it felt, too! And it was my husband's hand in shape though a little larger in size. What do you think of that!

I am saying nothing about the guitar that lifted itself off a chair and went floating around through the air, playing as it went, and occasionally coming down and resting gently on our heads or shoulders or hands.

Nor am I mentioning other characters who came and talked with others present.

Next time I helped get the cabinet and things ready. This time the trumpet and guitar were not used. Different spirits made the medium personate them. Suddenly I felt something near me, and said to the others, "I know there's some one close to me," and a voice not a foot away from my head at once whispered plainly, "George." I said, "If it is you, George, touch me," and instantly was patted on the arm.

This came out of the air with no trumpet or other aid. Later another spirit through the medium gave his name as "Charley" (the name of an uncle of mine who committed suicide in 1883). I asked him to touch me if it was my Uncle Charley, and immediately felt a pat on the arm. A little schoolmate did the same.

At one of these meetings, Mr. Dunakin got up unconsciously and after walking around the room restlessly, came before me and acted my husband's sufferings in his last sickness, and took my hands and pressed them on his body over the various organs that had been affected, and even said the word "Bright's."

Of course at each coming of my husband I asked if he had seen my daughter lately (she is still living), and if she was all right; he always told me he had seen her that day and she was "all right," emphatically.

At the last meeting it seemed as if almost every person came I had ever known who had died. By the way, I must go back and say that at next to the last meeting there came a dear old lady whom I took to be a certain friend of mine as she gave her name as "Nancy." She complained that she could hardly close her mouth and some of those present thought she might have died of some disease of the throat or jaw. I was not aware that she had died at all, not having heard of her for about ten years. I said to the company present, "I'm going to write to-morrow, if possible, and find whether she has passed away."

Well, at the last meeting (last night), a spirit who is often present—an Irishman—said, "Say, Mrs., did you write that letter?" I told him I had not yet done so but would. He said, "Oh, it's all right; I just thought I'd remind you of it." I said, "Jerry, I'll do it before I sleep," but he said, "Oh, no, sleep first."

This same spirit Jerry at another time when something specially convincing had been done, turned to me and said abruptly in his Irish brogue, "Well, what d'yer think of us now—are we frauds?"

At another time when I complained that a certain voice didn't sound natural, a boy spirit, Johnny, snapped out, "Say, how'd you expect a voice to sound natural through a tin horn?"

At last night's seance, as I said, pretty near everybody I knew came. My mother, announcing herself by her maiden name, "Fannie F—h". Certainly no one in Kansas knew my mother's maiden name. And there was no uncertainty or slowness or indistinctness of utterance. My little brother came and announced himself as "Sammie." I said, "Why, Sammie, I remember you as a little boy four years old." "Yes, you wouldn't know me now; I'm nearly forty." "You've changed, I suppose?" "Yes, you know I passed over thirty—no, thirty-two years ago." He had died in 1872, really, 34 years ago.

A darling old Scotch woman that I knew when she was eighty, who used formerly to work in my grandfather's family, came and gave her name as "Nancy" and when I failed to recognize her by that, she began to croon an old Scotch tune in her dear trembly old voice, and I knew her instantly.

This uncle who had committed suicide, came again and gave his name. This time it was in a good strong voice, "Charles F—h." I had not told the circle, of course, about his suicide and did not intend to, so I said, "Uncle Charley, I want you to tell me the real reason why you went away when you did," and then he told me the whole story, winding up with "and I thought I could end it all, but I made a great mistake."

A former schoolmate of mine, whom I have not seen since 1876, came. I told her I didn't know she had died, and she said, "I passed away about a year ago." (I have written North to-day to find out about it). Just at the last my splendid old grandfather came—my mother's father—one of the staunchest old men the Lord ever made. He just came and gave his name, "Henry F—h," but I know he'll come again.

It was from him that all Spiritualistic tendencies in us as a family came. It was he who took the Banner of Light at a time when it took nerve to do so. And so it was the first paper aside from the "Maine Farmer" associated with my childish recollections. He had courage, fidelity and sense of right, and magnanimity enough to endow a state. I was his favorite grandchild.

FAITH BASIS OF ALL ESOTERICS.

The Rev. Van Ness Talks of Ancients With Psychic Powers.

"Ancient records are so filled with accounts of seership, power over sickness, second sight and the ability to flash thought telepathically over long distances, that unless we want to disbelieve all history and put Hebrew, Hindoo and all classic records on a par with fairy tales, we must believe that many long forgotten men and women had really an instinctive spiritual perception and were enjoying the possession of psychic powers, which even now seem well night marvelous," said the Rev. Thomas Van Ness, at the Second Church, Copley Square, yesterday morning.

Continuing, he said in part: "Hypnotizers, Spiritualists, Christian Scientists, mental healers, prophets of the New Thought, Babists, crystal gazers, Esoteric Buddhists, Theosophists, call them what you will, think of them as you please, are all people who, more or less, come to an appreheision of the fact that there is something beneath the something that is the only true belief. "At times their efforts to come into communion with the spiritual are so bungling, so crude, so extravagant as to make the Judics grieve, yet for that reason we ought not to lose sight of the fact that the quest upon which they have entered is a right quest.

"In examining any one of these modern movements we see that it is founded essentially upon the same basis, the same principle that formed the heart of the ancient esoteric systems.

"That principle was faith.

"It is impossible to achieve anything substantial except as an act of faith.

"The discovery of Columbus was made possibly because of his unbounded faith; the cable enterprise of Cyrus Field came into use because he had faith.

LYCEUM EDUCATION.

A Paper Read Before the Fourteenth Annual Convention of the N. S. A.

Greetings:—We come with a few thoughts from the golden West, where the waters of the Pacific Ocean embrace the land of sunshine.

To us has been given the knowledge of spirit return. Being a new country just in the budding, so to speak, our form of work among the children, is also in a budding state. As in our balmy climate all vegetation grows and matures quickly and luxuriantly, so the minds of the young unfold very quickly; and rapidly are they grasping the truths of Spiritualism. We find also that as the lands of California are arid and lack the fertilizing waters, so our broad spiritual field needs seriously enthusiastic truth-giving teachers. We need teachers who are not only able to instruct the minds of adults in the principles of Spiritualism, but those who recognize the importance of unfolding the minds of youth. The children, like buds, will be the flowers, and in their education lies the hope for the desirable fruition of our beloved cause.

Each teacher or lecturer going into the field should be familiar with lyceum work and able to organize and sustain an active lyceum. Each society should maintain its lyceum, if only a few are gathered. The lecturer and society should labor together to keep the children and young people interested. They work together. If you keep the children interested you will secure the attention of the parents, for they will follow the children to encourage and assist them. The usual struggles of societies will be greatly relieved when proper attention is given to proper education, as furnished by the lyceum system, is furnished the children. We must give attention to the young as well as the old. When the entire family is recognized full success is assured.

Would that each missionary and organizer were equipped by the National educational purposes, and stay with the new officers and leaders until they have ideas of how to conduct the work successfully. In this way you appeal to the parents through the child. You are interesting the parent in the society. The parent is interested in bringing the child and seeing the joy beaming in its eyes, a greater activity is secured. The two must go hand in hand. As the parent leads the child, so the child brings new joy to the parent. A more perfect organization and a spiritual Spiritualism is to be had by educating the child and by holding the attention of the parent through the child. Families will not be divided on Spiritualistic issues, and harmony will prevail in societies as the influence of the lyceum work gains hold. We will receive the blessings of the parent and the angel world.

NOTICE TO SPIRITUALISTS EVERYWHERE.

The Temple Fund Society asks for members at one dollar per annum. Also desires speakers, mediums and societies to secure funds for the purposes of this society. All such donation of money will be used for aid to local societies of Spiritualists in temple building. This fund is sure to grow. We are getting members from all sections. The outlook for success is very promising. The time has come for Spiritualists to show their zeal. We have faith that they will. Your donations will find proper use for practical benefit of our cause. You are urged to be an agent of this society and its fund in your locality. You can do much if you will try! Shall the cause of mortals and spirits have your co-operation? The Temple Fund Society is already an active and aggressive body of earnest Spiritualists. Will you be known as one of them?

Yours fraternally,

UNPLEASANT MEMORIES.

In Order to Spiritualize Your Nature, Form Within Yourself a Nest of Pleasant Thoughts.—"None of us yet know, for none of us have been taught in early youth, what fairy palaces we may build of beautiful thought, proof against all adversity—bright fancies, satisfied memories, noble histories, faithful sayings, treasure houses of precious and restful thoughts which care can not disturb nor pain make gloomy nor poverty take away from us—houses built without hands for our souls to live in."

Shakspeare, who is sometimes called "the myriad minded," seems to have observed and referred to if not described in his plays every single virtue, vice, foible and peculiarity of human nature. One of these relates to the operations of the mind when in a state of idleness or brooding.

It is well known to physiologists that the body exhibits both voluntary and involuntary muscular action and that involuntary action is most active when voluntary action is reduced or suspended, as in sleep. It is a singular thing that there is something analogous to this in the mind and that as soon as it ceases to exert itself under the control of the will it begins another kind of activity of its own, which is always of a disagreeable character. This singular mental phenomenon has not escaped Shakspeare.

In "Macbeth" he makes Banquo say:

Merciful powers,
Restrain in me the cursed thoughts that nature
Gives way to in repose.

What these "cursed thoughts" were the poet does not say. They may have bee a sort of premonition of Banquo's fate, for immediately after uttering these words he was assassinated, or they may have been ruminations on the recent battle scenes through which he had passed and the prophecies of the weird sisters to which he had recently listened, or they may have been all of these put together. The point is that they were "cursed thoughts," that they were natural and that they were inflicted on him "in repose."

Banquo had led a troubled existence and was placed in a critical position, but it was not when fencing in an engagement nor when facing Macbeth that his thoughts were torturing. It was when he dropped all these objective concerns and lapsed into meditation that his thoughts were "cursed." The question is whether he was not, after all, like everybody else, and whether every human being, whether happily situated or not, does not as soon as he is "in repose" have "cursed thoughts."

This is certainly the testimony of a great many thinking people. As soon as they stop work, forsake company, conversation and reading and take a solitary walk, for instance, all the unpleasant memories of life form themselves into a procession and pass in solid column through his mind. In this procession are all his failures, all his humiliations, all his wrongs, all his misfortunes and especially all of his sins and follies. On such occasions if he ever did or said a creditable or decent thing it is forgotten. Look which way he will, backward, forward or sideways it is the unpleasant memories that assail him, and every object on which his eyes rest reminds him of some of them.

The man who has such thoughts may be a really good man, his position in life and society may be enviable and he may possess youth, good health and fortune. Indeed, it is questionable if these blessings do not, by way of contrast, make his solitary thoughts more "cursed."

The philosophy of this phenomenon is past comprehension. Possibly the power of memory is in proportion to the depth of impression and the depth of impression is in proportion to the pain inflicted, so that if memory is awakened without being given willful direction it can only recall the saddest of past experiences. This may be the explanation and it may not.

It is encouraging to think that this doleful habit may be reversed and that by cherishing a great number of pleasant recollections our thoughts in repose may be agreeable and refreshing. This was the opinion of Ruskin and this is the way he puts it:

"Make yourselves nests of pleasant thoughts. None of us yet know, for none of us have been taught in early youth, what fairy palaces we may build of beautiful thought, proof against all adversity—bright fancies, satisfied memories, noble histories, faithful sayings, treasure houses of precious and restful thoughts which care can not disturb nor pain make gloomy nor poverty take away from us—houses built without hands for our souls to live in."

Possibly this is true, but it is necessary always to bear in mind that these "cursed thoughts" come to us when we are alone and when we begin to think about ourselves. The lesson is that it is not good for man to be alone and that it is positively bad for him to brood over himself.

The above from the Chicago Chronicle contains some wholesome advice for Spiritualists to consider.

THE BABY.

(As Seen by His Brother.)

Just guess what that there doctor did
When I was gone one day.
He went and brought a raggy kid,
An' left it here—to stay.
An' now my muvver's got to 'tend
To him all day, an' she
Don't never have no time to spend
A-doin' things for me.

She thinks he just a reg'lar saint,
An' never seemed to care
When I says, scornful: "Humph! He ain't
Got any teeth nor hair!"
An' when I showed her how he'd cry
At just a little slap,
She says: "It's too bad of you to try
To hurt the little chap!"

I have to go to bed alone,
An' lay awake an' hear
The awful ghosts an' goblins groan—
They're thick this time o' year.
An' no one tells me stories now,
But every one says: "Keep
As still as any boy knows how—
Dear baby is asleep!"

I know that doctor man was bound
To play me some mean trick,
An' when it's me, he's made me take
A lot of awful truck
That's gave me such a stomach ache;
He always brings bad luck!

I'm goin' to get the kid some day,
An' when the doctor's here
I'll give him to him, an' I'll say:
"Just take the 'little dear.'
You brought him, now you just go on Back home with him!" An' when
The raggy little thing is gone
My ma'll love ME again.

STIRRING THOUGHTS

On the Responsibilities of Societies Toward Lyceums.

At the request of the National Superintendent of Lyceum Work, John W. Ring, I give this paper on "The Responsibilities of Societies Toward Lyceums," and submit the few thoughts I am able to cull from the many presenting themselves.

That the lyceum is, or should be considered one of, if not the most important work in the religious thought of Spiritualism to-day, and one most neglected, I fear. There were, in the early time of this movement lyceums attached to nearly all the prominent societies in the land. Once the proof established of immortality, the questions answered "If man dies, does or shall he live?" the older ones seemed satisfied, and kept too much to phenomena, I fear without realizing what effect that has had upon the minds of children, "our natural questioners," the ones who confound us the most. Beginning in the homes, I do not find the Spiritualist father and mother teaching their children the beautiful truths of Spiritualism. They still say the prayer that asks "lead us not into temptation" and end prayers, "for Christ's sake," send the children to the Sabbath-school, but going themselves to hear lectures on the religion of spiritual living, responsibilities, etc.

Who will take the places of the veteran workers when they go up higher? If Spiritualism is good for the middle-aged and old, doubly so the helpful influences of the angel world upon the children. No society can be as successful without the children, as with them. If there should be but two or three even, there will the spirit of good and truth be in their midst, and the lyceum does not, or should not, comprise alone the little children, but many an adult, many a grey-haired child has need of the lessons taught regarding Spiritualism.

If the importance so truly understood by the church, when the priest says, "give me the child until he is ten years old, and I snap my fingers at the influence after that," why not think more of what is to follow? What shall our harvest be? What can we say when we are asked, "What have you done for the children?" Societies should recognize this truth. Nothing or no one is too good for Spiritualists, the best is none too good. Put the best men and women before the people, those who by their lives are demonstrating the grand religion of right thinking and living, then bring in the children.

There is nothing to make the children ashamed or afraid. If it is the truth to be advocated by the societies, it is what the children need to be taught. Educate the teachers along the lines of this, our religion, and have them ready to teach and answer the question the busy minds will ask. Make the lyceum work a part of our spiritual obligations. Do not be afraid to copy the old organized methods in any way that will help to strengthen our work, but learn of the past and in no way know fear, save of ignorance and wrong. Every society is responsible for its influence, and the children have a greater claim upon us than the older ones. My plea is for them and their spiritual education. "I would not have them ignorant regarding spiritual things," and if there is one thing which should appeal strongly to societies and speakers, it is this of the education spiritually of the children.

Many children are returning from "that land beyond" who have claims upon us as well as in our homes. I wish I could call loud enough to every society, to cause them to awaken to the knowledge that something more is required than the lecture and the seance room. Look to the minds of the children, know how eagerly the child drinks in the subtle influence which develops fear. Counteract that by making them conversant with the grand truths of Spiritualism. No child should fear death; no child should be ignorant of the laws pertaining to either their spiritual or physical being. Societies have an influence in the community, and the ideas are being held that children are ostracised from society if they do not attend Sabbath-school. If that is so, then it may be the fault of the society. Investigate that, but hold to the need of education—educate the children. I claim this for them as their right.

No society can be fully equiped until it has its lyceum, and all who love children (and who does not?) and know the grandeur of our teachings, should enter into this work heartily. When the bell calls the group together the older ones should not straightway move toward the door. Children like to know that their elders are interested in them, and there would never be a meeting but some grand truths might be learned. Do your duties, ye who are the heads of societies. Do your duties, ye who constitute societies, and above all things study the laws, or rather, the principles which are the foundations of our religion, and forget not, "Little Children" first interpreted them to us. Go ye now, and do likewise for them.

I trust when we meet another year there may be reported from every society, "we too, have a lyceum in our society."

Spiritualism, Insanity, and Crime

THE FOLLOWING ARTICLE FROM THE TWO WORLDS, ENG., SHOULD BE PRESERVED CAREFULLY FOR OCCASIONS WHEN OPPONENTS REITERATE THE "INSANITY AND CRIMINAL" CHARGE AGAINST SPIRITUALISM, IT IS A COMPLETE REFUTATION OF THE LIBEL, BY UNANSWERABLE STATISTICS—THE LOGIC OF FACTS. THE OCCASION AND ANSWER SHOW THE IMPORTANCE OF THE WORK OF THE EDITOR-AT-LARGE, AND CHARACTER OF THE WORK DONE ON THE ADVANCED POSTS OF THE GREAT MOVEMENT.—[ED.

I see that the Two Worlds asks for information on the subject of "Spiritualism and Insanity." The charge has been repeated for half a century, and, although a libel in the beginning, is reiterated as if it went without gainsay, with the assurance of an "orthodox lie."

Some Interesting Statistics.

Some years ago (to be exact, in 1877, Dr. Eugene Crowell, then president of the Edison Electric Light Company, of New York, determined to get the facts of the case. He secured reports of 58 asylums for the insane in the United States and Canada. The number of patients in these institutions was 23,328. There were 412 from religious excitement, and 59 from Spiritualism.

Estimating the number of inmates in the asylums not included, there would be 30,000 insane persons at that time in the various institutions in the United States, and 530 insane from religious excitement, and 76 from Spiritualism. In the 87 asylums there are reported 76 insane Spiritualists. The reports of 13 of the largest asylums for a series of years, from 10 to 28, show that of 58,875 patients treated, 1994 were insane from religion and 229 from Spiritualism.

In 42 reports of asylums for the insane, out of a total of 32,313 patients, 215 are clergymen and 45 are Spiritualists.

Dr. Nichols, Superintendent of the Government Hospital for the Insane at Washington, D. C., in which nearly 1,000 patients are inmates, said: "I see a paragraph attributed to Dr. Forbes Winslow is going the rounds of the press, stating that there are 10,000 lunatics in the United States who were made insane by Spiritualism. My observation leads me to suppose that there may be one per cent of truth in that statement."

Not 33 1-3, Only 1.395.

Thus, instead of the falsehood set adrift and chattered from mouth to mouth of the unthinking, of 33 1-3 per cent, the fact is that it is 1.395, or, roundly, ¼ per cent.

Words of Weight.

Dr. J. B. Cooker, superintendent for years of the asylum at New Orleans, La., says: "I have been in charge of the lunatic asylum of the parish of New Orleans some seven years, and out of the large number admitted and discharged during that time, have never had one case of insanity on account of Spiritualism, but several cases of other forms of religious belief."

Epes Sargent, the eminent critic and author, when asked how many cases of insanity from Spiritualism he had known, replied: "I have known but one instance."

Robert Dale Owen wrote: "In twenty-one years I have taken an interest in this matter. I do not recollect a single Spiritualist who has become insane." He adds, of a mother made insane by the death of her child by a terrible accident, "whose incipient symptoms were arrested, and she restored to her right mind by communications from her child, embodying incontrovertible evidence of his identity."

Rev. Dr. Watson, Bishop in the Methodist Church, after years of experience, writes: "I have never personally known a single case of a Spiritualist becoming insane."

Dr. Crowell wrote and published his paper in 1877, or almost thirty years ago, at a time when there was a great deal more excitement about Spiritualism than now. To discover if there had been any change, I, two years ago, consulted the reports of nearly all the great institutions for the insane, and found that, according to the reports, of all causes, Spiritualism brought the fewest patients. In many, not a single case was reported.

Hudson Tuttle's Testimony.

During the past year I collected the reports of nearly all the penitentiaries in the United States and Canada, and found that in all the vast army of criminals therein confined, there is not a single one set down as a Spiritualist. Ninety per cent, it is stated, belonged to the church, or were reared under church influence. In all the penitentiaries there are 750 gospel ministers.

Spiritualism is pre-eminently a religion of sanity. It encourages reason, and not emotion. When we hear of people becoming insane, almost invariably we have the accompaniment that they imitate Bible characters. They rend off their clothing to be like Adam and Eve; attempt to sacrifice their children in imitation of the patriarch; become lascivious like Solomon, or, filled with egotism, take up the role of horror-predicting prophets. They who believe in the church doctrines have plenty to be crazy about, and it is a constant wonder such a creed does not drive every believer stark mad—it would if they really believed it.

One Person in Fifty Years.

In conclusion I will say that I have in over fifty years' experience met with one person, a man, who became a crazy enthusiast from Spiritualism; yet I do not lay the blame on that cause. He was deeply devotional, reared strictly, and his life was made wretched by the injustice and cruelty he could not reconcile, of so many being doomed to hell. His soul was overcast with gloom, and he was exhausted wrestling with the apparent antagonism of such horrible punishment with a good God. By an accident he came into a spirit circle; received a communication from a spirit friend which he could not doubt; was told that hell was a mental state, not literal fire; and that the spirit went right on in continuity of life, receiving joy and pain just as here. There was not one of his friends in hell. All were spirits enjoying the full measure of happiness that belonged to them. The black clouds, which had made his life one of pain, lifted, and the glorious light burst on his mind with such brilliancy that he was overcome.

Was Spiritualism responsible, or the religion which shrouded his mind from infancy to manhood with despair? And yet, in his case, after he had time to recover from the shock, and reason began to untangle the conflicting doctrines, and fear gave way to courage, he became himself again—no, not himself, but another man, with joy in place of fear; hope instead of despair; an enthusiast shouting hallelujah because of his escape from bondage and his joy in the new faith, that is knowledge.

A Curious Study in Animal Psychology.

A Doctor of Philosophy Cures Cows by Mental Treatment.

Christian Reich is an old German philosopher and student living west of Gross Point, and his almost uncanny practice is healing animals, chiefly cows, by a mysterious process which if applied to humans would be classed with Christian Science, faith cure, and mental healing.

The efficiency of his treatment is evidenced by the frequency of the calls for his services, and scarcely a day passes that the Herr Doctor's phaeton is not seen lurching over the roads near the village, carrying the aged "Tier Arzt" to the stall of some afflicted cow or horse. Children point him out as the man who saved their pet dog or kitten, and many families possessing a single cow regard him gratefully as the means of saving their chief source of income.

Although the owners of his animal patients naively admit the existence of the doctor's powers and witness his feats of healing with phlegmatic German indifference Herr Reich offers rational explanations for all that he does, and insists that there is nothing mysterious or miraculous in his cures. He was graduated from the University of Gottingen, when he received the degree of doctor of philosophy, and his exposition of his methods and theories is so thoroughly academic and in accord with modern German philosophic research as to to discountenance the charges of charlatan and faker which have been brought against him.

Communicates with Animals by Subtle Sense.

The basis of Herr Reich's theory is laid in a ponderous book which he issued eight years ago on "Die Psychologie Die Tiere." The main theme of the work is an elaboration of a theory that animals and primitive men communicate by a subtle sense akin to telepathy, which in man has been gradually crowded down into the subconsciousness with the acquisition of vocal speech. With the revival of this means of insight into the inner lives of animals, says the doctor, man may acquire almost unlimited power over them and may direct the discharge of the nervous forces in their bodies in such a way as to effect cures of nearly all their ailments. Man's first ascendency over animals, he says, was acquired at a time when he communicated with them in this way, and the exercise of the power was what gave him dominion over the earth.

During years of research in Germany Dr. Reich worked constantly with animals, attempting to establish what he terms "a system both empirical and rational and which will have practical as well as scientific value." In his laboratory at Jena he conducted a series of experiments on "The Summation of Stimuli in Animal Psychology," which won him honors from three German scientific societies and gave him the first conception of his later theories.

Lived for Years Like a Recluse at Gross Point.

His long period of close application broke down his health, and he devoted several years to travel. Wishing to remain in America he sought a place where he might find some of the environment of the fatherland and continue his work in quiet and seclusion. His search led him to Gross Point, and in the quiet of his retreat on the outskirts of the village, shut off from the world almost as completely as a middle age ascetic. He first became known to the residents of the village through his desire to find animals upon which to experiment, and after a number of remarkable cures had been credited to him he found himself no longer able to remain in seclusion. His calls for help from his patients of the animal world increased steadily, and now he never refuses to answer them.

While Dr. Reich does not claim that his system entirely is new he claims that he has done much creative work, and says that he is the first experimenter to perfect his theories to the extent of practical application, with the exception of Rudolph Koellman of Leipsic, who gained much newspaper notoriety a few years ago by his experiments with guinea pigs.

The Law of Rhythm Is Fundamental.

To scientific men the most interesting feature of his remarkable system is what he terms "the rhythm of vitality" in the lives of animals. This is an application of the psychology of the "Arbeit and Rhytmus" of Karl Bucher, of which Dr. Reich claims to have been the inspirator, to the animal world.

"Most of the failures in medical and veterinary science are due to a disregard of the laws of rhythms," says the old German savant. "The law of rhythm is one of the most fundamental in the universe. It is the bulwark of the new cosmic philosophy which has revolutionized modern thought and given man an insight into the deeper problems of existence.

"Every being of the organic world is the creature of the great sweeping, impersonal forces of the universe. A rhythm of life and death, growth and decay, evolution and dissolution, runs through nature through eternity. The pulsations of the great world rhythm are felt, as waves on the surface of a stream move with the deeper under currents, and there just as surely is a rhythm of vitality in the life of a man or a horse as there is in the life and death of a world.

At Certain Hours Vitality Is at Low Ebb.

At certain times of the day you have more energy than at other times. If you observe closely you will find that it generally is at the same hour of the day that your spirits are at the lowest ebb. It differs with different individuals. If you really want to figure out the personal equation of a man figure out his rhythm of vitality. This is being done by many advanced students of pedagogy, and in the near future it will be taken into consideration in the public schools. In animal healing the rhythm of vitality is one of the most important things.

"In cows vitality is at the lowest ebb between 9 o'clock in the morning and 2 in the afternoon. It is folly to attempt any cures at this time unless it is an emergency case.

"But this vital rhythm is in the end of great service in curing animals by this method, as by it the energy in the nerve cells may be stored up, as it were, and concentrated at a critical time and directed to the right nerve center. This really is the crux of the entire system. Every animal has at is disposal sufficient energy to remove any cause of disease, to tear away dead tisue and to build new, and to supply nourishment. The great desideratum then is to secure a perfect conservation of this energy in the animal. This is what I endeavor to do.

"By working with an animal several days I can store up the vitality at each rhythmic period and discharge it at the right time into an affected part. This is the way all my cures have been accomplished where there has been a need of strong compelling force suddenly discharged to remove the cause of the disease. In cases where the affliction is less serious it is done without the preliminary saving up of energy.

Some Cases Which Have Been Cured.

The cases which Herr Reich claims to have cured, or for which claims are made for him by his friends, include nearly all common afflictions of cows and horses. The first notable cure credited to him since his residence near Gross Point is that of a cow belonging to Wilhelm Rubo, a truck farmer living near Skokie. The cow was a valuable Holstein, and attempts had been made to cure it by two local veterinaries. Rubo had visited Reich at the latter's home, and much impressed by the old German miracle worker's experiments with the animals about the place, consulted him about the cow. In two days after Herr Reich's first visit the animal began to improve, and in a week was cured completely.

The next case was of impaction of the stomach. Although Herr Reich found this case more difficult of treatment he is credited with a cure, brought about, as he phrases it, "by a stimulation of the reflex ganglia." Another case of "garget" came into the hands of the doctor soon after, and in this also he was successful.

"There is no pathological condition," says the doctor, "which is beyond the reach of the ordinary bodily forces if they are given an opportunity to do their work. There always is a great residuum of reserve energy in the larger ganglia, which if properly directed will accomplish incredible things in the way of cures."—Chicago Tribune.

RESPONSIBILITY OF LYCEUM OFFICERS.

Read Before the Fourteenth Annual Convention of the National Spiritualists' Association.

Officers of the various lyceums should be chosen with especial care, because of the great value of the work. Seldom are mortals privileged to perform a work of so much worth as training the minds of the children, or rather bringing the sunshine of Truth to touch them sweetly with its warm rays, that they may naturally unfold. Lyceum leaders should come closely in touch always with the best, that even the unseen influence of their lives may go out with a purifying, quickening power, for children are true sensitives and easily absorb and drink in the silent influence of our thoughts even. It is not alone in the lyceum room that we need to carry with us pure spiritual powers, but our daily lives should attest to the true worth of Spiritualism. We should be doers, not hearers only, for children are quick to note the real, wherever found.

Perfection of order, and punctual attendance should be the invariable rule of all lyceum leaders, and an intense earnestness and love for the work should be in constant predominance. Therefore it is very necessary that no one should assume the office, who has not intense love for children, and a clear conception of the value of the lyceum work. We may build beautifully in other fields of thought, but if we pass by the children we miss the best, the most important, the most necessary, the most essential. When we have properly educated the children the whole foundation has been laid whereon we may build a grand, noble structure, and lead on to perfection the great mass of humanity.

The responsibility of lyceum leaders is great because the work calls for so much of love, so much of care, so much of earnestness, so much of labor, so much of self-sacrifice without appreciation. So much of carefulness in little things, so much of the spiritual—for it is only the spiritual that can be the true companions and helpers of sweet, innocent childhood. All may be helpers in the broad lyceum field, but its leaders and especial teachers, must be daily companions of the arisen angels and constant attendants of the spiritual schools in the higher realms, else will they fail to properly present the truth to the sweet receptive minds of childhood.

Lyceum leaders also have great responsibilities resting upon them in regard to the older children whose heads are crowned with the emblem of purity—white hairs. They should be made to feel how essential they are to the success of the lyceum. Children nowhere can be brought into position to receive the highest and best without a constant and free intermingling with age, experience and a purified love, such as the dear aged ones almost invariably carry about with them. So let our lyceum leaders with the same holy chain of love, inclose sweet childhood, beautiful youth, hallowed age, making a sanctuary where joy shall touch all hearts and a quickening power shall awaken all souls to a greater good.

The responsibility of lyceum leaders, at the present time, is very great, in that the need for earnest work is more apparent than at any other stage in the world's development. Important questions are at issue, our children must decide these questions. We have no time to lose. We must not fail to let the sunlight of Truth fall upon our children through the lyceum window, that the good within them may grow large enough and become strong to grapple with the opposing forces. It is true that our children, will in ages to come, unfold, develop, become beautiful without our help, so will the potato grow in the darkened cellar, but it can never reach a state of perfection until placed in proper conditions. The same with all humanity. Therefore how vastly important that we realize the value of the NOW, and give to the children proper conditions for unfoldment, proper conditions for the blossoming of the best within human lives. All children are our children, every one of us, for the attainments they make. It is our privilege to implant in every child-heart an inspiration for something better and that longing when implanted, will lead to noble lives, that will enrich the world.

"If you have a Truth worth knowing,
Place it in the children's hands;
Better trust them for the sowing,
Than to cast on worn-out lands;
Here is where the hope is resting,
For the future dawning now,
And fair angel hands are pressing Softly every childish brow."

THANKSGIVING SONG.

Our forefathers fled from unjust taxation,
And came to this country where freedom held sway;
So here they established a new civilization
Then left us their blessing with Thanksgiving Day.
The Puritans were a God-fearing people,
And we their descendants, a progressive race;
A nation of freemen with all that is needful,
Can truly give thanks to the God of all grace.
The wonderful gifts Our Father in Heaven
Is showering upon us each day in the year,
Should prompt us to offer Him unfeigned thanksgiving,
For those who trust in Him have nothing to fear.
His mandate to us is onward, right onward!
For progress is written on all that exist,
While life's deepest problems that wise men have pondered
And settled forever, have gone up in mist.
'Tis well to give thanks, and call to remembrance
The time when the spirit of liberty 'rose
In protest against an unholy church bondage,
And truth once more vanquished her spiritual foes.
But men are not free, although they inherit
A name and a country unequaled on earth;
For character only is test of true merit,
And this is not given with title or birth.

THE PSYCHOGRAPH

OR

Dial Planchette.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than twelve years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the FORMATION OF CIRCLES AND CULTIVATION OF MEDIUMSHIP with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

DIRE THINGS TO HAPPEN!

A Brookline Seer Predicts All Kinds of Revolutions Soon—Rev. J. C. F. Grumbine, the Universal Religion Church, Boston, Prophesies a Revolution Within Two Months, Which Will Upheave Business, Political and Social Conditions—So Says the Boston Post.

Some of the things which the Rev. J. C. F. Grumbine prophesies are about to happen:

Early in January the United States will be upheaved by a terrific political and social revolution which may disrupt the Union.

Hearst and Moran and Bryan are passive agents impelled by irresistible impulses to bring this about.

When the revolution is over everyone will have the gift of prophecy, now dormant in all, and this will revolutionize business and social conditions.

Every man's future life will be plain to him and he will know just how to act.

Salesmen will become a drug on the market, for a man will sit in his office and know by intuition who wants his goods and when to ship them.

Police will be a superfluity, as all will know weeks ahead of time when they are to be held up or burglars are to make a call.

Eventually all crime will cease, as people will discover that it is the spirits of dead murderers, suicides, et al., which impel them to follow suit and they will learn to resist this influence.

Dire Things Predicted.

That within less than two months will begin a revolution which shall upheave the business, political and social conditions of the nation, make real estate a drug on the market, stocks and bonds not worth the paper upon which they are written, perhaps disrupt the Union, is the startling prophecy made by the Rev. J. C. F. Grumbine, B. D., F. S. S., lecturer of the Universal Religion Church of Boston.

As calmly and confidently as if he were talking of the weather or the current theatrical attractions, Mr. Grumbine told a Boston Post representative in his Brookline home yesterday that, though this is the first prophecy he has ever made public, many similar things have been revealed to him, and all have proven true.

In the current issue of his magazine, Occult Science, he describes with interesting detail how this revolution is to come about, but even more interesting is his description of how he was impelled to write the "prophecy."

"Merely Knows It Is True."

"I had just come into my house from church," he said, "when without volition on my part I picked up a pencil and wrote the prophecy. I cannot explain it. I understand it scarcely better than you. I merely know it is true.

"You or anyone could be a prophet as well as I if you would only give way to the divine prophetic power inherent in everyone. Whether you are in a busy crowd or in the quiet of your home, whether you are in the glare of the sun or in the darkness of night, on all sides, influencing you, perhaps causing you to commit crimes, are myriads of spirits, good and bad.

"You are tempted to take your life. Spirits of departed suicides whisper in your ear, try to push you over the brink; then if you call to your aid the divine power within you, you are saved; if not you are lost."

His small, close-set indescribable eyes shining like coals of fire, his powerful face, the lower half almost black with close-shaved beard, lighted with animation, Mr. Grumbine suddenly leaned forward.

"The spirits are around us now," he declared. The reporter shrank back, startled. "The spirits of men who died of delirium tremens would tempt us. Should we give way to them we would be as intoxicated, show all the effects of an afternoon drinking in the nearest saloon."

Roosevelt Forced to Run Again.

For five years the revolution will last, according to the "prophecy." Although he has refused to run again for the presidency, Roosevelt will be forced to be a candidate for re-election, but a "black hand which arises in the Southwest appears with fingers and palm in the act of grasping, and extends over the White House." Anarchy will spring up suddenly and be manifested in the House of Representatives. Banks and trust companies will fail. Riots spring up in Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City. The streets are filled with the infuriated populace, out of work, who mob the rich in their automobiles. Brothers rise against brothers. But at last, in 1912, says the seer, peace will come. It will come because all will have become prophets.

"Men will realize their divine sight, of which the eyesight is merely a physical manifestation," he declared, "their future lives will be made plain to them. If a man goes to a bank to cash a check he will not need to be identified; the teller will know at once who he is. Salesmen will become a drug on the market; a man will sit in his office in Boston and know at once whether someone in Chicago wants his goods, how much, and when to ship them. This will save carfares.

"Police will be a superfluity; all will know weeks ahead of time if they are to be robbed or if burglars are to make a call.

"Crime will eventually cease for men will learn to resist the impulses of dead criminals, which now impel them to break the laws."

Mr. Grumbine was formerly a Unitarian minister in Syracuse, N. Y., where at the age of 30 he became interested in clairvoyance. He resides with his wife and two young daughters at 24 Strathmore road.

The First Society of Universal Religion, of which he is the lecturer, holds services every Sunday at 30 Huntington avenue.

THE TEMPLE FUND SOCIETY.

A Plea for Contributions to Aid in the Great Object.

As secretary of the Temple Fund Society, I would like to present to all Spiritualists, and to the speakers, mediums and officers of societies, the need of support for this worthy movement.

The plan is to accumulate funds by membership fees of one dollar per year, for any man, woman or child, and for any spirit friend who may be so honored, and also by seances, entertainments, donations, and bequests. We expect to steadily accumulate a fund, and be able in another year to commence help for societies that may need such in order to secure their own edifice. The time is fully at hand when the Spiritualists need their own edifice consecrated to the spirits, with proper magnetic and spiritual conditions.

The membership in the Temple Fund Society is steadily growing. Indeed, it is remarkable that the interest is already so much. From every quarter comes good-will expressions and promises of early help. We look for many lists of members from various localities, and trust that no delay in obtaining these will be given. The officers of the society are full of zeal and trust. They see a magnificent success ahead for this movement.

I now write to urge all to immediate action. Please take collections for this fund, hold a meeting, solicit aid, or get a list of members in your community. Feel assured that you cannot afford to be inactive when so many are getting on a hustle in order to show the world that the Spiritualists are a zealous and earnest class of people.

We have faith in you! Address Geo. W. Kates, Cheyney, Pa., President, or yours fraternally,

"The Infidelity of Ecclesiasticism, A Menace to American Civilization." By Prof. Wm. M. Lockwood, lecturer upon physical, phyiological and psychic science. Demonstrator of the Molecular or Spiritual Hypothesis of Nature. Scholarly, masterly, triumphant, [illegible]

THE FUTURE RELIGION

Science Will Be the Controlling Factor

In a recent article in The Progressive Thinker about the wonders of modern surgery, the impression, no doubt, is left with those who are not thoroughly familiar with the facts, that might be understood. One ordinarily might think that all that was necessary to do was to turn the insane asylums, reformatory schools, and penitentiaries into operating rooms, secure the services of competent modern, surgeons, give them a saw and scalpel, and behold a transformation scene would be enacted and saints with halos about their heads would emerge from the main entrance.

I am afraid these impressions would be too utopian.

That medical science since the discovery of bacteriology, has made rapid strides for the betterment of humanity by doing work that was absolutely impossible before the plain laws of asepsis were known, is absolutely true.

That many surgeons are devoting their lives with all the study, care and aforethought that can be commanded to relieve any possible condition, is equally true.

Medical science, however, has long since decreed that the highest good it can do to humanity is the teaching of preventive medicine and hygiene.

That there is no trade, occupation or profession, that does so much for the good of humanity, that is so poorly appreciated by the common people, and even by some of the uncommon is too true indeed.

The ordinary mortal will for years disregard and break the laws of health and then after the very foundations of his body are sapped away will expect the physician to make him a new man, and when it is proven that this can not be done, will heap denunciation upon his head.

These things will soon change, however. In the future scientific religion the physician will play the prominent part and will then begin to be appreciated.

The old-time priest of the Egyptians, as also of the Jews and Greeks, was the logical physician, and the time will come when history will repeat itself, and the physician, because of his superior knowledge in these matters, will be the physician-priest.

Philosophy, like the engineer who surveys the route, for the road over which the common people sooner or later will travel, clearly indicates the course that will be followed. Here are a few modern straws that show which way the wind blows:

Prof. Jackman, of the U. of C., before the Home and Child department of the Woman's Club of Evanston, Ill., April, 1905, asserted that instead of a religion which wastes time in discussing of immortality, the human race needs a religion that will save the ignorant by teaching them how to live.

He said in the religious teaching of the child, belief in God should be taught last, and even this should be subjected to the rules of evidence.

Conan Doyle, the great author, says, "To the man who knows Gray's anatomy, life has no future terrors."

Dr. Alice B. Stockham says, "If all the parents were educated for race reproduction as they are for the practice of medicine the latter would be a less necessary science, the former more important."

Because of the fact that one-half of the deaths of the children under two years of age by ignorant but well-meaning mothers, and the administration of poisonous drugs, especially those containing morphine, which stops the coughs and diarrheas, but locks up nature's way of eliminating the poisons produced by the germs of the disease, and also the enormous amount of alcohol that is sold in the guise of patent medicines—Congress will be asked to establish a national board of health this winter, from which anyone will sooner or later be asked to secure, free of charge, literature on these vital questions. The above shows which way the wind is blowing.

What are the high-class thinking Spiritualists going to do about and for the formation of this new religion? Are they, like the Christian church, going to oppose science to the last, or will they bodily appropriate for their own glory and the good of mankind, the best science?

I would like to make a few suggestions of what they readily might do without much expense, that would add glory and honor and ultimately much permanent good to humanity.

If enough interest is manifested by a few of the leading Spiritualists who think to give this a passing notice and perhaps a reply through the columns of the Spiritualist press, I will feel encouraged to make further comments.

Why I Am a Spiritualist.

The Question Answered by Reason and Facts of Experience.

"WHEN THEY TOOK ME FROM MY BODY, I COULD SEE IT LYING THERE, STILL IT GAVE ME NO PANG TO LEAVE IT. THEY TOOK ME FROM THE EARTH PLANT TO ANOTHER PLANE OF LIFE MORE BEAUTIFUL, THEN THROUGH THAT PLANE INTO ANOTHER AND MORE BEAUTIFUL, AND FROM THAT INTO THE THIRD, WHICH WAS MORE BEAUTIFUL STILL. MIGHT A THOUSAND YEARS BE AS ONE DAY AMIDST THIS ENVIRONMENT OF EXQUISITE BEAUTY, OR MIGHT ONE DAY BE AS A THOUSAND YEARS? ONE'S SPIRIT DESIRES TO GO ON AND ON. I DESIRED TO DO SO, BUT THEY TOLD ME I COULD GO NO FURTHER AND I WOULD HAVE TO GO BACK. I DID NOT WANT TO RETURN, BUT AFTER ONE'S SPIRIT HAS RETURNED TO ITS BODY IT SEEMS TO SETTLE BACK IN CONTENTMENT."

From Pinole, Cal., comes a letter to Mr. Harding, published in No. 875 of The Progressive Thinker, evidently from one who has imparted much to others, yet has not received anything himself on which he can base an undoubting belief in spirit communication.

Has there ever been one who has not run up against this dark wall of doubt?

Let us suppose this earth is real, and that we are real spiritual beings embodied in material bodies.

Let us suppose also that there is a real ethereal world, and as the event we call death is unpreventable, that our present spirit will ascend into the ethereal world and take on a real ethereal body.

Do we not often desire to exact a great deal more from beyond the veil than we do from this side, or to doubt more of its realty, because of the contradictory evidences we have from the ethereal side of life?

How often we receive contradicting evidence on this plane of life, which, if we were to receive from the ethereal side we are often led to doubt its reality.

I may cite a case of a fire in a small place, a few miles from the point of this incident, where were given out very contradicting reports. Some of the spirits in the material said there were twelve people killed; another said eight were killed and four wounded; another said there were four killed. In a radius of a few miles I think one might safely say there were a hundred different reports of the same incident. The fact is, there could only be one truthful report. Some of the reports were, we may say, second-hand; others were deliberate lies, simply a delight in exaggeration and sensation on the part of the material spirit in giving the report. The fact in the case was, that there were two people killed.

What a great blessing it would be, if on this plane of life we could have truthful reports.

Now, we are right here on the ground, and have every means of clearly determining the facts in the matter, yet there is scarcely any truth in any thing or any body that you can believe undoubtingly without first proving it. We have the satisfaction then of proving things, and holding fast that which is good.

As with the material, so with the ethereal. How many fortunes are lost, lives sacrificed, characters ruined, destinies changed, by untruthful reports?

Have you ever met one who will deliberately lie out of sheer meanness, to get you in trouble, and cause you vexation and humiliation? Why, it is simply the make-up of this spirit in the material, whose condition is the darkness of deception and deceit.

You will meet another whose make-up is exactly the opposite, one who is all help, cheer, comfort, sacrifice, love; such spirits in the material make life worth the living; such as these are the sunshine of our lives.

As to the ethereal plane of life and the material plane of life, are they not exact counterparts? Can we expect, then, that the transition from this plane to the ethereal will make us any different? I do not see that we will be any more spiritual in the ethereal than we were in the material, except for the possible greater opportunities for spiritual development. As far as I can see we are as much spiritual here as we will be there.

I believe there are great opportunities for spiritual development on this material plane; however, the greater opportunities may be on the ethereal plane.

I say there are great opportunities for the development of the spiritual senses on this plane, and they are being improved more and more every day. One may stand awed at the grandeur of the unfolding of the beautiful philosophy. Great minds are sipping about the edge of the cup. Millions are crowding closer in search of the spring of life that they may be refreshed and find hope.

Thousands of circles are held each week. The two spirit planes come in close rapport from time to time, the fact of intercommunication being verified in thousands of cases. Thousands are being guided, helped and developed into higher spirituality day after day by the hosts of heaven.

May we not soon have colleges teaching the development of spiritual sciences, as we have them for the development of other sciences? This is not the going down of the curtain; it is the dawn of an eternal day of light and truth being manifested more clearly from day to day; in the far past the darkness of night; a little while in the past the grey fog of morning; now the rising of the sun. Brighter and brighter grows the day.

Clearer and more clearly we see the way. Unconscious may vegetation and foliage be; but if it were not for the raindrops from above they would never develop or grow into any usefulness, nevertheless it is the fact.

Unconscious we may be in some respects, and but for the powers of superior intelligence, we would remain undeveloped and utterly useless.

What is thought? Is it a force, sending forth of itself unto itself, and developing itself of itself? or does it go forth in search of a more advanced mentality and finding it, drink nourishment therefrom? We know we cannot learn of another what we already know ourselves, therefore if we learn at all we must do so from an intellect further advanced than we are. Then if we are throwing our thoughts out into space and meditating, and come back with a new thought or idea, which we develop and put into use, we know we did not get it of ourself, for we did not possess the idea, therefore we must have acquired the knowledge from some source of intelligence in space.

The point is here, our reservoirs of knowledge here, have been filled by the greater reservoirs of higher spiritual intelligence, let us therefore develop our spiritual senses to a consciousness of this fact and learn to come into a conscious communication with the higher spiritual planes of life.

Intercommunication certainly has made rapid strides along the line of progress, and where they are often contradictory and unreliable, they are often substantiated by the strongest of facts.

Taking into consideration the fact that we meet face to face with contradictions, deceptions and disappointments day after day, is it not supposable that we are not more apt to the like contradictions, deceptions and disappointments from the ethereal plane of life, as our understanding of the laws and possibilities of detecting deception are so very limited, where on this plane we come hand to hand with the material, have a fuller understanding of its laws, and can often judge from facial expressions and actions more than from words spoken, as to its truthfulness,

Yet how often meeting face to face, seeing and hearing are deceived by the clever cunning of the spirits in the material; it does not signify that because some one has lied, deceived, wronged, that there is no truth, that there is no good, or that there is no love.

That we have our loving and watchful friends in the ethereal world, I am confident, but let us know that if we are busy in this life, we are much more active in ethereal life, in whatever line of occupation it may be, and being children in the care of our heavenly guardians, we are often left in care of younger, less experienced or less competent caretakers, while our guardians are called to do work outside of the circle of ordinary conditions.

Thus the way is open for impostors, or call them what you may, they are at least those who do not have our welfare in mind, but that of accomplishing their own selfish ends.

Now to avert this, let us no longer be the infant, but develop into stronger spirituality, that we may be more sensitive to these intrusions and guard ourselves against them.

Children are often left in the care of those not old enough to realize danger or guard against it; or with incompetent persons, who are heedless, thus the child may fall out of bed and be hurt, it may play with the fire and be burnt, or carried away by some stronger power.

Let us always compare the conditions of this life with those of the ethereal, and suppose they are similar, we may more easily solve questions with which we are mystified, and the plan of life and eternity become more plain and comprehensive to us.

Why I Am a Spiritualist.

I don't know as evidence should ever be convicting, as it is not absolutely convincing; therefore to be convicting and convincing, it should be a substantiated fact.

As it is only evidence of experience which I can give, I do not expect them to be convincing, but to be weighed and accepted as testimony to the public, of substantiated facts to me.

I was early taught by good people to read the bible, to go to church, to believe in a heaven for the good and a hell for the bad.

Now in early life I commenced to think and study. I said to myself: Now that's all right, but where is heaven, and where is hell, and where are you going to draw the line between the good and the bad? Certainly there are lots of bad belonging and going to church; there are also lots of good who do not belong or go to church, so you can't draw the line there.

No one could tell me where heaven or hell was, so I simply had to draw an imaginary conclusion—there was no line or indicator to tell me which place I would go, so naturally one hopes for the best place.

In Trance to the Third Plane.

When about twelve years old and in perfect health, I was taken away one time by the spirits of the other world; they came and took me away. There seemed to be a condition about me which made me feel a desire to go, as one loving to go and see some place one has longed to see for a long time; willingly I went, and did I not enjoy that transition to the spirit world? Yes, with an enjoyment exquisite, unexplainable, and that never fades from my memory.

When they took me from my body, I could see it lying there, still it gave me no pang to leave it. They took me from the earth plane to another plane of life more beautiful, then through that plane into another and more beautiful, and from that into the third, which was more beautiful still. Might a thousand years be as one day amidst this environment of exquisite beauty, or might one day be as a thousand years? One's spirit desires to go on and on. I desired to do so, but they told me I could go no further and I would have to go back. I did not want to return, but after one's spirit has returned to its body it seems to settle back in contentment.

From that time on I knew where heaven was, for I had been there; this was no dream; dreams are different; to me it was as substantiated a fact as any could be.

It was a good many years after this before I heard or knew anything of Spiritualism, and had the opportunity to look into its philosophy. I had seen things all my life, but supposed them imaginations or mental delusions, which I fought away instead of developing the gift.

The theory of mental telegraphy may be applied in some cases of spirit intercommunication, but here is one where they cannot ring in mental telegraphy.

When a boy of about ten, I went early one morning in the grey of the morning, to an uncle's to tell him we were to thresh that day. When within a half-mile of his house, all at once I saw two big Indians. One stood up by a hickory tree; the other lay between two hickorys. Each had a gun. I was fully frightened, but I knew I must go on, so jumped over the fence and circled a big field, when all at once I saw them disappear out of sight. I never was so scared in all my life. I thought it was imagination. Twenty years after this occurred I was at a medium's house one evening; as a test the medium told me the whole affair just as it happened.

Now I had never told a soul of the incident. I had not thought of it myself for years and years, and the incident was as far from my thoughts as anything could be; that is no mental telegraphy or any other process; it is a substantiated fact of spirit etherealization and intercommunication, and I am happy to give the world the evidence in this case, in honor of the two constant guides, "Tall Oak" and "Big Foot." I could give many incidents, but the above is absolute and bars any other process namable except etherealization and intercommunication.

Coming to the vital point in the letter before referred to, that many of his relatives were Spiritualists, and that he has not heard a sound or seen a sign from any of them, at first thought would seem very strange; on the second hand it may be very simple and very comparable to certain conditions on this plane.

It is supposable that some of these friends promised to return if possible, and demonstrate in a way that would be recognized; that they have not done so, does not signify that they will not do so when the opportunity presents itself. We must consider that we do not know what our circumstances will be on this plane from one day to another. That these friends promised to come and make themselves known is very probable, that they desire to do so, I would not have the least doubt. Why they cannot, or what conditions are necessary both on the ethereal plane and on the material plane, only a message from those friends would make clear.

I don't believe there can be any set of rules or laws laid down by which it can be made a certain possibility for one leaving this plane of life to communicate with those left behind, any more than it can be done between individuals on this plane; thousands have parted on this plane promising to communicate when the opportunity presented itself. In many cases that opportunity never came until they had some of them passed to the spirit side of life, and then the opportunity came to make themselves known. Strange, isn't it, promising to write and let each other know how things are, and that opportunity never came until one had found an opportunity from the spirit side of life? It is not that communication is not possible, or that our friends do not exist beyond, or that they do not want to let us know how things are, but simply the opportunity has not presented itself.

I will cite two incidents: An acquaintance told me he had been around a great deal, and had been to many mediums; he had had some very good tests, but he says "the strange thing is, why don't my father give me a message? I never can get a word or a sign from him."

One evening the message came, one of the longest and finest I ever had, fully recognized in every detail.

Why he could not get a message from his father before I do not know, but I do know that I knew nothing of his father. This is one incident; the other has reference to my own father.

One evening my wife and little girl had retired. I was reading and my little girl of five years was sitting up in her little bed looking at the funny part of a paper. I had just seen my father standing in a corner of the room. When he disappeared I said nothing and went on reading. All at once my little girl threw up her hands, the paper fell, she fell back on her pillow and said, "Oh, mamma, I saw my curly-headed grandpa." She described him the same way, in the same place I had seen him; she only knew of her grandpa by hearing him talked of, he having been in the spirit world some years. He has not manifested since, and this incident happened almost two years ago.

We would all be glad to see and hear from our friends and relatives often, but if we cannot make the conditions in this life, how can we expect to make them on the other side?

Be not enshrouded in a cloud of doubt,
There's no darkness darker than it.
In time these problems will surely work out,
And the answer will be, to-wit,
LIFE IS ETERNAL.

THE POINT OMITTED.

Important Suggestions From a Delegate to the N. S. A. Convention.

The recent gathering at Chicago under the auspices of the N. S. A., was an earnest effort to do good work and as much of it, as the limited time and circumstances would permit. Naturally the work of the N. S. A. is gradually increasing. As time passes the field of operations enlarges and the work to be accomplished increases, not only in volume, but becomes more complex and varied.

Under our present system of representation—which is admirable in theory, but sometimes wearisome in practice, and under which each individual is entitled to a hearing, or has a constituency to represent "time" becomes an important item, and is always at a premium in our national gatherings.

The delegates coming from every section of the country, must of necessity, learn the wishes of the constituency, and prepare to pass upon the measures presented. Those not accustomed to considering and passing upon either single or complex measures, require "time" to investigate if they would act intelligently.

Others, still, who know what they want, and are clear enough in their own mind, have not the faculty of stating pointedly, in as few words as possible, the substance of their argument, and need "time."

And another class, always in evidence, whose voice is "sweet music," sometimes monopolize more "time" than is profitable to their associates; and which deters others from joining in debate or introducing measures which might prove advantageous.

It will be found that even five days as now provided for, will not be sufficient to transact, properly the business, which of necessity must be undertaken, if the N. S. A. is to become even approximately a National exponent, and representative of the phenomena and philosophy of Spiritualism.

An attempt to crowd the "bill of fare"—by introducing a multiplicity of measures—only results in confusion and hasty action; and then the "previous question" or "lay upon the table" are called into use; the time is wasted and nothing accomplished.

This is common experience and will continue to be unless some system is devised that will remove the "pressure" and enable the delegates to become more deliberative.

Under existing conditions no thoughtful delegate leaves the convention feeling quite satisfied as to results, and sometimes, indeed, quite often receive the impression that he or she has been intentionally "side-tracked," or the favorite measure frowned upon.

We are of the opinion that this feeling was quite pronounced at the close of the recent convention. It is obvious that this is not so much the fault of individuals as of the system under which we are operating.

What, then, is the remedy, if indeed one can be found?

Briefly speaking, we undertake more than we can successfully accomplish at one session, and we partially answered the above important inquiry at the recent sessions by referring to special committees certain important matters that need a thorough investigation. We do not expect a report from them until next convention, but surer and better results will follow.

One of these committees has the important matter of attempting a "definition of terms." This requires more or less of scholarly and legal research. Another committee has the important task of revising and harmonizing the text of our Rules and Usages relating to ordination; and yet, we were led to make the attempt to do this important work at the late convention; and used time that could have been given to issues that might have been properly disposed of at the time of introduction.

This is a partial, though perhaps, not complete remedy. We should enlarge upon it, however, and not attempt to pass upon matters of fundamental and far-reaching importance in a hastily prepared report or a heated and strained discussion. The fact is, that none of the older and prominent organized movements, attempt to do in convention such work as we are now doing—or rather attempting to do. There are some measures, largely clerical, that can be referred to committees with authority to act; and on the whole, much of our work can be prepared beforehand and presented to the committee in condensed or digested form.

Our National Board of Trustees has the authority to appoint committees for special purposes, requesting action and preparation in good form for consideration at the next annual convention. In this way, a large portion of the recommendations embodied in the President's report—for example—will have already been considered in committee, and the conclusions made available for use of delegates.

A further advance was foreshadowed by the committee on President's report in the recommendation that during the coming year the missionaries appointed by the National Board should devote special and continued attention to those states needing stronger associations. It was not desired by this committee to shorten this arm of the service, but concentrate upon this special work and increasing the number of missionaries if necessary; practically placing the matter of upbuilding state and local in the hands of this committee. Their report would be likely to show the cause or causes operating against the movement in certain localities. The President evidently had this particular matter bearing upon his mind and that very seriously. This was shown very plainly in his report. His recommendation was that the convention take steps to remedy the difficulty complained of.

Not knowing the condition of affairs in the several states, it was practically impossible to take any intelligent action in the convention. The suggestion of the committee, if applied, will enable the convention of 1907, perhaps, to take some definite action. The causes then can be dealt with, and not the result following. But these matters cannot be settled in convention, most of the work must be done during the year, and not left to the short session held each year.

We venture to predict that our annual gatherings will become less and less satisfactory in every way, unless this, or some similar plan is adopted. The real work of the convention should be to amend or improve upon the work accomplished, and initiate the work for the ensuing year. At the best it should only pass upon those measures concerning which the opinion of delegates may easily be determined. All fundamental matters, still in doubt, should be deferred or referred for special study, and later action.

I intended to touch upon the inquiry as to the causes or failure in certain localities to secure permanent and effective organizations, both state and local. This important inquiry was also raised in President Barrett's report. It should receive consideration; it is a question of vital importance. It could not be treated rationally in our ordinary convention proceedings. A future article will be devoted to this special subject.

Let it be understood that I am not writing from the standpoint of the critic. Have had too much experience in delegate conventions not to know and appreciate the difficulties in the way of successful work. I wish to be understood as suggesting that our present method has become unequal to the demand made upon it, and some other or larger system must be adopted. Personally we are in this work largely in the interest of organization. Not because we love organization more but chaos less.

We find no lack of inspiration and nourishment. The fountains are overflowing. The waters are crystal clear; the genius to appropriate, and ability to realize, are individual prerogatives. They are not lessened, but rather strengthened, by the desire to operate through the larger method.

R. F. LITTLE.

Seattle, Wash.

"After Her Death. The Story of a Summer." By Lilian Whiting. No mind that loves spiritual thought can fail to be fed and delighted with this book. Beautiful spiritual thought, combining advanced ideas on the finer and ethereal phases of Spiritualism, leading the mind onward into the purer atmosphere of exalted spiritual truth. A book for the higher life. Price, cloth, $1.00.

"The Romance of Jude. A Story of the Life and Times of the Nazarene and His People." Through the mediumship of Mrs. M. T. Longley. An intensely interesting book. Neatly bound in cloth and gilt. Only 50 cents.

"How to Train Children and Parents." Mrs. Elizabeth Towne takes the position that in many cases it is the parents that need the training more than the children, and advises parents to look to themselves. Twenty-five cents could not be better spent than in buying this little book. Anyone that has the care of children should read it. Price 25 cents.

"Materialization." By Mme. E. d-Esperance and Rev. B. F. Austin. Excellent. Price 10 cents.

CHILDREN'S LYCEUMS.

A Paper by Mrs. Eleanor K. Eager, Read Before the Fourteenth Annual Convention of the N. S. A.

Mr. President and Spiritualists Assembled:—The pleasure of meeting you could be excelled only by the pleasure of meeting your children, for then I should know just what Spiritualism means to you, how true to Spiritualism you are; for as a rule, children are the reflections of their guardians.

But as neither meeting could occur, the children's friend, the friend of humanity, John W. Ring, has requested me to send a paper to be read before this convention, telling of the necessity of proper education among the young. I will be brief.

It seems to me if Spiritualists are at all thoughtful and earnest, they must realize there will come a time when their places will need filling, and who will be ready to carry forward the work? Do we wish to obtain all the knowledge we can of Spiritualism, and on departing this life have no soul wiser or as happy as the truth has made us?

Organization has shown how much more can be accomplished through united than single individual effort. Who will take the places in the societies when the older Spiritualists pass on? Are your children capable? Or have they been allowed to learn at the impressionable age the errors of orthodoxy and to mingle with a class who proclaim Spiritualism "a delusion, a snare"? Do not think it strange if such be true, that your children despise your religion and philosophy.

Persons who use all their time for public approbation, tests and money, in this line of work, are not Spiritualists. They are too selfish to comprehend but a fractional part of Spiritualism. May I speak more plainly? They are not doing their duty, because Spiritualism teaches parents to be wise and loving.

"Oh," some one says, "really, I can't explain, I can't teach my children understandingly about Spiritualism. They are too young," etc. Are there no lyceums in your town where these principles are imparted? If not, why not? Had you been instructed in Spiritualism during childhood, wouldn't your lives to-day be a little different, in a measure superior?

Some of our best workers always visit the lyceums of the societies for which they are engaged, and where there are no lyceums, efforts are made to organize such. With the aid of the lyceum Guide Books, parents where isolated from Spiritualist societies, can have home lyceums.

I have been asked to remind the Spiritualists, and all in general, of the importance of affording proper food for unfolding minds, instead of cramming minds with ideas. My observations show that the majority of children has been starved rather than crammed with spiritual food. To provide suitable books for children's comprehension of Spiritualism constitutes a field of work needed. Too often children are allowed to go wherever there is an attraction, while parents wait until dark and attend seances or lectures. But cramming and starving are both unhealthy states. The home or lyceum which takes a subject once a week, necessitating study, thought and preparation during the intervening time and requires at least one statement or remark from each one, does more than the class that has questions and answers prepared which are read hastily or committed parrot-like to memory.

We want our boys and girls to be kind, clean, honest,—in a word, Spiritualists, and to be able to state intelligently why they are. In closing, I will quote the retiring superintendent's words, "Give the child something of which to think, encourage his thinking and his expression; then we shall have souls unfolded into sweet and beautiful life."

THE CAUSE IN BALTIMORE, MD.

It Has Attracted an Intelligent Class of People.

Mr. and Mrs. Kates, on the 26th of this month close a three months' engagement with the First Spiritual Church of Baltimore, and there is a general regret that their engagement is no longer.

Their presentation of Spiritualism, both in the lectures and message-giving, has been conducted in keeping with the established dignity of our platform, and has been characterized by a refined spirituality. Our own people have felt it, and many strangers have been attracted to our meetings, because, as we have learned, there has been nothing in our services which offended their sensibilities, and there has been much that appealed to their religious instinct and desire for instruction.

Among the strangers who have come within our gates have been not a few members of orthodox churches, including a Christian minister, and students from the Maryland University. We have always kept on hand a quantity of tracts for distribution, thereby giving strangers something to read and think about in connection with what they have heard. It has been the general policy of our church to have no messages on Sunday evening, reserving them for our Thursday evening meeting, but Mrs. Kates gives spirit messages with so much feeling and grace, and with such clear and discriminating diction, as to detract nothing from the lecture which precedes, but rather to keep up the interest and the spiritual thought, so this restriction was, in her case, waived.

We have in no way interfered with their work, and they have thoroughly appreciated the confidence of our board of trustees in turning over to them the full freedom of the platform.

Socially, we have found Mr. and Mrs. Kates very pleasant company. Warm hearts and sumptuous tables have welcomed them to the homes of our people, where "Silver Pine" has lastingly endeared herself. Our best wishes will go with these good workers, for we feel sure that wherever they go, the purifying influences of the spirit will go with them and benefit others as it has us.

Spiritualists Responsible.

The observing must everywhere notice the disposition of the churches of different denominations to combine their labors on public occasions. A few years ago each denomination seemed ambitious to war on its differing neighbor. Sometimes they would come together for "protracted meetings" as they were called but they were sure to quarrel when time came for division of the spoils. We have some vivid recollections of these pious contests, frequently closely approximating to fisticuffs.

Now all is changed. The pressure from without has enlarged their love of each other, and all ecclesiastics now desire to extinguish the Spiritualists, who, aided by advancing knowledge, are mainly responsible for this terrible pressure. As the principal instruments of peace between the quarrelsome sects Spiritualists are entitled to great credit.

A Grand Good Thing.

A novelty has been introduced in the religious services of the Central Baptist Church, W. 42d street, New York, Rev. Dr. Goodchild, pastor, in the form of a woman whistler. Three times at intervals between reading the scripture and the sermon, the accomplished musician warbles her new-fangled melody to the delight of the worshiping audience. The Reverend-Doctor has issued an announcement setting forth that the new musical attraction will be employed to enliven the exercises, and to draw better attendance on divine service.

Some years ago the dear sisters' ankles were displayed at the bottom of a curtain, and the highest bidder was awarded the company of their owner to supper. This at evening church entertainments to raise the needful to meet the church expenses.

Whistling by the church sisterhood will be a novelty for a time, as was the ankle show, but can a church be permanently sustained by vaudeville exhibitions?

Bees Mourn at Keeper's Bier.

In the Record-Herald of Chicago, of Nov. 13, in the form of a special from its Iowa correspondent, appears the following:

"Des Moines, Nov. 12.—A most remarkable demonstration that the honey bee has affections occurred at Wall Lake, Iowa, when Oliver J. Seer, a pioneer apiarist died. It had been his custom to move among the bees without covering his hands or face. The bees followed him about the yard and into his workshop with never an offer to injure him. In the winter when their supply ran low he fed them sugar syrup and rye flour. He covered their hives with blankets to keep them warm. From the day of his death there was unrest in the colony of bees. On the day of his funeral the bees swarmed about the hearse and thousands followed it to the cemetery. Several swarms of bees deserted their hives and were found in trees in the cemetery near the grave of their former owner."

That statement is either a great canard or a great miracle. The Record-Herald has not gained the reputation of a "yellow journal," but is it possible the little honey bee has given such evidence of intellect and affection, and are they capable of such exhibitions of sorrow? If true we should cast about us and see how we are related to other forms of lowly life.

We have positive evidence of the dog's attachment to man, and his grief at his master's death, even dying on the grave above him, as evidence of his love. If similar sentiments can be inspired in the bee, then we insist this awakened instinct will survive its dissolution, and be a companion of man in the immortal state, as we earnestly believe is the case with the dog and horse, as may be the case with all sentient life.

The Conflict in the Theological World.

The conference of the Chicago branch of the American Bible League, says the Chicago Advance, Congregational, marks another step in the conflict in the theological world. The discussions in this somewhat notable gathering revolved largely around the question whether or not we have a Bible we can believe. And inasmuch as the heaviest attacks have been made by critics of the Old Testament, the battle was waged against them and in defense of the first part of the Bible. But the real issue or main issue in the theological controversy of the day, continues the Advance, is larger than this. IT IS A QUESTION WHETHER OR NOT WE HAVE ANYTHING MORE THAN A MAN-MADE RELIGION. The creeds of Christendom have rested on the postulate that we have a God-given religion. This postulate is now questioned. The position practically assumed by the leaders of the advanced thought is, that we have only such religious ideas, conceptions or truths as the human race has developed out of its own experience and progress. It is admitted that from the Jews has come the best body of religious truth now before the world. But this, it is held, is simply due to the fact that the earlier Jews had a genius for religion. The Greeks had a genius for art, and they gave us the best in painting, statuary, poetry and eloquence. The Romans had a genius for war and government, and they conquered the world and gave it laws which last to this day. So the Jews with their genius for religion gave us a superior system. * * * But most important of all, the new theology, and by this term we mean the real article, raises the question whether or not we have a Christian religion at all. If God is not in it, or at least only as a philosophical and subjective conception and not as a real agency, WHERE IS THE RELIGION, EXCEPT IN MERE NAME? Practically this so-called theology reduces the whole religious problem to one of moral reform. Thus in numerous ways the NEW THEOLOGY IS SHIFTED FROM THE DIVINE-HUMAN STANDPOINT TO A MERELY HUMAN STANDPOINT. In fact, it is ceasing to be a theology and is becoming an ill-defined and confused system of reform. It is aggressive only in its opposition to the old. As yet its constructive ability is largely confined to promises of what it is going to do.

This is certainly advanced thought from a leading Congregational organ, and is confirmation "strong as holy writ," that the old faith is slowly gliding away, and that a new is to take its place. The Advance, however, widely errs in crediting the Jews with giving us "the best body of religious truth now before the world." Admitting the erroneous claim that the Jews were a great people—a nation in fact, a statement which cannot be maintained when forged history is pushed aside, and taking their own alleged account as authority, their religious ideas were but the reflex of Babylonian thought, identical in every respect with that of Phenicia, whose religion was also borrowed from their Babylonian captors.

As Wrong Retires, Right Triumphs.

Whilst clouds, darkness and general gloom are settling down on the churches, and the members are filled with dismay, the skies brighten with Spiritualists. Never did the future seem so hopeful as now. Words of encouragement come from every quarter. The societies, subordinate, state and National, have awakened to new life, and are putting forth their best efforts to extend their usefulness. The speakers are all busy, with engagements far in advance. New acquisition of members are of weekly occurrence.

Since attention has been turned to the guile of faker mediums, there is a determination to suppress them at any cost. They are not of us, but are barnacles who are trying to fatten on our prosperity. As they recede their places are taken by the genuine mediums who are everywhere welcomed with delight. Thanks to them. The choicest of heaven's favors are theirs. The angel world looks on with gladness that through them it is possible to communicate with the loved of earth, with no frauds to distort or lead astray.

Let all renew with ardor their efforts to fill our ranks with honest, faithful, truthful members. As the evil recedes let the good, the faithful and the earnest come in singly, by the dozen or score to take the places of the retired, and still farther to augment our ranks.

The vessel filled to the brim with filth must be emptied and cleansed before it is refilled with food for human needs, so error in church and social organizations must be exposed and destroyed to make place for the better. The husbandman enters the forest ax in hand, and with blow on blow fells the giant trees, which he burns, then fits the fallow ground for seed, and, later, a harvest to supply his needs. So the reformer must root out the false and vile to make the good and the true flourish, that he may garner the best fruit.

He who condemns the exposure of vice and crime has little desire for the good. Freedom cannot flourish when the people are in chains. Manacles and slavery are not the complement of freedom, any more than is fraudulent mediumship a supplement to a higher and better life.

The glory of science is that it is freeing the soul, breaking the mental manacles, getting the brain out of bondage, giving courage to thought—filling the world with mercy, justice and joy.—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Prehistoric.

Coldwater, Mich., Nov. 14.—Clark Burch and L. R. Brooks to-day found two eight-foot skeletons, apparently of prehistoric giants, deep in a sand pit near here. They also found faint ornaments, supposedly cut from mastodon teeth.

These finds will become more frequent and more valuable as time advances. To this date only very limited researches below the immediate surface of the earth have been made, and it is generally by accident any discoveries relating to ancient life on the globe is now known. As the earth is penetrated more largely and at greater depths the past will be more fully comprehended. Geology dates back, as a science, but little more than one hundred years, and yet its revelations have changed the entire thought of the world. Indeed, the knowledge it imparted has carried back the age of the earth to countless millions of years, instead of to a few thousand years, as our so-called sacred books would lead us to believe.

And man has been a denizen of earth through innumerable upheavals, cataclysms and eruptions which have many times changed the entire aspect of nature, while the inhabitants have sunk below the surface, a very few surviving, who became the progenitors of a new world groping for ages in savagery, finally making its way to civilization and enlightenment. Shelley comprehended this idea when, at the age of 18, a student at Oxford, he wrote near a hundred years ago, though grossly exaggerated:

"There is not one atom of earth
But once was living man;
Not the minutest drop of rain
That hangeth in its thinnest cloud,
But flowed in human veins."

Unrest in the Churches.

"That there is a spirit of restlessness in the religious world cannot be denied. It may not be called dissatisfaction. Church-goers are unsatisfied with the spiritual food supplied them. It is not a doctrinal nor a denominational fault, for, if we may credit the utterances of preachers and teachers who are, or ought to be, in touch with church affairs, it is to be found in all churches and concerning all creeds. Evidence of this prevalent and increasing unsatisfaction is found in the springing up of new religious and philosophical cults all over the country. * * *

"Nor is this unrest, this unsatisfaction, confined to the pews. It has invaded, and is playing havoc with, the pulpit. Every day brings its story of this or that prominent minister who has abandoned the ministry and turned his atention to other pursuits. One goes on the stage, another takes to teaching, while others turn to literature or to money-making—each seeking in his own way a broader field of work, or at least a field where he hopes to find relief from the unsatisfaction that his pulpit brought him."

Thus discourses the Woman's National Daily, just started into being at St. Louis, with promise of an unparalleled future. And it announces a fact in regard to the churches common to all observers. Education and science have undermined its foundations, and it is certain to fall, and give place to a better order of things. Consult its history with open eyes, then force and fraud mark its every page.

Throw aside inherited opinion, and notice the bribe held out to the believer. Believe Jesus is the son of God, and you shall receive eternal life with the joys of heaven. Deny that Jesus is your redeemer then damnation is your doom. A bribe on the one hand a threat of woe on the other.

The world is getting too wise to accept either, hence the maudlin tears of the preacher, and the certain doom of their faith.

Only One Remove From Barbarism.

Rev. L. W. Madden, of Topeka, Kan., pastor of the Cumberland Presbyterian church of that city, is reported to have declared in a sermon on the evening of November 11:

"If preaching against sin was stopped in Kansas for thirty years the state would revert to barbarism."

That man of God had just declared, when he made that remarkable assertion in vindication of his preaching, that, "Dancing is the stepping-stone to hell." If his audience accepted that long-since exploded teaching as true they are hardly one remove from barbarism now. Such preaching will not aid in their civilization. Hell is a relic of the barbaric ages which has intruded itself into modern thought, while preachers of the Madden ilk keep alive its sulphurous flame.

All But Prayer Is Lost.

His Holiness, the Pope, has directed his Vicar General to order special prayers for his enemies; "this," he says, "being the only means left in the sorrowful condition of the church, now fought and oppressed by many of her own children who have become her enemies."

"A few centuries ago this august vicegerent of God had the holy Inquisition with rack, and stake, and firebrand, aided by a standing army and all the munitions of war, to enforce his will. Now he confesses, "prayers are all that is left." Blighted hopes, blasted prospects, a ruined cause that civilization has doomed to oblivion! How are the mighty fallen! Verily, "Time at last makes all things even."

More Than Prayers Are Needed.

The following from an editorial paragraph in the Dublin, Ga., Times, relates startling facts which sophistry cannot overcome:

Next Sunday, Nov. 11, concerted prayer will be offered in the Southern Presbyterian church for more ministers. The church faces the proposition of having 3,156 churches and only 841 ministers to serve them.

Nearly three out of every four Presbyterian churches throughout the South without preachers. Is this because they have ceased sending the babies, not ordained for heaven, to an endless hell?

THE NEW RELIGION.

Religion a Good Word—The Atheistic Religion.

Number II.

There have been so many bad things done in the name of religion, under the mask of piety and devotion, that thousands of honest people have come to hate the name religion; but in the true sense, it is a necessity, an element in the nature and constitution of man. We need not fear this word because it has been perverted through human ignorance and often been the synonym of superstition and abominations of various kinds.

Rightly understood, applied, interpreted, Religion is the philosophy of right thinking, doing, living. We do not advocate the use of the term as a passport to popular favor, and would scorn to use it if it carried a false idea. No other word can be substituted in place of this familiar, wholesome, reasonable word.

Viswed from the standpoints of availability, etymology, familiarity and trustworthiness, as a definition and expression of our duty and responsibility, there is simply not in the English language a substitute for the word Religion.

It is used of mortal relations and duties, and by the structure of the word it has reference to better things, binding us to the higher nobler, existence which is desirable and creditable for all.

There are facts and principles; ethics and morals in the province of religion deep enough for the profound thinker and simple enough for the superficial observer.

The New Religion is in agreement with science and nature, and gives confidence in the final triumph of truth. It leads the van in religious thought and freedom of opinion, to emancipate the slaves in bondage to soul-cramping creeds and fear of death; it teaches that death is as natural and full of hope as birth. It gives hope to the fallen, the degraded, the vicious, the ignorant. It maintains that man is injured physically, mentally, morally, spiritually by his evil thoughts and deeds and must suffer until the injury is repaired. It denies the doctrine of blood atonement and pardon of sin, and locates the source of evil in man's own imperfections; affirms that each person must arise and be his or her own savior; that sin and wrong doing must be abandon and atoned for by personal suffering and expiation before one can attain complete happiness.

The mind and spirit fall into the darkness of error if not fed with wisdom. We must acquire knowledge by experience and progression in labors of love that yield pleasure and satisfaction and redeem us from the hell of ignorance.

True wisdom is slow of growth and must be considered from every point of view. Salvation from wrong, error, ignorance, suffering must be outwrought in our own nature.

The whole human race, beyond infancy, are religious—that is, all think right and do right in some respects; in some degree; to some extent; which is religion, pure and simple. Notwithstanding wrong doing, the opposite may sometimes preponderate.

There is not one rational person who can live up to his or her conception of right, truth and duty in all points; yet all can and do pursue the right course in some degree, in some particular, to find it yields satisfaction or happiness.

People of all grades and conditions must and do practice religion to fulfill the law of life which is growth of spirit. We will always find more to learn, more to discover and room for improvement. A person is doing well if so much as one-half his or her conduct in life is a success, in accord with conceptions of right living. A person can always aspire for higher achievement in ethics and its attainment in a fair degree satisfies the mind and soul for the time.

Through imperfections constant approach is made to perfection or harmony. The power that pushes things forward in ceaseless activity is within each individual struggling against imperfect environments to substitute harmony for discord.

Whatever opposes our individual desires or oppresses us we call evil; but the evil to us may lead to ultimate good in some way. We may look on death as the culmination of all evil, yet without it there could not be a spirit life.

Wrong flourishes because man is imperfect and ignorant. But the brute, the savage is dying out of human nature, and humane qualities are taking its place.

The evolutionary movement is slow, yet the Right will triumph and to do good will be the choice of human souls. A child looking at the hands on the dial of the clock says they stand still, yet they sweep over the hours as the sun moves in the heavens. Though the storm clouds may be dark and gloomy, the sun shines above them.

In some beautiful day when we know better how to live this earthly life in the light of knowledge, we will find that happiness springs from doing right and being good for the value of the joy it brings.

True religion dwells in true nobility of character, built upon eternal principles as wide as the world. It teaches the harmonious promotion of mankind, by the science of right living. It feeds the hungry souls with the bread of life, leads the thirsty to living fountains; plucking away the thorns, it plants along our paths the flowers of undying affection. It comes to each of us personally pleading with us to pay the price of self denial, avoid wrong doing, purify our thoughts and surmount the obstacles that retard our progress.

Our religion is not embodied in a creed or theology; it does not prescribe ceremonials and rituals; yet it propounds definite doctrines; insists on an ethical code; recognizes natural law, science, philosophy, and asserts the supremacy of true principles.

Our religion is no fossilized system; not a belief, but a visible fact, a slow growth of the spiritual nature. In the realm of thought it is perfect truthfulness; in the realm of conduct it is practical righteousness; and if we fail to utilize it for substantial benefits we lose its very essence.

We trust in the application of this religion generally to the reformation of mankind, the removal of crime and the uplifting of all who receive and practice its teachings. It comes to put out the forces of hell and open the gates of heaven. It reaches for hearts weary and sore from the conflicts of life, to comfort and strengthen them.

It comes to us bringing a sweet benediction of peace and love. It is the hope of the world; the guiding star of destiny; the ever flowing stream of eternal truth.

Now I have treated my subject in its personal aspect, as it applies to the individual life and character; and there is not a creedal statement in it—nothing on which a code of faith can be built. I leave the readers to judge if I have sustained my proposition that Atheists are religious and have a religion.

The Danger Signal!

It Should Be Kept Before Spiritualists.

THE FOLLOWING ARTICLE THAT HAS BEEN GOING THE ROUNDS OF THE PRESS, INDICATES THAT A MOVE IS TO BE MADE TO "REGULATE" SPIRITUALISM. THAT FEELING, WE REGRET TO SAY, IS ARISING IN ALL THE LARGE CITIES WHERE A BLATANT FRAUDULENT ELEMENT, UNDER THE NAME OF MEDIUMSHIP, HAS BEEN FLEECING THE PEOPLE MORE OR LESS FOR YEARS. IN LOS ANGELES, CAL., ONE WHOLE PAGE OF A SUNDAY PAPER IS DEVOTED TO EXPLOITING THE "GIFTS" AND "POWERS" OF THE WORST SET OF PRETENTIOUS "MEDIUMISTIC" FAKERS THAT EVER EXISTED. TO "REGULATE" SPIRITUALISM WOULD INTERFERE MORE OR LESS WITH THE INALIENABLE RIGHTS OF HUNDREDS OF HONEST MEDIUMS WHO ARE DOING THE WORK OF THE ANGEL WORLD. IF THE FRAUDS, CHARLATANS, AND TRICKSTERS THAT HAVE FASTENED THEMSELVES ON OUR CAUSE, COULD BE "REGULATED," THEN EVERY HONEST SPIRITUALIST WOULD HEARTILY ENDORSE THE SAME. BUT THE HONEST MEDIUMS MUST BE PROTECTED, ENCOURAGED AND SUSTAINED AT ALL HAZARDS. HOWEVER, THIS CONTEMPLATED ACTION TO "REGULATE" OUR CAUSE ARISES WHOLLY ON ACCOUNT OF THE FAKER ELEMENT THAT HAS FASTENED ITSELF LIKE BARNACLES ON OUR CAUSE. THINK OF ELSIE REYNOLDS, THE MATERIALIZING MEDIUM, BEING EXPOSED REPEATEDLY, AND EVERY TIME DRESSED IN ARTIFICIAL TOGGERY POSING AS A SPIRIT, DECEIVING THE INSATIATE GULLIBLES—IT IS SUCH DESPICABLE CONDUCT AS THAT WHICH GIVES RISE TO THE THOUGHT IN THE MINDS OF THE PUBLIC TO "REGULATE" SPIRITUALISM.

IMPORTANT MOVEMENT AGAINST FRAUD IN MEDIUMSHIP.

Society Formed to Prevent Fraud by Mediums and Psychics—Would License Genuine Hypnotists and Others of Same Class.

New York.—The formation of the Psychic Investigation Society, intended to prevent fraud by so-called hypnotists, Spiritualistic mediums and mind readers who ply their vocation for money, was announced to-day.

"All the founders of this society have had varied experiences with hypnotists, mediums, mind readers, mental scientists, Christian Scientists, clairvoyants, fortune-tellers, psychics and similar practitioners," said President Deutsch.

Alleged Fraud Denounced.

"Some have decided that fraud was practiced more or less obviously. ALL ARE OPEN-MINDED. ALL FEEL THAT SOMEWHERE IN THIS MAZE OF OCCULTISM THERE IS A PATH THAT LEADS TO POSITIVE KNOWLEDGE AND A DEGREE OF ENLIGHTENMENT BEYOND AND ABOVE THE MERELY MATERIAL AND PHYSICAL. We have therefore organized with the object of driving the frauds and the charlatans out of the business.

"There are fraudulent practitioners making between $20,000 and $30,000 a year by deluding people in this city under some 'psychic' or 'occult' pretense. We estimate that $200,000 represents the sum obtained yearly by honest and dishonest mediums, healers, etc.

Wants Mediums Licensed.

"Thousands of people, particularly women, whose honesty of purpose deserves all the guardianship the state can throw about it, consult these Spiritualist, hypnotic or clairvoyant advisers. Because of their number and the amount expended for such advice and the possibilities for good or evil we believe that such practitioners should be examined and if worthy licensed just as the state licenses physicians, dentists and lawyers."

The plan is to regulate hypnotism, Spiritualism, mind-reading and to a degree fortune-telling and clairvoyancy as the professions of medicine, dentistry and law are regulated. If it is obvious that practitioners have no such power as they claim and are accepting money for their services they will be prosecuted under the statutes forbidding the obtaining of money under false pretenses.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

An Answer to the Views of an Opponent.

A writer in a recent issue stated that after many years of advocacy of Woman's Suffrage she came to recognize that the realization of this reform would be a great misfortune to womankind, and gives the following reasons therefor: "Because the plan is patterned after European Socialism, and goes on to explain that Karl Marx advanced equal suffrage and free-love.

I wish to state that even if he did, what has that to do with allowing one half of the race no voice in the making of the laws by which they are governed? And are there not many women in this country with large property holdings, that have the spirit of their forefathers and believe it an injustice to be taxed without representation? Or are they so deficient mentally that they by right should be classed in the category with paupers and idiots? I think that when we think of our dear mothers and sisters, such an imputation should arouse a feeling of resentment.

Are not women in this country occupying responsible positions in all branches of services, on an equal footing with men? And to advert to this so-called free-love, one must not confuse this term with free lust, which is its opposite. Free love in reality is high, noble and pure. It does not sanction depraved intermingling of the sexes, but simply means that as long as a couple can live together as man and wife in harmony, well and good; but when such relationship ceases to exist, it is not their duty to live together for years in a state of endless strife.

Do not our divorce laws uphold this same theory? And once more I ask, what has this to do with equal suffrage?

She says that in her many years' work in the slums of New York, she discovered Socialism at the bottom of many evils.

The Encyclopedia Britannica states that the ethics of socialism are identical with those of Christianity.

I believe the Golden Rule says: "Do unto others as ye would have them do unto you." St. James said, "Pure religion and undefiled consists in visiting the fatherless and widows in their afflictions, and keeping yourself unspotted from the world."

If Socialism on its ethical side follows the above injunction, it would seem to be as clear to an ordinary individual, how it would degrade the unfortunates in the New York slums, as a clouded sky. O, prejudice, thou art the evil one!

She says that evil women would vote and would be compelled to vote for unprincipled politicians, and our wives and mothers would have to mingle with them at the polls; and also that women cannot risk the taint of politics.

If, as this indicates, women as a whole are morally better than men, would they not desire to use their franchise to destroy the liquor traffic and other evils from which society suffers to-day? I am not from Missouri, but nevertheless you will have to show me. S. L. FALL.

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER

We Remind you that the SPIRIT OF THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER NEVER SLEEPS! There is need of a WATCHMAN and WE ARE IN THE TOWER and ON DUTY for the best interest of TRUE SPIRITUALISM!

Another Announcement!

In Reference to the Remarkable Works of Andrew Jackson Davis.

A letter from Dr. Davis indicates that a change has been made in the price of a full set of his remarkable works. They will be furnished per set when republished at $20 instead of $30, as heretofore announced. There are thousands who ought to have a set of these books. Their publication at an early day depends on the number of subscribers that can be secured. His books are a fundamental part of Spiritualism; the history of Spiritualism can not be written without them.

Since last week, the following subscribers to a full set of the Doctor's works have come to hand:

A. J. BROOKS, MONROE, ALA., PHILLIPS, SILVERTON, ORE. WE W. S. BASSETT, LOS ANGELES, KNOW THERE ARE AT LEAST 200 CAL.; EUGENE POHL, SANTA ANA, IN THE UNITED STATES, WHO CAL.; MRS. D. L. THE HEAVEN IDEA.

Whence Our Ideas of Heaven were Obtained.

The heaven idea was carved in stone in tombs of dead Egyptians as history and facts before B. C. 3800. Searching to find the origin of our ideas of heaven, I found their trail through the New Testament, bible and back to the Book of the Dead, or records found in the pyramids and other tombs of the dead in Egypt.

I found that Heaven, to ancient Egyptians along the Nile river, began at the place to which the sun was vertical six hours of the sun after the noon hours in Egypt. Six hours of the sun west from the Nile river in Egypt is ninety degrees of longitude west. The mouth of the Nile is near 30 degrees east longitude. Six hours of the sun west would be 90 degrees of the sun west, or at 60 degrees W. longitude.

The idea of Heaven might have begun and calculation made at Babylon or at 45 degrees E. longitude. This would place the sun at 45 W. longitude, also giving about the same results according to the place of landing west from Egypt at the distance of six hours of the sun after noon at Cairo or Babylon west.

Some of the Egyptian gods were great travelers. They went up the Nile until the sun was vertical above them, then they traveled west over land and water into Heaven. Keeping this boat under the sun after traveling west six hours of the sun, or ninety degrees of our longitude, some of the travelers came to a great river flowing a long distance in the path of the sun. This great river had strange, great and fearsome animals. We call this river the Amazon.

I can trace the journey of the old gods of Egypt mid the ancient ruins along the Amazon river and its branches.

Heaven to Egyptians began at about 45 to 60 degrees west longitude, and included all America. We obtained our ideas of Heaven from old Egyptians. A. F. HILL.

ATTENTION, LYCEUM WORKERS.

To all lyceums and their noble band of workers, we send a loving greeting: We feel that in order to further the grand work begun by our friend and brother, Mr. John W. Ring, we must get into line, and be counted. I earnestly ask the secretary of each lyceum, or any society desirous of forming a lyceum, to write me fully the condition of their school—how many pupils, the average attendance, the text book used, the song book, and method of carrying on sessions. There are three standard Lyceum Guides—Andrew Jackson Davis's, Emma Rood Tuttle's and the British Manual. Which of these do you use? Tell me also who among your children are the best fitted as leaders and missionaries in lyceum work? I want to meet them, if only on paper. I want to know what is most needed, and what they can do. Let me hear from you soon.

"Lyceum, Lyceum, march, march ahead.
Never dead, file ahead!
Come, come, come!"

Spirit Worship the Religion of the World

A Lecture by Mrs. May A. Price, of Washington, D. C.

"ALL FEEL THE PROMPTING OF AN INVISIBLE FORCE, AN INTELLECTUAL WARNING OR APPROBATION. THIS INNER CONSCIOUSNESS SEEMS TO BE SHARED BY ALL, AND IS TANGIBLE TO EACH; SOMETHING THEY CAN GRASP AND HOLD, YET FIND IT HARD TO EXPLAIN IN WORDS TO OTHERS. THE AFRICAN TRIBES HAVE DIFFERENT THINGS TO REPRESENT THE POWER THAT BRINGS DIVINE GIFTS, PROTECTS AND HELPS IN ALL THINGS OF LIFE, AND CEREMONIES TO INVOKE THE AID OF THE FETICH. AND WHEN THE PRAYER IS NOT ANSWERED, THEY THINK THEY HAVE OFFENDED THE DEITY OR FETICH, WHICH MEANS THE SAME, AND SEEK TO APPEASE IT. NOW, IF IT CAN BE OFFENDED AND APPEASED, IT IS AN INTELLIGENCE WHICH THE OBJECTS REPRESENT, AN INVISIBLE SPIRITUAL POWER. AND THE CATHOLICS WHO CARRY THEIR BEADS, SACRED RELICS, BONES OF SAINTS, AND OFFER PRAYERS OVER THEM, YET RECOGNIZE THE ONE GOD, THE FATHER OF ALL, AS THE INTELLIGENCE THAT IS CAPABLE OF BEING PLEASED AND SHOWING FAVORS, OR OF ANGER AND PUNISHING, IS VERY LITTLE AHEAD OF THE AFRICAN IN THE WILDERNESS OF HIS NATIVE HABITATION. EACH WATCHING THE OTHER WOULD NOT KNOW OF THE BELIEF BACK OF THE SYMBOL, OR THAT BOTH WORSHIPPED AN UNSEEN SPIRITUAL FORCE."

We are to consider the various forms of religious beliefs. There has never been a former time when so many kinds of religion existed as are found to-day. We can trace back historic records and define religion expressed in worship given to idols, as heathenism. We catch a glimpse of a true belief in a God, or Supreme Power, in these records, but they only tell half the story. The great spiritual world has been dealing with all people in all ages, and back of forms and ceremonies has been a true spiritual power expressed in revelations.

The Christian religion is to-day the most crude of all. It has ever been misnamed, for Christ, the great teacher of spiritual truths, never taught what Christianity has been teaching to the world. He was once an Oriental student, and gave to his followers the true relations of the spiritual and the material world; taught psychic phenomena as the laws of nature, not as an unknowable condition of life, but as natural results from known causes and conditions. In fact, he was the greatest teacher of Natural Science the world had at that time produced. To-day we would say, Spiritual Science, for he taught the law of spirit manifest in all life as a controlling law, and called that power "God."

Christian Scientists have grasped a little of his meaning and of the magnetic laws operated by the mind, and so claim to be the only true expounders of the light he tried to give to the world. But New Thoughtists have gone a step farther. Christian Science ignores the law of matter or material things, only recognizing the spirit or the invisible yet tangible power. New Thought recognizes the divinity in material law, and that spirit and matter must blend and harmonize; work together to produce the perfect manifestation.

The power in nature that produces the expansion or growth and perfection of material objects, is the spirit within—a power and intelligence operating according to fixed laws. This power they call "God." It includes all mental laws as the working out and expression of the inner consciousness of the soul, which is God manifest in man. It is the same belief that Christ expressed when he said: "I and my Father are one," and "I in myself am nothing, but it is the Father worketh through me."

All nature was God, the spirit power in all, as each was a part of the one. Therefore, God was all, in all, creator of all, Father of all. It was the same thought expressed in the catechisms of the various churches, which said that God was a spirit, was in all places, and in all things. It used to puzzle me to understand that statement when I believed God to be a personal being, like a man, but with the broader, fuller, grander conception of God as Spirit—not A SPIRIT—I could easily see the truth in the orthodox statement, and that it was expressing the same idea, even if it was not understood by them.

The great Oriental teachers have been teaching the oneness of spirit life as manifest in all life; that the spiritual life was the true life; that all material conditions must be subservient to the spiritual law; that further back than time is known to be, God was, all life was. We are manifesting to-day in our present expression because we always were, and because we always were, we always will be. That we pass from this expression to a higher spiritual condition; from that to a still higher. Fuller revelations came to some who have learned to live above the material plane, and they tell of the progress of the soul till it is once more absorbed in the great spiritual life, losing none of its acquired knowledge, but gaining all that all life has acquired, and is a part of the great light and over-ruling power called "God."

In our modern teaching we find the same thought expressed, for when we stand at an open grave the words are always, "The spirit returns to the God who gave it." Each in its own language tells the same belief that the body assimilates again with the elements from which it originates, while the immortal part of man becomes a part of the spiritual world. There has been no time, and no class, or race of people on earth that did not have manifestations of spirit phenomena. None but have had some who claimed to receive revelations from the invisible world or the supreme power or intelligence, belonging to a higher spiritual condition than man existed in, while in a physical body. Yet they claim a relation to this spiritual power and intelligence because of an inner consciousness of soul, that communes, receives revelations from the all-powerful element of expressions.

The few who claim to have gained the unfoldment of the psychic consciousness till they have come in touch with the higher spirit power all speak of the great light. Each tells of a similar experience, yet they did not know at the time what others have learned, and that each had gained the same revelation, proving that spiritual truth does not belong to one person or to one people, and that some tangible power gives a knowledge of what is considered by some as unknowable. Thales declared "All things are full of the Gods." He believed that there was a soul force in water, producing all the phenomena in nature, and that all were eventually resolved back to the original elements.

The Brahman lights a fire on his altar at the rising of the sun, and prays, "May the sun quicken our minds." He expresses, the best he can, his belief in the principle of power we call "God" as a power of light and wisdom which may give to his inner consciousness words of divine revelation. He believes that later he will lose his self-hood in the Eternal Self. It all illustrates a belief in the spiritual illumination and the one-ness of spirit life; a something within man that receives light or wisdom from without through a power not belonging to the physical senses.

Kant expresses a belief in a consciousness that tells us what duty is—what we should do. The Papua squats before his Karwar, clasps his hands over his forehead, and asks himself whether what he is going to do is right or wrong. His kneeling before his altar expresses a belief in the deity without, but the answer comes to him from within; therefore it is this innermost consciousness that hears and directs him.

Religious knowledge has been defined "as that which gives a man a cleared insight into himself." All deal with that which is within, yet relate it to a spiritual universe which is without. It is hard to think of anything without individualizing it. It has been discovered that the natives of Australia believed in an Omnipotent Being, creator of heaven and earth. His mode of creating was by breathing. To create the earth he said: "Earth, come forth," and he breathed, and the earth was created. Thus he created all things. And the Bible tells us God breathed into man the breath of life. They used the breath to illustrate the invisible spiritual power, and expressed a belief in the intelligence back of the power by making it a personal being. They also believed in an evil power as a personality and greatly feared it, or him.

Other savage tribes, among whom are some of the American Indians, worship all that is created, as well as the creative power, or the shade of it, expressing a belief in a soul in all things which remained after the outer or visible form passed away, recognizing a spirit within all, a part of the Great Spirit, and therefore deserving of a certain amount of veneration. The sun seemed to them the fullest expression of the Great Spirit, and therefore they gave gifts or offered sacrifices to it.

The Melanesians believe in an unseen power called mana; not a person, but a power which acts for good or evil. This is distinct from physical power, yet at times acts as a physical force, which brings them good, and which they may cultivate so as to get good to come to them and evil to others. It is a power or influence not physical, and in a way supernatural, but it shows itself in any power or excellence (?) which a man possesses.

De Brosses, one of the most remarkable men of the Voltairian period, studied deeply the savage tribes, and their religion. He claimed that all religions save the Hebrew are the same in their growth and unfoldment, whether it relates to the deifying of animals or inanimate objects, or things endowed with divine virtue, such as amulets, oracles, or protecting talismans. "For it is certain," he says, "that all these forms of thought have the same origin which belongs to one general religion formerly spread over the entire earth." What he failed to find others have found, and I am satisfied that the Hebrews were also believers in the same divine principle of power in all things, and their one God was the oneness of all nature, the Spirit power; the ALL, manifest in ONE, the one containing the elements of all, the law of nature as the intelligent operation of God.

Herbert Spencer claimed that in human history retrogression and progression alternate, and we are advancing toward what has in some respects been a former thought in times passed.

All feel the prompting of an invisible force, an intellectual warning or approbation. This inner consciousness seems to be shared by all, and is taught to each; something they can grasp and hold, yet find it hard to explain in words to others. The African tribes have different things to represent the power that brings divine gifts, protects and helps in all things of life, and ceremonies to invoke the aid of the fetich. And when the prayer is not answered, they think they have offended the deity or fetich, which mean the same, and seek to appease it. Now, if it can be offended and appeased, it is an intelligence which the objects represent, an invisible spiritual power. And the Catholics who carry their beads, sacred relics, bones of saints, and offer prayers over them, yet recognize the one God, the Father of all, as the intelligence that is capable of being pleased and showing favors, or of anger and punishing, is very little ahead of the African on the wilderness of his native habitation. Each watching over the other would not know of the belief back of the symbol, or that both worshiped an unseen spiritual force.

The Fijians were said to believe the shooting stars were Gods, and the smaller ones the departed souls of men, but before we can make this statement of importance in the study of their religion we must know what their conception of God was, and if the whole idea of the divine they had formed to themselves concentrated in the shooting stars. Or does the statement only mean that the shooting stars were one manifestation of divine power familiar to them from other sources?

When we are told that the poets of the Veda represent the sun as God, we ask at once what their name for God is, and are told Deva, which originally meant "Bright." The biography of that single word, Deva, would fill a volume, and we must know its biography from birth and infancy to the end before we would fully comprehend the Hindu's meaning when they call the sun Deva. It refers to the act of shining. It also means brightness; comprises the illustration of dawn and spring phenomena, as illustrating the power of light and brightness in symbolizing the great spiritual force that works in all nature—gives life and growth. And the Veda who had attained to what we Spiritualist mediums know as illumination, and had reached that superconscious state where they came in touch with a higher spiritual plane, called it as others have—LIGHT—BRIGHTNESS—and gave to it all the meaning we express when we say God.

I was told by one who has traveled across the desert, that we could not appreciate that illustration fully without having visited Asia or some hot climate. He said, "As I stood beside my camel on the desert and saw the sun rise, the beauty of atmospheric effect was beyond description. The clear air, the scintillating light, the brightness, the beauty of the new dawn, far surpassed any sunrise I had ever seen, but as I watched the dawn grow to noon, the fierce heat and brightness of the sun's rays, so dazzling, so powerful, I cannot find anything to compare it with save the all powerful element we call spirit force. It aptly illustrates the divine power we call God." So the Vedas thought when they made that one word mean so much.

So we would have to understand the Fijians' meaning of the words which have been translated into God and Soul. Some call the soul a shadow, but in the original language the word was used to indicate a second self—a somewhat likeness to our individual self, and as inseparable as a shadow. As the shadow follows the body, yet disappears when strong light is removed, so the breath, which leaves the body at death, is supposed to reside in the shadow or some form like the shadow.

The word for God through Polynesia is Altra, or Akua. Now Ata in the language of these Polynesian islanders means shadow, and what would be more natural than to see in this name for God, meaning originally shadow, that the idea of God sprang from spirit, and the idea of spirit from shadow. Then, other tribes have expressed God in in the word Atua, which is from Altu, implying the center of a tree, a core or kernel, at first, then later included the strength and life, and used in the sense of Lord and Master, thus meaning that which was within and controlled all manifestation, just as we mean to-day when we say "Spirit force" in all nature and call it God.

Those who practiced fetich worship and carried charms did nothing that is not practiced to-day by Catholics all over the world. There are days when candles, blessed by the priests, are taken home to prevent disease. Other things beside candles are given to protect from evil influences which come from the spirit side of life.

The savages, like many people to-day, did not tell, hardly knew, how to put in words to convey to others the deeper, true meaning of their religion, of their belief in God, a supreme invisible power, and those who had no written language were little understood. A negro was worshiping a tree, supposed to be his fetich, offering it food. When asked if he thought the tree could eat, he said: "The tree is not the Fetich, but the Fetich is a spirit that has descended into the tree; he enjoys the spirit part of the food and leaves the material part." It is the spiritual part of material things recognized by all in the sacrifices, even to the time when the Hebrew burned the lamb as a symbol of atonement for sin. It did not mean, as has been taught, that the blood of the slain was the symbol of salvation, but the fire illustrated the spiritualizing of all as the gross material was dissolved in the flames; so the spirit would eventually envelope and purify or perfect all.

Outward forms of worship, whether in creeds or ceremonies, of to-day or in the ancient days, or in the jungles of Africa, did not constitute the whole of the religion. It was only the outer expression to appeal to the physical or outer part of man's senses, while the inner consciousness of thought and feeling beheld the invisible potency of spirit.

When the meaning of the words used in prayer by different people are properly translated there is the same meaning expressed. Some of the Africans pray in words which mean, "God in heaven, guard us from sickness and death; God grant us happiness and wisdom." The Dual-lahs have the same word for the Great Spirit and the sun. Others use the same word to mean God and weather. And so we could denominate many of the primitive races. Most so-called heathen and barbarian tribes tell of the same belief—God the over-ruling power, and the elements of nature; an indwelling spirit of power. They personalize this power, not only as it is expressed in parts of nature, such deserving of a certain amount of reverence, but they recognize a personality that is invisible, never sleeps, hears all that is said, but can reach only those who draw near unto him—who seek him. Good people will see him after death; bad people go into fire.

After reading the reports of those who have made a careful study of different people and their religion for many years, we find very clear traces of a worship of spirit residing in different parts of nature, revealed partially by the sun or the sky, which forms a bridge from the visible to the invisible, from nature to nature's God. There are a variety of reasons why they show reverence to various animals, as there are a variety of sacred thoughts connected with symbols and relics of to-day.

The higher the human mind, the more lofty its conception of life. The higher its ideals, the more sacred its inner thoughts, the more symbols will be used to illustrate to those who have not had the inner vision of spiritual things. If images or objects are worshipped as God, or as Gods, the very fact of the thought of God in the savage proves the consciousness of some spiritual, invisible power, else where did he get the word that expresses to him what we mean when we say God.

The poets of the Veda declared themselves powerfully inspired. The Gods were supposed to sharpen their minds, rouse the faculties, give words. Like a shower of rain bursting from the clouds, thus the inspiration became revelation, and very highly developed spiritual mediums of to-day know that inspiration and revelation, through metaphysical laws, come from personal spirit beings who have once lived in human form, and we understand the life and teaching of Jesus and his disciples, because the spirit world is tangible to us, and what he meant when he told his disciples to take no thought beforehand, what they should say, for in the time of need words would be given. Every medium who speaks in a trance, or semi-trance condition, or under spirit control, knows that words are given, dictated by an intelligence independent of themselves, and that the illumined or super-conscious state is the touch of a higher intelligence through mental and magnetic-electric laws.

The change of the meaning of one word from generation to generation, from century to century, for a few thousand years, needs to be traced to understand the thought in all religions. For example, the word "Jupiter," the Greek God. Originally the word meant illumination, but gradually became God—that which illuminates—is light, therefore God was light, the illuminator of the spiritual senses. What is called the Rig-Veda was never printed, but embraced a religious literature that was repeated by teacher to pupil for four thousand years. It embraced all the religious ideas of to-day, showing that human thought has always been the same, the ideals the same, their higher aspirations the same—the one-ness of all life alike in all ages and centuries, no matter what the color or advance of civilization. As the story of love was the same at the beginning of creative force, is always the same old story, yet ever new, so the spiritual life is the same blending of an inner consciousness with a super-consciousness; illuminating and blending the human soul with divine life and light.

In all nature the sublime speaks to the idealist. To all who think and feel, the grandeur of the mountain, the power of water, or any other force, tell of a power that is beyond analysis by the materialist. When I first entered the Library of Congress I shall never forget the feeling of awe, of reverence, I felt as I stood in the presence of a greater soul than myself. It was a sense of all the intellect expressed in the great structure that past ages had given to the world. Each expression of art or literature, even a name, represented all that each life had been in its living and achieving.

Epicharmus, a famous Greek writer, says: "The Gods were the winds, the water, the earth, the sun, the fire, and the stars." Prodiks says that the ancients considered sun and moon, river and springs, and in general all that is useful to us, as Gods. Herodotus when speaking of the Persians, says: "They sacrificed to the sun, the moon, the earth, fire, water, and wind. But they also sacrificed on the hilltops to DIS, which meant circle of the sky, or the most high."

In India some trees are reverenced and called Gods. The Aryans addressed their hymns to rivers, to mountains, to clouds, to the earth, to the sky, to the dawn, to the sun. They recognized an activity within these elements, and it was this invisible power that they paid tribute to, instead of worshiping the material object. The river divided, plowed, shouted; the moon measured; the mountain protected. The real name for moon in Sanskrit was Measure, and the American Indian also measures by the moon. A very primitive people in India called it Chando; said it created the world. When told by the missionaries that it could not create the world, they explained that they did not mean the visible Chando, but an invisible one, expressing a belief in an unseen power corresponding to our idea of spirit power, or God.

Thunder, was, according to the Veda Rudra, the Growler, and thus became personalized. It sent forth the thunderbolt as if it carried bows and arrows, striking down life, bringing light out of darkness, refreshment after heat, health after sickness. The wind was Vaera, the Blower, the breath of God, whose voice we hear, yet can not see, but whose power was potent in producing life.

The Sanskrit word Dera applied to that which was bright, as sun, fire, dawn; also the river, trees, and mountains, all power opposed to darkness, to cold, to evil. The same word lives on in the later pronunciation of Deus, and still later became our Deity. The same thought is back of that word; a power that rules in nature. Before Sanskrit, the great ever-ruling unchanging power was called Dyu Palar (Heaven-Father), and in different languages a name has been given which also meant Heaven-Father. And we to-day bow our heads and say: "Our Father which art in heaven," and are taught that heaven is within the human soul, and God is all nature.

The comparison of all things with human life and its conditions is ever apparent, and we find this comparison in all the deified objects. In the Rig-Veda it says: "Be kind to us as a father to a son"; "Hear us, Indra, like a father," therefore the word father was only used as a symbol to express protecting care and goodness. In the Sanskrit we find the word A-diti—meaning the boundless or infinite. Also the same word existed before Sanskrit was written, and applied not only to the boundless universe but to parts of it. It also meant the mother of all Gods, implying the mother in nature as well as the father; so those who begin their invocations to-day, "Father and Mother, God" are expressing the same thought that was given to the world in oral teachings before a written language existed, though in some expressions it shows a sexless power.

And now we will give you the words of an Atheist: "You ask me what God is? If I knew I should be God, for no one knows God except God himself. Though we may in a certain way discern Him in His works, like the sun through the clouds, yet we should not comprehend him better by that means. Let us say, however, that He is the greatest good, the first being, the whole, just, compassionate, blessed calm, the creator, preserver, mediator, omnipotent, omnipresent, the father, king, lord, rewarder, ruler, the beginning, the middle, the eternal, the author, life-giver. He alone is all in all." The man who wrote those words was burned as an atheist.

GOOD-BYE.

In my dreams I heard one singing in a mellow, tender tone,
In a spirit of sweet sadness that was kindred to my own;
There was love in deep expression of a sweetly loving pain,
Which was echoed and re-echoed in the sadly sweet refrain;
"Good-bye—good-bye—good-bye.

"We have loved each other truly from our childhood's early years;
We have borne life's lot together, with its trials, hopes and fears;
Hand in hand we've walked together over life's uneven way,—
Now what seems our earthly parting bids me tenderly to say:
Good-bye—good-bye—good-bye.

"We have passed through joys and sorrows, and through happiness and pain,
We have mingled tears together, we've let gladness truly reign;
What one heart has felt the other felt, they ever beat as one,
But the hour has come when Nature says my mortal race is run.
Good-bye—good-bye—good-bye.

"All our fortune and misfortune ever knit us closer still,
And e'en death shall not divide us, for love's promise we fulfill,
And our love is love forever, it shall never cease or wane,
So with all of love's deep tenderness I speak the words again:
Good-bye—good-bye—good-bye.

"Hand in hand we clung together in life's darkest hours of night,
Side by side we've walked together when the sun shone clear and bright;
In the midst of life's stern battles, each has given kindly cheer;
So again in tender kindness, as my mortal end is near:
Good-bye—good-bye—good-bye.

"We have moaned as one in sorrow, sung as one sweet songs of joy,
Bowed as one in sad affliction, known as one of life's alloy;
And the storm and stress, the heaven joys, all wrought for love's sweet reign,
Now I hear the angels call me, so with tender love again:
Good-bye—good-bye—good-bye.

"Now the narrow river, dear one, I am crossing, crossing o'er;
We shall meet again o'er yonder on the bright celestial shore;
To that world of life immortal I am floating now away—
In that home of joys eternal nevermore we'll sadly say
Good-bye—good-bye—good-bye."

THE SPIRIT OF TRUTH.

Pervasive essence of the primal wood,
The boundless prairie and the trackless sea;
Mother of love and bond of brotherhood,
The world's advancement centers still in thee.

Within the breast of prehistoric man,
A tiny spark struck from the heart of flint,
You flashed upon his vision as he ran
From cave to cave, a sense of Beauty's tint.

When Israel's people to the desert fled
Lest unbelief profane their altar fires,
Thy signals guided and thy glory led
E'en while thy patience tempered their desires.

When bigotry thy constant beams obscured
In gloomy temples built of custom's dross,
In shepherds' hearts thy promises endured
To shine refulgent on the sacred cross.

By thee inspired, from fawning courtier's ways,
Thy subjects rose to brave a despot's wrath,
With lofty look returned the tyrant's gaze,
And sought a lonely but still upward path.

'Mongst savage tribes they grimly cast their lot,
Braved Winter's fury, want and pain and death,
That they might keep inviolate one spot
Where freemen still could draw inspiring breath.

Men still have died that Man might better live,
Made sacrifice of father, brother, son,
Who now so poor but has one life to give
That what is done may never be undone!

Through blood and strife Man seeks a peaceful goal,
And Hesperus will triumph over Mars;
We are the children of that Over-Soul
From whose great longing bloomed the virgin stars.

No earthly power inspired the deeds sublime
That mark the epochs of the ages flown;
God walks with those who hold all future time
The full and founded fruitage of their own.
—Charles Eugene Banks in Chicago Examiner.

LET US FORGET.

Let us forget the day is cold,
The fire is out and we are old.

Let us forget cares that corrode,
Let us drop off our weary load.

Let us forget the grudge we owe,
By kindly deeds subdue the foe.

Let us forget the selfish deed,
The selfish man receives his meed.

Let us forget the world of strife,
The daily struggle there for life.

Let us forget ourselves, our sorrow,
The sun will shine for us to-morrow.

Let us forget that some are base,
And learn to love the human race.
—Della Hart Stone.

Men will be more moral when they learn that morality does not rest for its authority upon arbitrary edicts thundered from the skies, but that its foundation is the experience of mankind as to what is best for man.—Robert C. Adams.

Eye Glasses Not Necessary.

Eye Sight can be Strengthened, and all forms of Diseased Eyes Cured without Cutting or Drugging.

That the eyes can be strengthened so that eye glasses can be dispensed with in the great majority of cases, has been proven beyond a doubt, by the testimony of of hundreds people who publicly claim that they have been cured by that wonderful little instrument called "Actina." Actina also cures sore and granulated lids, iritis, etc., also removes Cataracts and Pterygiums without cutting or drugging. Over 75 thousand of the "Actinas" have been sold; therefore it is not an experiment, but an absolute fact. The following letters are but samples of those that are received daily:

Mrs. M. E. Champney, 242 West 125th St. New York City, writes: The "Actina" cured me of Iritis, after the doctors said there was no cure outside an operation. I have been entirely well for over four months, can see to read and sew as well as before. I can honestly recommend "Actina" for all afflictions of the eye.

Alameda, Cal., March 27th, 1906.
New York & London Electric Ass'n,
Kansas City, Mo.

Gentlemen:—I am more than pleased with the "Actina." When I received it I had been wearing glasses for more than 8 years for Astigmatism. I immediately discontinued their use and have not had them on since. It is wonderful. I consider it worth its weight in gold. I have recommend it to many of my friends.

Nery truly, (Miss) E. F. Tucker,
2041 San Antonio Ave.

E. R. Holdbrook, Deputy County Clerk, Fairfax, Va., writes: "Actina" has cured my eyes so that I can do without glasses. I very seldom have headache now, and can study up to eleven o'clock after a hard day's work at the office.

"Actina" can be used by old and young with perfect safety. Every member of a family can use the one Actina for any form of disease of the Eye, Ear, Throat or Head. One will last for years, and is always ready for use. "Actina" will be sent on trial postpaid.

If you will send your name and address to the New York and London Electric Association, Dept. 342N., 929 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo., you will receive absolutely FREE a valuable book, Prof. Wilson's Treatise on.

A NEW CATECHISM

BY M. M. MANGASARIAN.

Fourth Edition—Six Additional Chapters—200 Pages, Bound in Cloth, $1.00.—Containing Likeness of the Author.

"A New Catechism" has enjoyed a remarkable sale both in America and England. George Jacob Holyoake, in his introduction to the English edition of "A New Catechism," says:

"A New Catechism" is the boldest, the brightest, the most varied and informing of any work of the kind extant. The principal fields of human knowledge, which the churches have fenced round with supernatural terrors, the Catechism breaks into, cherishing what is fair and showing what is deformed. The notes, of which there are many, both ancient and contemporary, are as striking as the text. The book is a cyclopedia of theology and reason in a nutshell.

HOW THE BIBLE WAS INVENTED.

A New Lecture.—Price, 10 cents.

This little pamphlet should be placed in the hands of every American citizen. The attention of preachers, theological students, and all church members should be called to the wonderful story of the Invention of the Holy Bible, which this lecture tells.

See that at least one orthodox neighbor of yours reads this lecture.

MORALITY WITHOUT A GOD.

With letter to Right Reverend Bishop Anderson, of Chicago. Price, 10 cents.

JESUS CHRIST A MYTH.

A New Book.—Price 25 Cents.

This book examines the evidence for the historical existence of Jesus, and finds it quite insufficient to prove that such a man as Jesus ever lived. It is a most important contribution to Modern Thought. It is prefaced by a letter to the Christian Clergy, and concluded by an answer to an editorial in one of the Chicago morning papers, attacking Mr. Mangasarian's position. Send your orders at once, as the first edition will soon be exhausted.

Germs of Mind in Plants.

By R. H. France, Translated by A. M. Simons.—Cloth, Illustrated, 50 Cents.

A cardinal point in the philosophical systems favored by the ruling classes is that the mind of man is something unique in the universe, governed by laws of its own that have no particular connection with physical laws. Modern science has proved that not only animals, but also plants receive impressions from the outside world and use data thus obtained to modify their movements for their own advantage, exactly as human beings do. These facts are told in this book in so charming and entertaining a style that the reader is carried along and does not realize until later the revolutionary significance of the facts.

HEROES AND HERO WORSHIP, AND THE HEROIC IN HISTORY.

By Thomas Carlyle.

A remarkable book by a remarkable man. Marked by terse strength and vigor, deep thought, philosophy and dramatic tensity of earnestness. A notable literary effort. A fine edition in cloth. Price 50 cents.

General Survey.

The Spiritualistic Field—Its Workers, Its Work, and General Progress, the World Over.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper. Please bear this in mind.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

THIS GENERAL SURVEY DEPARTMENT IS ONLY INTENDED TO CHRONICLE THE ENGAGEMENTS AND WORK OF SPEAKERS AND MEDIUMS. A REPORT OF WHAT THE VARIOUS SPEAKERS SAY WILL NOT BE PUBLISHED, AS WE HAVE NOT SPACE SUFFICIENT FOR THAT PURPOSE.

The Song Cards for sale at this office at $4 per hundred, are the help you need in society work.

Mrs. Elizabeth Schauss, Ohio State Missionary, writes from Martinsferry, Ohio: "Sunday, Nov. 11, was spent with the White Key Society at Bellaire, Ohio. The day being cold and misty, the attendance was not as large as might have been. People from Martinsferry, Bridgeport, Wheeling, and Bellaire were in the audience. C. A. Sollinger of Cleveland, spoke in German and English; to me was assigned the part of psychometrizing articles. Mrs. L. A. Wilson has been serving this society as pastor for two years and to her untiring effort is due the fact that a rally of the Spiritualists of the Ohio Valley was possible. The parlor meetings in her home each week are well attended, and good work for the cause is being accomplished. I go from here to Uricksville, Nov. 14, 15 and 16; thence to Massillon, for Nov. 17, 18, 19 and 20."

News continues favorable from the Psychical Research Society of Rockford, Ill. Mrs. Barry still continues to draw good houses to her Sunday evening lectures, and her messages rarely fail to be recognized, and fully indorsed. She returns to Clinton, Iowa, to resume her labors there on the 2nd of December. She will return to Rockford at her earliest convenience. She has made a retinue of friends during the short time she been with the society.

The Saratogian of Saratoga, N. Y., speaks as follows of Dr. Walter B. Mills, a prominent medium: "Dr. Walter B. Mills was the originator of Spiritualist meetings in Saratoga Springs. He was chairman of the meetings for fourteen years. Dr. Mills has had a varied life, aside from his connection with the Spiritualists. Not only has he practiced medicine, but he has been in the mercantile business, has dealt in real estate and enjoyed the bucolic existence of a farmer. Dr. Mills was born on his father's farm at Topsham, Vt., eighty years ago on May 29 last. Between 1865 and 1875, Dr. Mills established the city of Montour, Iowa. He bought 400 acres of land, laid it out into building lots, erected 35 houses and sold it. Since their home at Locust Grove burned down a year ago in July, Dr. and Mrs. Mills have lived at No. 91 Division street."

Albert P. Blinn, pastor of the First Spiritual Union, Norwich, Conn., writes: "We have just closed our annual fair and it proved to be one of the most successful held here for years. The vestry of our academy was beautifully decorated; pennants of different colleges and yacht clubs being suspended from the ceiling, intermingled with the flags of all nations. The color scheme of the different booths set off the articles upon the tables most beautifully, and the patronage was excellent. Mrs. Charles A. Dowsett, Mrs. Albert P. Blinn, Mrs. Wales W. Clapp, Mrs. Charles Burdick, Mrs. A. Gould, Miss Haydee Blackstone and Mrs. David Avery had charge of the different booths. A very pleasant surprise to the Union was the receipt of a very handsome quilt, made and donated by the members of the Independent Liberal Church of Greenwich, Mass. Miss Mary P. Clapp as busy afternoon and evening giving demonstrations of palm reading and received splendid commendations for her work. On Sunday, December 9, we expect to have with us Mr. Wellman C. Whitney, of Springfield, Mass., as message bearer, to follow the addresses of our regular speaker, and on December 16, Mrs. Annette J. Pettingill will be our medium. Both of these mediums are well known throughout New England and will attract large audiences of our best and most earnest Spiritualists."

A. P. Smith writes from Milton, Mass.: "I wish to relate something that occurred in my home in N. Scituate, Mass., some twenty years ago. One evening I had P. L. O. Keeler as medium, and had a curtain drawn across the corner of the room. There were two men sitting withh him in front of the curtain. There were fifteen persons in the room. We had a very bright light, the same one used by my wife to sew or read by, sitting on the mantel, so that we had all the light that could be from one bright light. I stood up before the men sitting with the medium, holding a tablet of paper with a pencil lying on it, thinking there might be a hand come up and take the paper and write something on it, but instead of that, there came through the curtain a hand that took my spectacles from my face, carried them through the curtain, and dropped them on the little table I had placed there. In about one quarter of a minute they were put back through the curtain and laid on the paper I still held in my hand. The hand and arm to the elbow were seemingly just as solid as the human limb. On one finger sparkled a beautiful representation of a diamond ring."

The many friends of Miss M. B. Hedrick will be pleased to know that she is convalescent from her recent serious illness, and will be able to resume her work in about two weeks.

Independent Church of Truth, Grand Boulevard Hall, corner 47th street and Grand Boulevard, Georgia Gladys Cooley, speaker and message bearer. Meetings every Sunday at 7:45. The first Sunday of each month at 2:30 is social Sunday, when other mediums assist and all bring their lunches.

Eva L. Stewart writes: "Dr. J. A. Marvin was again with the Hyde Park Occult Society last Sunday and gave a fine talk. He is always welcome and highly appreciated. Mr. H. S. Fraser answered written questions and all were well pleased and answers proved to be true. He gave satisfaction at the circle we hold every Tuesday evening. Our next dance will be on Dec. 6."

Alice M. Sexsmith speaks favorably of the Christian Spiritualist Society conducted by Mrs. Sarah Thomas. The following assisted with remarks and tests: Gustav Tempol, Mrs. Kusserow, Miss Thomas. On Sunday evening, December 2, Dr. Geo. B. Warne will be the speaker, followed with messages by Miss Ella Johnson Bloom and others. Don't fail to attend each and all of their meetings, as there are always good speakers and mediums present. Everyone welcome every Sunday afternoon and evening at 3 and 8 p. m., at Conway Hall, Western avenue and Lake street, over drug store; entrance on Western avenue."

A very enjoyable time was had at the social afternoon held at the Independent Church of Truth, on the first Sunday in November, and a request was made that they be held often, and the first Sunday of December has been selected for the next. There will be short talks and messages by Georgia Gladys Cooley and various mediums at the afternoon meetings, beginning at 2:30 o'clock. All are invited to bring their lunch, and an extra piece for strangers. The evening services will consist of a short lecture and messages by Mrs. Cooley. Grand Boulevard Hall, corner Grand Boulevard and 47th street.

The Golden Rule Relief and Aid Society meets at 705 West Madison street, at Nora E. Hill's home, every Thursday afternoon, except on Thanksgiving day. Everyone is invited to join with us in this work for humanity. Those having clothing that can be made over for children, can send the same to the abbvoe address, and will be thankfully received by the committee. Nora E. Hill, chairman."

S. A. Huntington writes from Malden, Mass.: "Malden Progressive Spiritual Society, Louise Hall, No. 138 Pleasant street, Mrs. F. S. Sheriff president. The services of our society on Sunday, Nov. 18, was as ever, interesting. The president presided at both sessions, with Miss Mabel Carter at the piano. At the afternoon circle, short, pithy and interesting addresses were made by Mr. Baker, Mr. Wallace and Mrs. Morton, and fine message work done by Mr. Baker, of Boston, Mrs. Smith of Everett, Mrs. Morton and Mrs. Carter of Malden. The past president, Mrs. Alice M. Whall of Everett, occupied the platform at the evening service, prefacing her work by reading a beautiful poem, entitled 'There is No Death,' after which she devoted the entire evening to beautiful message work. Mrs. Maud Litch of Lynn, will occupy the platform on Sunday evening, Nov. 25, 1906. Circle every Thursday evening, at 7:30 (except holidays) and Sundays at 3 p. m. Sunday evening meeting at 7:30."

S. A. Boyd writes: "The meeting held Grand Boulevard Hall, 47th street and Grand Boulevard, on Sunday, November 18, by Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley, of the Independent Church of Truth, was a notable success. The hall was crowded, several standing through the service, and quite a large number were unable to gain admittance. Mrs. Cooley gave her experience with the spirit, Edwin Booth; also the communications received from his father before the death of Edwin, in which he predicted his death, and fixed the time. Both father and son appeared to the medium shortly after the spirit of Edwin left the body, and before his death had been announced, or anything published. At the closing of this exceedingly interesting meeting, Edwin Booth controlled the medium and the words spoken will never be forgotten by those who were fortunate enough to be present. Anyone who was familiar with the gifted actor, especially in his work as Hamlet, could not fail to recognize the gestures and intonations of the voice. To me it was very realistic, as I admired him most in this character. I always felt that he was moulded for it. When Hamlet's name is mentioned we at once associate the name of Edwin Booth with it."

Correspondent writes: "At the Golden Rule Spiritualist Society, Sunday, November 18, we had our usual good crowd in the afaernoon, to listen to that old veteran, J. E. Coe, followed by recognized messages from Jennie S. Adams, Mrs. Temple and Mr Sshmidt. In the evening our pastor, Mrs. Nora E. Hill lectured, and Mrs. Dr. Caird gave grand messages. Mr. Travis followed, doing finely. Some of the attractions of the evening were a violin solo by Miss Mulligan, accompanied by our organist, Mrs. Dr Arnold. Another was a solo sang by the sweet-voiced singer, Miss Johnson. A word about the Lyceum: Its prospects are good, and we feel that it will grow, and hope more will become interested, and help with the work at 2 p. m.. The evening of December 2, our speaker will be the pastor, Mrs. Nora E. Hill, followed by messages at O'Donnell Cottage Hall, on south Paulina street, between Washington Boulevard and Park avenue. All are welcome."

L. E. Whitney writes from Springfield, Mass.: "The First Spiritualist Ladies' Aid Society, of Springfield, Mass., opened its meetings October 7, Mrs. Helen P. Russegue of Hartford, Conn., gave the lectures, which were a treat to all. Mr. William C. Whitney, of this city, gave messages, which were recognized and appreciated. October 1, Mrs. Ruth Swift, of Haverhill, graced our platform. Her work was very good, and many hearts were comforted by the messages given. October 21, Mrs Fannie Spalding, of Norwich, Conn., was our speaker. She is one of our most earnest workers for the cause. The 28th, Dr. Geo. A. Fuller occupied the platform. His lectures were very interesting. We have several new members, and hope to have a prosperous year."

Mrs. Helen Stuart-Richings writes: I have just completed a very satisfactory engagement at Meadville, Pa., and am filling my second this season at Conneaut, Ohio."

Mrs. Elizabeth Schauss, state missionary for Ohio, writes from Toledo, Ohio: "While at Martinsferry, Ohio, I was called home by telegram to my mother's bedside, she having become so feeble that the end is expected any minute. As soon as I arrived, however, she seemed to revive, and has now regained a little strength, though still very feeble. I was obliged because of this to delay my proposed work at Uricksville and Massilon, but hope in the near future to go there and work for the cause. On Saturday, November 24, I will go to Cleveland, Ohio, to which place I am called to christen the infant of Mr. and Mrs. F. G. Curry. On the 25th I will address the Ashtabula Psychic Research Society, both afternoon and evening; then will return home as I cannot make plans for the present, owing to my mother's condition, which is such that she may drop off any minute and she may remain a week or more. She is too aged to recover, but may linger yet awhile."

W. J. Elmo writes: "The Spiritual Alliance Society, meeting in Vincennes Hall, 3514 Vincennes avenue, near Cottage Grove ave, every Sunday at 3 and 8 p. m., is doing some splendid work, with such speakers as Dr. Geo. B. Warne, J. H. Marvin, Prof. Snarrenburger, and others. The people can find plenty to think about. Mrs. May Elmo, the gifted medium gives a number of convincing tests and messages at each session. She always picks out the stranger in the audience first, and has convinced many of spirit return. All welcome to these meetings."

Chas S. Simmons, president, writes from Cache, Okla.: "Our missionary, Rev. Alice Baker, began missionary work for the Oklahoma State Spiritualists Association on the 9th inst., in Walters. She gave five lectures and many spirit messages, all of which were highly appreciated by people who had known but little or nothing of Spiritualism. The work there was planned and carried out by Brothers Nash and Loucks, they being the only known Spiritualists residing there. They procured the use of the Opera House (free) and did everything in their power to make a success of the work there. We notice that the main feature of Mrs. Baker's work in Oklahoma has been small beginnings, with very discouraging conditions on the start, but finishing with marked success. She fights her way through obstacles, and wins the respect of the conservative and skeptical, holding the audiences in rapt attention throughout. Her last lecture in Walters was a grand success, every seat in the Opera House being filled; among the audience were Christian ministers of the town. She gave some striking tests and left many anxious minds. She is now in Lawton, giving a series of lectures and we hope to have something encouraging to say later on."

Church of All Souls will begin service Sunday, December 2, at 7:30, No. 220 S. Western avenue, near Van Buren street. Strangers and skeptics cordially invited; also co-workers and friends to take part. Mrs. Squires, minister.

Mrs. L. A. Cowen writes: "Sunday evenings, Nov. 11 and 18, I held Spiritual meetings in South Bend, Ind., and had crowded houses. I addressed the audience upon Science of Spiritualism, followed by messages—all were acknowledged as correct. I am ready to open correspondence with societies, or give parlor meetings at all nearby towns. I will be in Chicago, Nov. 25 and Dec. 1; later at my home in South Bend, Ind."

E. B. Craddock, M. D., writes approvingly of The Progressive Thinker, saying, "The last two numbers are sledge hammers—better and better every week."

Mrs. Lora Holton is now located at Vicksburg, Mich. She lectured at Centerville, Mich., Nov. 11, at the home of Mrs. John Culbertson, on "Knowledge by Intuition, and the Psychic Laws," followed by readings and musical messages. She will accept calls for work in Michigan during the winter. She finds The Progressive Thinker highly appreciated and read by all who want to see true Spiritualism brought out in its purity, and the fraud element eliminated from our ranks.

G. L. Willms writes: "Sunday evening, Nov. 18, the North Star Spiritual Union, 1546 Milaukee avenue, had the pleasure of greeting Mr. Max Hoffmann who had been engaged for the evening. He was applauded repeatedly. He then demonstrated by giving messages, such as reading of articles and clairaudience, and they were all recognized. The Progressive Thinker was on hand again and were all taken up, and more could have been sold."

S. F. Wicker, Attorney-at-Law, writes from Madison Kansas: "I am pleased to note that within the past year the secular press has been paying more attention to our cause. Almost every daily you pick up contains some account of occult matter. Within the past week a local paper published in this state gives an account of a person being seen in two places at the same time, and can only be accounted for, or on, the theory of the astral body being seen by some, and the real body by others, as all parties assert (and are positive) he remained in the depot under the watchful care of the night operator, while others are just as certain he spent two hours with them in a livery stable. All persons connected with the circumstance are well connected, and considered reliable."

Mrs. M. C. Barrett writes from Dorchester, Mass.: "Her countless friends will be grieved to learn that Mrs. Hattie Mason, one of our old-time mediums, who has ever been ready to make use of her gifts for the benefit of others, and who has been a familiar figure in New England Spiritualist circles for so many years, is at the Massachusetts General Hospital, Boston, where she has undergone a very painful operation. She is as comfortable as could be expected at the present writing. Mr. E. Warren Hatch, of Hatch Brothers, sons of Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Hatch, of Boston, is at the home of his aunt, Mrs. Mary T. Longley, of Washington, D. C., recuperating from the effect of severe hemorrhages of the throat. Mr. Hatch is a very successful comedian, composer of verse and witty sketches. His brother Charles is a gifted musician, improvisor and composer. They make a strong team and are continuously engaged. Edward's work includes singing to the accompaniment of loud band music, and the strain proved too great for his somewhat delicate constitution. Within the year he married a young lady from Dorchester, who is with him in Washington. All kinds of good thoughts and hopes for his recovery are being sent to him."

Mrs. Sophia B. Seip is now located at 401 Bliss Ave., Stevens Point, Wis. She intends to hold meetings at that place.

E. R. Fielding writes: "Mrs. Mary T. Longley closed her engagement for the month of November with the First Spiritual Society of Washington, D. C. We are thankful to her and her guides for their grand lectures. The lyceum gave an entertainment for the benefit of the society Saturday evening. Miss Susie C. Clark of Dorchester, Mass., is visiting friends in the city. She will remain all winter. Mr. Geo. W. Fuller of Boston, Mass., will succeed Mrs. Longley, the present speaker, for the First Spiritualist Society for the month of December."

M. C. B. submits a just criticism: "Will our Spiritualist writers and speakers explain why they use the word Spiritualistic? They do not say Baptistic, Congregationalistic, Methodistic, Unitarianistic. Why, in this age of simplified spelling do they add unnecessary syllables? There are some of us who do not want to simplify our spelling so much that we do away with the history and origin of our language, but we don't want superfluities. Some of our best writers of to-day persist in using the expression 'later on.' One wants to ask, 'on' what?"

Mrs. W. M. Hinman writes: "The Progressive Thinker and premium books came promptly in return for the order I sent you. The books are very satisfactory. I am profiting in the perusal of Seers of the Ages. I consider it a valuable book."

C. L. H. writes: "9 Appleton street, Boston, Mass.: The First Spiritualist Ladies' Aid Society met as usual, the president, Mrs. M. E. Alibe in the chair. Business held at 4:30 p. m.; supper at 6:15; social time until 8 p. m., when a very interesting meeting was held. The following talent took part: Mrs. A. S. Waterhouse spoke briefly. Mrs. Stein and Mrs. S. C. Cunningham gave many messages. Mrs. Corbee gave astrological readings. Mrs. Shirley spoke briefly. Congregational singing, Mrs. Mary F. Lovering accompanist. Next Friday will be a Thanksgiving meeting. Be sure and come."

Mrs. Anna L. Gillespie writes from Battle Creek, Mich.: "After three months of hard but pleasant work, I finish my engagement with the society at Battle Creek. To say that the officers and members have been kind to me, is too feeble a way to express it. Not one has failed in loyal support. I wish to assure any speaker who comes here that in no place will they find truer hearts than here. It has been hard work, but no one has shirked a duty. Beside the two meetings on Sunday, we held a thought circle Tuesday afternoon; a Wednesday evening question box, and a supper every Saturday night, which are largely attended. Mrs. Emma Hyde, the bright little lady who is president; Mr. Wells, our never-failing vice-president; Mrs. Berry, who looks so well after the secretary's duty; Mrs. Platt, who as treasurer is one of the best, and this board of officers, aided by Mrs. Estell, Mrs. Cross and Mr. Pollick, are every one alive and busy with plans for the future of this society. I go for a much needed rest at once to Pittsburg, Pa., 321 Highland avenue, South, to join Mr. Gillespie. I will devote much time to the lyceum work. I hope to hear from all interested, and will soon have some work for them."

R. W. Beecher writes from Denver, Col.: "Mrs. Nellie S. Noyes of Boston, has again resumed her work for the Spiritual Church of Truth, and we promise for her a season of success. She was with us last winter, and many hearts were made glad and happy by the loving words that came through her from the land of spirit. She passed the summer in the mountains, and has been much benefited by it. She has made hosts of friends in Denver, and will make many more this coming winter. A large gathering greeted her on her first night when she received a hearty welcome. The church was well filled, though only day's notice of her return had been given."

"Continuity of Life a Cosmic Truth," By Prof. Wm. M. Lockwood. The work of a strong, logical thinker, on a deeply important subject. Price, cloth, $1.

"Spiritual Fire Crackers, Bible Chestnuts and Political Pin Points." By J. S. Harrington. A pamphlet containing 79 pages of racy reading. Price 25 cts.

"Child Culture, According to the Laws of Physiological Psychology and Mental Suggestion," By Newton N. Riddell. A most excellent work for all who have the care or training of children. Price, 65 cents.

"A Consptracy Against the Republic." By Charles B. Waite, A. M., author of "History of the Christian Religion to the Year 200," etc. A condensed statement of facts concerning the efforts of church leaders to get control of the government. An important work. Paper, 25 cents.

"An Infamous Dynamite Roman Catholic Conspiracy Detected and Exposed." "Romanism Exposed." Two pamphlets by Rev. J. G. White, author of "Startling Facts." Price, 10 cents each, or two for 15 cents.

"Death, Its Meaning and Results." By J. K. Wilson, of the Pennsylvania Bar. An absorbingly interesting volume, of decided value. A narrative of wonderful psychical events in the author's experience. Cloth, 560 pages, illustrated, $1.25.

A Harmless Open Letter.

A Plain Statement of Facts, Illustrating and Explaining—Letter From D. Edson Smith, a Prominent Spiritualist, of Santa Ana, Cal.

Will C. Hodge has sent forth a harmless and highly amusing Open Letter to the Editor of The Progressive Thinker. As is well known, Mr. Hodge gave Mrs. Elsie Reynolds, the notorious materializing medium, a most fulsome endorsement in the Organ of the Fakes in Chicago. Notwithstanding her methods had been EXPOSED REPEATEDLY—the "spirit" proving to be her DRESSED IN ARTIFICIAL TOGGERY, WIGS, GOGGLES, DRAPERY, ETC., and so notorious has her legerdemain tricks become, that not a single camp meeting will ADMIT HER ON ITS GROUNDS—notwithstanding all this, Mr. Hodge is trying to FORCE HER on the respectable Spiritualists of this country, not caring, as he declares, if she does use a Saratoga Trunk full of toggery to carry on, of course, her tricks in the manufacture of "spirits."

Thrre are two classes to whom the columns of The Progressive Thinker are not open for their defense, viz.: RUFFIANS AND BULLIES WHO ASSAULT WOMEN AND GIRLS, AND THOSE WHO "STEAL THE LIVERY OF HEAVEN TO SERVE THE DEVIL IN" or, in other words, THOSE MATERIALIZING MEDIUMS WHO DRESS THEMSELVES IN ARTIFICIAL TOGGERY, AND SHAMEFULLY POSE AS A "SPIRIT" RIGHT FROM THE CELESTIAL REGIONS. Take notice that these two classes, when FOUND GUILTY, will not find any consolation in the columns of The Progressive Thinker; nor will we admit therein such characters, directly or indirectly. We make this preface to the article that follows, from D. Edson Smith, a leading Spiritualist, a man universally respected, and whose natural born kindness makes him a typical investigator of occult phenomena:

A Letter to Will C. Hodge:

Dear Brother Hodge:—I am in receipt of your favor of the 6th. I regret that our ethical views are so divergent. I have said or written nothing about you but WHAT WAS LEGITIMATELY CALLED FORTH BY YOUR PUBLIC ANNOUNCEMENT, that "it is my further belief that there is no better medium for form manifestation before the public than Elsie Reynolds." And if you have said or written anything since on that subject, that you are ashamed of, or have any hesitancy about its being given the greatest publicity, then I am sorry for you. I say again, I have PUBLISHED NOTHING IN REFERENCE TO YOU BUT WHAT WAS STRICTLY GERMAIN TO THE PUBLIC QUESTION YOU RAISED.

If I were posing as a public representative teacher on any subject anything I might say or write in private, bearing directly on a published article of mine, I would NOT BE ASHAMED TO HAVE PUBLISHED ON THE HOUSETOP.

I can't see as whether I am a "gentleman" or not has anything to do with the point at issue, which is: DO THE SPIRITUALISTS OF THIS COUNTRY WISH TO ENDORSE AS THEIR REPRESENTATIVE IN THIS MATTER A MAN WHO PROCLAIMS ELSIE REYNOLDS "ONE OF THE BEST MEDIUMS FOR FORM MANIFESTATIONS BEFORE THE PUBLIC?" And who is "perfectly willing she should have a Saratoga Trunk full of paraphernalia or toggery if she wants it," And who said in his published article: "That Mrs. Reynolds has been FREQUENTLY EXPOSED I KNOW FULL WELL, and, probably she will be again." And who objects to submitting Elsie Reynolds to legitimate test conditions to discover beyond all cavil whether she has ANY gifts or powers as a materializing medium.

But I can see no good to come from our further discussing this question. All I have said or done in the matter is public property; and I have not quoted you as saying anything but WHAT WAS SAID BEFORE WITNESSES, so that the question of my gentlemanliness, or untruthfulness; of the correctness, or incorrectness of my ethical ideas are before the public on this question, and they must be the judge in this case. If they adjudge me to be wrong, I will earnestly endeavor to improve.

Yours for the upbuilding of true Spiritualism,

D. EDSON SMITH.

In Defense of Mrs. Ropp-Amos.

To the Editor:—Will you pardon me if I say one word for one of our mediums, whom you seemed to condemn, either knowingly or unknowingly?

In your paper of the 15th of November, you condemned Dr. Kingsley, and we all think justly, but Mrs. Josephine Ropp-Amos, I think you should investigate her case, for surely she has done some good work here in this city, and also in Chesterfield Camp. To be sure, her husband complained, but old Adam usually does. She is very much worried about her domestic affairs, and now this censure seems too much, and we as Spiritualists feel that you will be willing to right the misunderstanding. We feel the woman is a conscientious worker in our ranks, and should have justice.

MRS. D. F. SPEES,
831 North Ala.

Signed by—

Annie Throndsen, Pastor of Progressive Society: I have known Mrs. Josephine Ropp for a number of years, and have always found her a true and worthy medium, and will gladly vouch for her: Joseph A. Humphreys, C. S. Allen, Mrs. Sarah A. Zeigler, H. R. Henning, Mrs. A. Grummann, Jerome Romberg, Libbie Skelton, Arthur R. Seward, Herman Maine, all members of the Progressive Church. W

We would say that in no sense did we condemn Mrs. Ropp-Amos. Those who signed the above ought to have been careful in their assertions. We gave Mr. Amos's statement as a record of the court, wherein he asserts that the voice through the trumpet purporting to be his deceased wife, advising him strenuously to part with one-half of his property to his present wife, WAS A "SHAM," meaning that it did not originate from his deceased wife, but from some other questionable source. We gave that as a matter of news, and we severely criticise these "deceased wives" who come back to earth to induce their former husbands to give their money away to some one who never had any part in earning it. Mrs. Amos may be as pure as an angel of light; we have no criticism to make on her as a lady, a medium, or a wife; it was the VOICE THROUGH THE TRUMPET that Mr. Amos regarded in the court records as a sham, as it induced him to part with one-half of his property. All over the country this same method has been employed more or less, and great trouble and scandal has arisen. In an Eastern camp it was the deceased husband, "fully materialized," so claimed at the time, that induced his former wife to give away the bulk of her property to the medium. Finally she, like Mr. Amos, awakened from her delusive dream, and realized the spirit messages were "a sham," or the product of a wicked spirit. A suit in court followed, resulting in her getting back much of the property she had given away under spirit advice. We have no criticism whatever to offer in reference to Mrs. Amos, the wife, the lady, the medium; our dealings are only with the voice in the trumpet. We hope that in the forthcoming suit justice will be done to all parties.

To Spiritualists of Indian Territory.

I have a call from Madill, I. T., to lecture at that place, and I would like to hear from those interested in securing a speaker for other towns in the Territory. I will probably make a tour of the Indian Territory, and therefore would like a list of places where Spiritualists are to be found. Address,

MRS. CARRIE M. HINSDALE,
President Texas State Ass'n of Spiritualists, R. R. 5, Box 61, Fort Worth, Texas.

Notes From Rev. G. C. Love.

To the Editor:—I began a series of meetings in Billings, Mont., Sunday, Nov. 18. Since the convention in your city I have held meetings in Omaha, Neb., for two Sundays, and the people in that city organized the First Spiritual Church, with prospects of building up a good strong organization. From there I went to Sheridan, Wyoming, serving the society there two Sundays.

On leaving Billings, I will go to North Yakima, in Washington, for two Sundays.

I am anticipating another trip East in the spring, and have promised to visit Baker City, Oregon, where I lectured and gave tests for the society for two Sundays as I traveled East to the convention and Omaha, where I stopped two Sundays, and two Sundays on my return, and Sheridan, Wyo., the last place when I stopped on my way before I came to Billings.

Should other places want my services on that trip, they will please write to me at my home—address, Lents, Oregon, R. F. D. No. 1, and I will give prompt reply.

LIFE'S PROGRESSION.

"There is no death; there are no dead."

These words stand out on the cover of Edward C. Randall's new book. They are a challenge to the orthodox world, and through all of its pages runs this challenge to those whose ideas of God, of heaven, of hell, of a future life are based strictly upon the Bible. Yet Mr. Randall believes in life hereafter, based on positive knowledge given him from the living friends passed to the life beyond. Price $1.50. For sale at this office.

Prof. Lockwood's Books.

Store your mind with the great but demonstrative truths found in consecutive order only in these writings.

Prof. Lockwood is the only writer, thinker and lecturer in this country who affirms that the evolution of the soul of man is in strict accord and agreement with the evolution of the soul of nature; and that the only proof of immortality inheres in an analysis of nature's fundamental principles and the co-relation of cosmic elements and energies.

These great truths are explained and demonstrated from the plane of the Spiritual Philosophy founded on Nature itself.

The Molecular Hypothesis of Nature and Its Relation to the Philosophy of Spiritualism. A scientific demonstration of the invisible principles and attributes of nature and Modern Spiritualism. A mint of scientific truths as the basis of its phenomena. Price 25 cents.

The Infidelity of Ecclesiasticism—A Menace to the American Civilization. The entire hierarchy of Ecclesiasticism arraigned as infidels for subverting the scientific demonstrations of universities and colleges, by substituting the immoral phantoms of the Mosaic Hypothesis. It is a hot shot. Price 25 cents.

Historical, Logical and Philosophical Objections to the Dogmas of Reincarnation and Re-Embodiment. A concise and masterly review of the historical origin of Reincarnation as an ancient dogma. Its illogical claims and inconsistent assumptions. Its glaring defects and dogmas dissected. Price 25 cents.

The Spiritualism of Nature. Modern Spiritualism has its basic truths in nature, and is proven not by the bible or any sacred cosmogony, but by an analysis of nature's self-existent principles. Price 15 cents.

Continuity of Life a Cosmic Truth. The greatest book, and the greatest truth of any age; a book of 212 pages with several telling scientific illustrations. Continuity of life and the association of spirit realms demonstrated to be in scientific accord with principles of the Co-relation of Force, and the Conservation of Energy. The greatest book ever written in the defence and support of Spiritualism. Price $1.

The Relation Science Holds to Natural Philosophy and Its Conflict with Every Phase of Religion. In this essay the author shows that science is not a thing—a corporation or individual, but a process of inductive and deductive reasoning. Its acceptance means the death of Theurgical religions. Price 15 cents.

All of Prof. Lockwood's publications are on sale at The Progressive Thinker office, Chicago, Ill., and at the rostrum when he lectures. These treatises contain the wealth of a vast historical and scientific research.

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER.

It leads in presenting facts establishing the truth of Spirit Return, angelic and ennobling in its nature. It also leads in exposing the rotten fakes who use artificial toggery to dress themselves with, and then pose as a "spirit" right from the celestial regions, just as Mrs. Elsie Reynolds has done repeatedly, and for it is defended by a few elderly men and women, who don't care if she carries with her a Saratoga trunk full of "spirit" garbs. Yes, The Progressive Thinker leads in publishing the largest Spiritualist paper in the world. Read the following from a Minister of the gospel, illustrating in every particular the truth of spirit return.

It Reads Like a Fairy Tale.

"OF ANOTHER AND EQUALLY SURPRISING 'MATERIALIZATION,' THE ARCHDEACON TOLD AS FOLLOWS:

"'ONE ALSO JOINED US WHOM I AND MY WIFE HAD IN THE FLESH LONG AGO KNOWN AS 'ALICE.' HER WOMANLY SHAPE GREW FROM THE LEFT SIDE OF THE ENTRANCED MEDIUM. HER VOICE IN A WHISPER WAS RECOGNIZED AS SHE GREETED ME WITH THE WORDS 'SO GLAD TO SEE YOU' EVEN DURING HER BUSY TIME OF PSYCHIC PARTURITION; AND WELL REMEMBERED INDICATIONS OF IDENTITY PROCLAIMED HER TO BE OUR DEAR ALICE OF FORMER YEARS BEFORE I WENT TO INDIA AND BEFORE HER FRIEND, MY WIFE, LIVED IN ITALY.

"'THERE HAD ALWAYS BEEN A FEMININE PLAYFULNESS OF SELF-WILL ABOUT THE MAIDEN, AND THIS WAS NOW SEEN IN HER LAUGHING OPPOSITION TO THE WILL OF 'SAMUEL' IN CONTROL. SHE WALKED ABOUT THE ROOM, IN MANY WAYS WITH GIRLISH CONTUMACITY AND ENGAGING SUPERCILIOUSNESS ACTING THE PART OF A WILLFUL YOUNG LADY, JUST TO SHOW THAT SHE WAS NOT TO BE ORDERED ABOUT AND HAD A WILL OF HER OWN. AT MY LAUGHING SUGGESTION THAT FOR 'SAMUEL'S' MOMENTARY PETULANCE THE SPIRIT MAIDEN SHOULD BOX HIS EARS SHE MERRILY RESPONDED AND, SAYING, 'O, YES, I WILL DO THAT,' STEPPED GAYLY UP TO THE MEDIUM, LIFTED HER HEAD, AND MIRABILI DICTU, BOXED HIS EAR.'"

London, Nov. 8.—Twenty yards of muslin, [as set forth in the foreign correspondence of the Chicago Tribune] bundled loosely together in Chichester at midnight, are declared to have arrived in London five minutes later. The distance between the two cities on a direct line is a trifle over seventy miles! The explanation—psychic parcels post. Imagine, too, a giant Egyptian, 3,000 or more years old, munching an apple in the full glare of gaslights in a London drawing room in the twentieth century.

These and other equally astonishing things are told of as actual happenings by a high dignitary of the Church of England.

Considering the immense amount of publicity attracted Americans probably have already learned through the cable dispatches that a rather extraordinary controversy has been going on in this country between a venerable archdeacon and a world famous "professor" of the art of conjuring on the subject of Spiritualistic manifestations.

Archdeacon a Remarkable Man.

The church dignitary in question is Archdeacon Thomas Colley, and as this is by no means the first time that his name has figured largely in the news and always in connection with occult matters, American readers may have felt some curiosity as to the personality of this somewhat extraordinary churchman. The archdeacon's many and surprising activities make him worth telling about, even were it not for the fact that besides being one of the most ardent students in England of supernatural doings, he claims to have had perhaps the most extraordinary psychic experience of which there is a record.

That such a description of the archdeacon's ghostly adventures is no exaggeration, can be judged from the account of them which has just been given to me. As to their significance, readers will decide for themselves, but meantime it may be said that there is no question whatever as to the archdeacon's standing as a clergyman of the Church of England. After a distinguished early career in this country, he was invited by Bishop Colenso to go to South Africa, and upon accepting was made archdeacon of Natal, a position which he held for many years. He is now rector of Stockton, near Rugby, and perhaps the most generally beloved man in that section of England.

His "Psychic Parcels Post."

Archdeacon Colley has been experimenting with supernatural phenomena for over thirty years. Of all the extraordinary experiences which he claims to have had in that time, however, perhaps none is more amazing that that with what he himself describes lightly as the "psychic parcels post." Here is the story of the "happening" which, for greater accuracy, I give in the archdeacon's own words:

"At Southsea, some years ago, I with no little discomfort wore all day under my clothes and next the skin, several yards of white muslin. In the evening, still wearing it, I cycled to Chichester, for a surprise visit to a young lady medium of my own developing. Making there an unwrapped up small bundle of the attire, and loosely pinning my card to it with no other address, I AND A FRIEND AND THE YOUNG LADY'S SISTER SAW THE MUSLIN FADE AWAY, DISAPPEAR, AND MELT LIKE VAPOR FROM THE LAP OF THE LITTLE MEDIUM.

"It was then nearly midnight and I had willed the muslin to go to London to a friend. Next day came a telegram from my friend, quickly followed by a letter to the effect that at the first hotel he had chanced on—having been to the opera and missed the last train that would have taken him to his home out of London—the muslin and card so insecurely pinned to it, HAD FALLEN UPON HIS FACE JUST AS HE HAD GOTTEN INTO BED, AND SEEING MY NAME AND ADDRESS HE WIRED TO ME THE FIRST THING IN THE MORNING.

"He afterwards found that it had taken less than five minutes by aerial flight of about seventy miles from Chichester to secure midnight delivery of the goods in London somewhere at a chance hotel by psychic parcels post."

Invokes Spooks by Gaslight.

This astounding story, told and vouched for by a respected pillar of the church, is, however, little more surprising than many of the accounts of extraordinary "materializations" witnessed by him in London and elsewhere given to me by Archdeacon Colley. According to him, the scene of these generally has been his drawing room during the evening, WITH GASLIGHTS FLARING FROM MANY CHANDELIERS, while the coming of the psychic bodies has been as follows:

"As a column of support, standing at his right side, I with my left arm at the back usually upheld our entranced medium, having thus the best opportunity that could be desired for closely observing what took place. Then was seen steaming, as from a kettle spout, through the texture and substance of the medium's black coat, a little below the left breast, toward the side, a vaporous filament, which would be almost invisible until within an inch or two inches of our friend's body.

"Then it grew in density to a cloudy something, which would step forth timidly or occasionally boldly and naturally, to companion with us mortals. Exhaling again to invisibility in a cloud (sucked back into his body) were they withdrawn from us wistfully gazing on their mysterious departure, and noting this or that particular phase of it within a few inches of the point of their inscrutable disappearance and evanishment."

Thus, according to the archdeacon, came the most remarkable of all his "psychic visitors," whom he named "the Mahedi."

Favorite Spirit Gobbles Up Apples.

"From my own knowledge of and travels in Egypt," says the archdeacon, "I straightway guessed that in this materialized form we had to do with an ancient denizen of the valley of the Nile, who in stature reminded me of a mummy of gigantic proportions I once saw in some museum at Milan or Rome. He was, however, by no means a mummy now, though as to his dead body, it may be that his earthly remains yet in some mummy case are slowly crumbling into dust.

"The bronze-hued skin of our abnormal visitor I was suffered closely to scrutinize with my Stanhope lens, and I observed the flesh markings, the finger nails and toe nails, the small hands, wrist, feet and ankles, the swarthy, hairy arms and nether limbs to the knee; the features mobile with life, yet at times with a sphinx-like cast of expression; the haughty, prominent, black, piercing, but not unkindly eyes; hair lank and jet, with mustache and beard; long and drooping limbs, wiry and muscular; and height some 6 feet 8 inches.

"'The Mahedi' was interested in everything around him. He walked up and down the drawing room examining different articles with great wonder. Presently he espied on a side table a dish of baked apples. I got him to eat them. The medium was a dozen feet away at the other end of the room. He had refused an apple, averring he could taste those the Egyptian at the other end of the room, in the full glare of the gaslights, was gobbling. AS THE EGYPTIAN FINISHED HE APPLES I HELD A PIECE OF PAPER TOWARD THE MEDIUM AND THE SKIN AND CORE OF THE APPLES EATEN BY 'THE MAHEDI' FELL FROM THE MEDIUM'S LIPS INTO THAT PAPER."

Dead Friend Floats Around Room.

Of another and equally surprising "materialization" the archdeacon told as follows:

"One also joined us whom I and my wife had in the flesh long ago known as 'Alice.' Her womanly shape grew from the left side of the entranced medium. Her voice in a whisper was recognized as she greeted me with the words 'so glad to see you' even during her busy time of psychic parturition; and well remembered indications of identity proclaimed her to be our dear Alice of former years before I went to India and before her friend, my wife, lived in Italy.

"There had always been a feminine playfulness of self-will about the maiden, and this was now seen in her laughing opposition to the will of 'Samuel' in control. She walked about the room, in many ways with girlish contumacy and engaging superciliousness acting the part of a willful young lady, just to show that she was not to be ordered about and had a will of her own. At my laughing suggestion that for 'Samuel's' momentary petulance the spirit maiden should box his ears she merrily responded and saying 'O, yes, I will do that,' stepped gaily up to the medium, lifted her head, and, mirabili dictu, boxed his ears."

Ghosts Guard His Soldier Son.

Archdeacon Colley's son, Clarence, though an officer in the army—in a battery of the Royal field artillery stationed in India—is also a Spiritualist. He was married about a year ago to Miss Des Barres, youngest daughter of the late Maj. Des Barres, of Maryville, Fermoy, Ireland. The archdeacon says the young couple met through the introduction of a spirit medium. Talking of his son the archdeacon said:

"Through the intervention of the dead mother a spirit set to guard him when in danger. THIS SPIRIT, HIS GUARDIAN ANGEL, MATERIALIZES IN THE FORM OF A WHITE DOVE. THIS DOVE WOKE HIM ONE NIGHT AND HE DISCOVERED HIS WIFE WAS ILL AND NEEDED THE DOCTOR QUICKLY. HE RUSHED TO THE DOCTOR'S HOUSE, BUT FOUND THE GARDEN GATE LOCKED AND SIX FOOT WALL IMPOSSIBLE TO CLIMB. SUDDENLY HE WAS LEVITATED OVER THE WALL, ROUSED THE DOCTOR, AND SAVED HIS WIFE.

"On many occasions my son has been mysteriously levitated out of danger, and the white dove has always hovered near. Once he was strangely pushed away from a spot on which a wall fell, again when a tree fell, and again from the paths of two runaway horses."

Among other things Archdeacon Colley is a shining light in the Society for the Prevention of Premature Burial, which he narrowly escaped himself. When a child he suddenly became ill. The doctor pronounced him dead. He was prepared for the grave and the coffin lid screwed down. At the cemetery, beside the yawning grave, the bearers heard a suspicious sound. The coffin was hastily opened, and the child sat up, gasping for breath.

The archdeacon has, because, perhaps, of that terrible experience, had his coffin made, and carries it about with him on his many travels. It is a coffin built on scientific principles, such as will prevent a premature burial. He has bequeathed his body to Birmingham University for scientific purposes.

Beloved by All Who Know Him.

In appearance the archdeacon is rather under medium height, with a large, well shaped head. He wears a full beard, now gray, for he is close on three score and ten. He is quiet, unassuming, and carries the air of the plains about him rather than the snug, polished complacency of the average wealthy clergyman of high degree. He has been rector of Stockton for five years. His parishioners approve of his advanced ideas and glory in his independence and fearlessness.

He has made of Stockton a model village. His church is always crowded, for he preaches remarkable, fascinating, and eloquent sermons, and the choir befits a city edifice rather than the church of an obscure village. The archdeacon's salary is not a tenth part of what he spends on the choir, the church and the village. Many of his own hymns and anthems are sung by his choir, for he is also a musician and composer.

Most remarkable of all his village works is that among the young people and children. It takes the form of a semi-Masonic Guild of Good Behavior, based on the mystic twain triangles of King Solomon, their six points suggesting the six worded Anglo-Saxon saying, "Do as you'd be done by." Swings and see-saws, quoits, bowls, skittles, archery, amateur photography, and the splendors of polarized light attract the youth of his parish to the rectory gardens.

And now a summer house, with camera obscura, lens, and finial on roof has lately been built overtopping the rectory wall, from which stretches down every Monday afternoon a streaming [illegible] this the boys and girls say from the village green the texts of holy scripture taught in Sunday school.

Now in Row With Conjurer.

Archdeacon Colley has raised the question of Spiritualism at several church conferences, but has always been howled down. At last year's great conference, however, he achieved a victory, for he then delivered his now famous address on Spiritualism and actual manifestations, his opening sentence being: "Do you think I have come here to damn my soul by telling lies for your amusement?" A thunder of negatives was the answer and after the address he was honored with a special vote of thanks.

Seven months ago J. N. Maskelyne, the famous conjuror of "Egyptian Hall," attacked some assertion made by Archdeacon Colley as to psychic workings, and one particular manifestation. He boasted that he as a professional illusionist could produce the same effects on the stage of his famous entertainment hall, whereupon Archdeacon Colley offered to give Mr. Maskelyne $5,000 if he could do as he claimed. The challenge was promptly accepted. The archdeacon deposited the money in the Leaming bank.

For seven months Maskelyne worked to perfect his illusion. He has just produced it. His theater is crowded to the doors at every performance. He has publicly laid claim to the $5,000. But Archdeacon Colley in turn claims that the terms of the challenge, in the matter of committee of investigation, have not been carried out and that the illusion is by no means the proper and successful one. For days the fighting has gone on, gathering in vehemence. Spiritualists are in sympathy with the archdeacon. The public generally, and strange to say, the church in the person of a majority of the ministers of the gospel, approve of Maskelyne's side of the question.

Pamphlets have been printed and circulated on both sides. The result has been an action at law for libel against Maskelyne and a threatened lawsuit against Archdeacon Colley to recover the $5,000 claimed to have been fairly won.

MANY EXCELLENT TESTS.

Wonderful Manifestations of Spirit Power.

Thursday, October 25, 1906, Mrs. H. W. Verner of Pittsburgh, Pa., Joseph Drouillard and sister, Miss Marie Drouillard of Gallipolis, O., journeyed to the home of Mrs. Elizabeth Blake, a spiritual medium, at Rockwood, O., a village opposite Huntington, W. Va.

In the evening we held an enjoyable seance. The circle was harmonious, and results good.

The manifestations far exceeded our anticipations, owing to the combined psychic power of the writer, with that of the medium, Mrs. Blake.

Sixteen correct names of relatives and friends were given and they conversed with us. Five generations were represented, much to our surprise and pleasure.

The tone of voice varied from a distinct whisper to a clear voice in ordinary conversation. The messages were those of love and joy, encouraging and advising by words of sympathy and kindness.

The spirit lights were numerous, bright and beautiful. The accompaniment of the guitar to the singing was well rendered and once a spirit voice sang while playing the guitar in soft sweet tones.

Mrs. Blake's son came at the close of the seance, and sang with his father, two stanzas of a hymn, in perfect accord, and in a clear and distinct voice, which was remarkable.

Mrs. Elizabeth Blake is the spiritual medium whom Prof James H. Hyslop, the eminent author and Secretary of the American Society for Psychical Research, and friends visited, September 29, and obtained manifestations of spirit return, through Mrs. Blake's mediumship, the account of which was published in The Progressive Thinker of September 29, 1906.

DR. CAIRD'S NEW ORGANIZATION.

The Writer Seems to Think "There Is a Positive Demand That Spiritualists Create an Organization That Should Command the Respect of the General Public and Church Members."

Alex Caird, M. D., 598 W. Monroe Street, Chicago, Ill.—Dear Sir:—I read with much interest your resolution presented to the late N. S. A. Convention, and the action taken thereon; also your communication in a recent number of The Progressive Thinker, and I desire to express my sympathy in the movement which you are agitating.

I am a member of the Universalist Church, but a convert to spirit communication and religion. I cannot unite with any Spiritualist society as far as my observation extends, because there is a lack of real purpose, religious sentiment, harmony, and a wholesome regard for matters that tend to make a permanent and commendable organization.

I have only good-will for all churches of the old faith, for I realize that they have prepared the way for a broader and better faith, but their former liberty is narrowness in this century, and being unable to broaden out, it remains for converts to Spiritualistic views to withdraw.

There must be a religious home provided that will meet the needs of this class of people; one combining the religion, philosophy and phenomena of the new faith, with a proper regard for the moral standing of its constituency. It is in a measure immaterial what name such an organization may bear, if only it meets the requirements of the hour. It appears that one based on the principles as outlined by you would be a great improvement over present societies, as there is a positive demand that Spiritualists create an organization that shall command the respect of the general public and former church members.

we are passing into a great occult wave, which is destined to revolutionize the religions of the world, are the Spiritualists awake to their opportunity or must we look for another?

Theosophy and Mediumship.

Some Misapprehensions Kindly Corrected, by a Member of The Theosophical Society.

As I am a member of the Theosophical Society, the above heading in No. 886 of The Progressive Thinker attracted my attention, and I was greatly pleased with the truly philosophical tone and the impartial, kindly temper displayed in the argumentation of Brother Charles Dawbarn. This pleasant spirit encourages me to point out some slight misapprehensions that crept into the argument, for I feel convinced that he will take my remarks in the same brotherly spirit with which I shall offer them, and which ought to characterize both Spiritualists and Theosophists, seeing that it is truth and nothing but the truth which we are trying to realize.

The article treats the terms Theosophy and Theosophical Society, as almost synonymous, which does not agree with the facts. Theosophy is a general term used to simplify the Hindu philosophy, treating of cosmogony and man's place in nature, or the relation of man to nature. It is a translation of the Hindu term, "Brahma Vidya;" that is, "God Knowledge," or Divine Knowledge, Divine Wisdom.

Since the British rule was well established in India, more particularly since Sir William Jones began translating Hindu literary treasures, the doctrines of Theosophy have spread to an ever increasing extent throughout the civilized world, and many Theosophical societies, that is, societies for the study of Theosophy, were established, the so-called "Theosophical Society" spoken of by Brother Dawbarn being one of them. That this society is neither more nor less than an association for the study of this Hindu philosophy is evident from the three fundamental objects officially declared to be the only objects pursued by the society. These objects are:

First—to form a nucleus of the universal brotherhood of humanity without distinction of race, creed, sex, caste or color.

Second—to encourage the study of comparative religion, of philosophy and science.

Third—to investigate unexplained laws of nature and the powers latent in man.

Is there a Spiritualist that could not subscribe to these three objects? I have studied Spiritualism for almost fifty years, but did not hesitate a moment to subscribe to them. They are the only rules a member of the Theosophical society is bound to observe. They do not hinder me to continue my researches in the Spiritualist fold or, in fact, in any field of knowledge I am pleased to take up. When I hesitated to become a member of the society, Col. Olcott told me "There is no risk. The door is always open; you may go out again free from any restriction whatever."

The society has no creed, no compulsory regulations of any kind; it is neither more nor less than a society for the study of Theosophy, which term includes all the philosophic doctrines of what is commonly called occultism.

There is no "Gospel of Theosophy," such as mentioned by Mr. Dawbarn. The "Old Diary Leaves," by Col. Olcott are nothing more than a historical sketch of the first years of the society, extremely interesting on account of the light it throws upon the incidents and people connected with the initiatory events of the society. No reader of independent thought will take the Colonel's opinions regarding adepts, mediums and spirit messages as self-evident. The important passages of the book are reports of actual facts, chiefly those referring to Madame Blavatsky, who is the mental founder of the society.

I never looked upon her as anything else than a medium of uncommonly great power; whether greater or less than A. J. Davis, I cannot undertake to say. But what I can say is this, that her teachings appeal to me more powerfully than those of A. J. Davis, not on account of style or beauty of diction, but because their tenets confirm, elucidate and expand the principles of knowledge and thought which I had previously received from the study of philosophy and science, chiefly the German Transcendental philosophy and the sciences of nature, or what the English would call "Natural Philosophy."

Defects of character, such as violence of temper, intemperate language, etc., as mentioned by the Colonel, or "tobacco-soaked organisms," as mentioned by Brother Dawbarn, do not necessarily vitiate mediumship to a great extent. They will influence the quality of the communicating entity, when the latter does communicate, because the medium exercises attraction upon the entity. But many spirits communicate because their own conditions compel them to do so. Of this kind are earth-bound spirits which may be in any stage of development, from the lowest to the highest condition of communicating beings. Those who impart messages of love, of knowledge, of spiritual helpfulness; are independent of the spiritual condition of the medium, but not of his, or her mediumistic or psychic power. That is why powerful mediums may be by the holiest of archangels in spite of any ethical defect in the medium's character. Reasoning from ethical considerations will, therefore, not justify arguments like this, that "untruthfulness, foul language, or tobacco-smoking "can determine whether a communicating entity must be an elemental or an adept." The nature of the message communicated is the only criterion by which we can decide what kind of spirit imparted the communication.

But be the message ever so truthful, so angelic, let us not be misled into a belief that the communicating entity is "God Himself," whatsoever we may understand by the term "God." Spirits bent on imparting messages to man, are always like ourselves to a greater or less extent. Let them be ever so far in advance of us in knowledge, they are finite, bound by outer conditions as we are, only less so to greater or less extent. Judge them by their fruits alone: There is absolutely no other possible criterion.

So I judge that Madame Blavatsky was used by spirits possessed of knowledge immeasurably far ahead of the Knowledge I possessed, because their messages agreed with my own inward light and thus enlarged and elucidated my own knowledge. If "Isis Unveiled" does not teach either reincarnation nor karma, Brother Dawbarn may be quite correct in assuming that Madame Blavatsky—not the "Mahatma guides," as he jocosely says—was ignorant of the doctrine. She was a most wilful creature and doubtless her will counteracted the guides to a great extent, so that they were not able to speak of reincarnation through her. She had to learn it in India before she could be made to receive and reproduce the doctrine.

As regards Brother Dawbarn's disbelief of reincarnation and karma, it is not my purpose to set myself up as a teacher, but I have to say, that it is a mistake to hold the belief in reincarnation responsible for the fact that some Hindus will leave their wives and families in order to devote themselves to ascetic practices and meditation. They will do so much rather because they want by such self-mortification, which is part of the "Yoga" practice to attain to "Yoga," that is, union with the Divine Spirit, which union shall protect them from the necessity of reincarnation. This misconception of the idea of reincarnation is the result of a misunderstanding of the monistic conception of the world, which is misunderstood to mean that the actual world, in which we live, is not a reality but an illusion, called Maya; that it is nothing but a reflection of Divine thought; that this Divine thought is the only reality, the material world is non-existent except as a covering, a garment of Divine thought. So they conclude that they must escape from the world of illusion and sink into union with the Divine thought in order to attain eternal bliss in Nirvana. True, without a belief in reincarnation the fear of the world of illusion would probably not have been so great as to drive those fanatics from earth life in order to save their souls. But if we hold the theory of reincarnation responsible for this error, we might as well pronounce Christianity responsible for the criminal errors of the "Holy Inquisition, which burned the heretic in order to save his soul from the damning influences of earth life. There never was a truth which was not misunderstood and transformed by ignorance into a curse. Let us beware of adding to the number of these baneful errors already existing.

I have tried to state what I conceive to be the truth in the questions discussed by Brother Dawbarn, because his fairness of spirit and the fact that he, as a Spiritualist, has managed to retain an open mind for the teachings of Theosophy, have inspired me with a deep interest for him, and I hope I have not spoken in vain. I am fully aware that "truth" is not an absolute being, but a statement of fact corresponding to the fact as we are able to see it.

Our German poet-philosopher, Lessing said: "If God held in his right hand the truth, and in his left the struggle for acquiring truth, and asked me: which of the two will you have? me: Which of the two will you have? I should say: let me have the struggle for the truth—truth itself is for God alone. A MEMBER.

"YE MUST BE BORN AGAIN."

An Incisive Sermon From an Incisive Text.

To the Editor:—One of the world's greatest spiritual mediums declared in most emphatic terms to those who came to him for instruction: "Marvel not that I say unto you, you must be born again." Born of the spirit.

To him who, in daily practice, puts the material world and flesh, and the lusts of the same, above the life of the spirit, and the spirit world, it is a waste of time to make quotations from the most ancient records of spiritual teachings. He is joined to his idols, the world and the flesh, and the order is: "Let him alone!" He is not seeking the truth for the truth's sake, that he may order his life thereby. He has seen and heard wonders and had "tests" that have fully convinced him that endless burning for such as he is a fable, and has jumped to the conclusion that he is not to be brought to bar for the acts of his mortal career, therefore "eat, and especially drink, for the kingdom of heaven is ours."

I am much pleased to see that Moses Hull, though tardy in the finding, has struck the key-note, yet there is the shadow of the quaver in the tone lest some would-be Spiritualist high roller be offended.

His admonition as to the danger of our candlestick being removed and given to another seems to one who has cast off his fetters to a creed, like looking after the horse is stolen. Is it not patent to all who know something of history, that we are in the rut and on the toboggan slide that leads to churchianity of the fashionable type?

The truth that we are, is written in such characters that he who runs may read.

Let us back to the text: "You must be born again."

This means infinitely more than the resurrection of the spirit body from the mortal body at its separation from the latter, in the event called death. To him who is unborn of the spirit, mortal life and the things pertaining to it make the sum-total of the things he cares for. He does not know that he is a spirit, nor does he care to be informed of the fact. "One world at a time," is his conception of the most exalted wisdom.

With the orthodox dogma of endless future punishment out of the way, he sees no bar to doing as he pleases inside the line of human law.

If he is by nature a fraud and cheat, a thief and liar, he finds unlimited opening for the vent of his bias. It is needless to cite instances, they are known to all. This man and his class—they are numbered as flies in summer—may have dressed and fared sumptuously every day, yet when he and they cross the mortal life line, as water finds its level, so he and his kind drop to their own places where, ten thousand witnesses, and still they come from higher realms, testify: "There is weeping, wailing, gnashing of teeth over lost opportunities."

Only heeding the injunction of the mediums of olden times, supplemented by the mighty influx of the same spirit in this our day, can avert the awful catastrophe.

"You must be born again."

How am I to go about the task? for task it is—ask the partially awakened worldlings.

The way is plain and so simple that no one need err therein.

First, take to your heart the lesson that all men are your brothers, and that the things you do to one of the least of these you do to all including yourself. This law compels you to work righteousness with all and to all. Until you become willing to take this decided stand, all you have done or may do will avail you little; standing upon this rock, your footing is sure and the way luminous.

The Brotherhood of Man.

This and its meaning are the lessons wise spirits have tried to impress on the minds of groveling mortals in all the mortal ages past, with what success the history of the nations has told us.

By the light of this revelation of a vital truth we may measure the magnitude or littleness of the upliftment of humanity since the advent of the raps, fifty-eight years ago.

Our "reverends" of all sizes who are working like beavers to establish another sect, may go into rhapsodies over a frozen hell and its defunct proprietor, and point to the millions who have had "tests," and to cold materialists who have been convinced, but the cool-headed questioner wants to know how much common humanity has been moved to cease its inhumanity to man in the last half century?

If our spiritual knowledge leads us no further than the outer court of the spiritual temple, we had better never have heard of the raps or had a test.

"Much given, much gained." Our vaunted knowledge may be as millstones about our necks in a coming day. J. RIGDON.

IN THE MORNING COMETH DAY.

The burden is heavy and hard to be borne;
The feet, too, are weary and bleeding and torn;
The spirit is drooping and fainting and weak,
The heart full of sorrow the lips cannot speak.

The clouds gather nearer, the sun out of sight,
While surely approaches the shadow of night;
The rocks in the pathway loom up dark and black,
So hard to go forward, but death to go back.

The steps falter feebly, the eyes fill with tears,
The mind thickly crowded with doubts and with fears;
At last, from the full heart breaks out the sad cry,
"I cannot live this way, oh! God, let me die!

Peace, peace! weary sufferer; night soon will be gone.
The heaviest shadows are just before dawn.
Rest now—wait in patience; day cometh, though slow;
Remember 'tis only through suffering we grow.

If thou wouldst ever be a hero in life,
Stand up for the truth, shrink not from the strife.
Then live for the highest, the purest, the best;
Be true to thyself, and trust God for the rest.

SPIRIT OF SON APPEARED.

Mrs. Demorest Declares That It Told Her of His Death.

Mrs. Elizabeth J. Demorest, of Pittsburg, was in Chester last night on business connected with the exhuming and removal of the body of her son, Fred Demorest, from Locust Hill cemetery, Chester, to Pittsburg, where it fas cremated.

To a representative of the Tribune at the home of Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Arner last night, Mrs. Demorest declared that she was aided in her search for the remains of her son by the return of his spirit to her and to twenty other people, all of whom are willing and ready to bear witness that such is true.

About the first question Mrs. Demorest put to the reporter was, "Is spirit return a truth?" Continuing she said: "I know it is true. Upon my return to my home after Fred had been drowned his spirit appeared to me while I was seated in a chair and said that his body had been found but not identified. I asked him if his body had been buried in the ground, and he replied that it had. Later his spirit appeared to the circle in East Liverpool. After giving his name he said that he had been drowned and was buried as unknown. He appealed to them to send for his mother. I was sumoned and told of the incident. At another circle held in East Liverpool, the spirit of my son sang part of the song, "Is My Name Written There?"

"When his spirit reappeared to me I inquired where his body had been buried, and he replied 'In West Virginia, with my head in the direction of the Ohio river.' This led me to investigate the burial of the unknown body here, which proved to be that of my son. Oh, I have much to be thankful for, my friends, even in this the hour of my great trouble, when I know that my son's body has been recovered from the river."—East Liverpool Tribune, Ohio.

The First Spiritual Church of Astoria, Oregon.

To the Editor:—I am a reader of your valuable paper and am well pleased with it, and wish you all the success in the year about to open which your paper so well deserves.

Permit me to give you a short sketch of the wonderful and glorious work done by the Rev. R. E. Coon and wife, missionaries for the states of Oregon and Washington.

Dr Coon was with us on Sunday, November 4, and gave us two lectures followed by spirit messages by his wife. Then, as he could not stay with us, he kindly left his wife, Mrs. L. M. Coon, a noble worker in the good cause who has held four circles, which I attended, and find her a first-class medium.

We have learned to love the Doctor and his wife during their stay with us, and we know that they will help the cause to grow. Sister Coon had to leave us Monday morning, but has promised to return and help us all she can. She is an honest medium, and as we HAVE BEEN OVERRUN WITH FRAUDS THAT HAVE INJURED THE CAUSE OF SPIRITUALISM, we are very much pleased to welcome the Doctor and his wife and have a new law laid down for us. They have told us of the N. S. A. and the good work they are doing and we wish to let them know in our feeble way we are trying to reach the same standard that they are.

Before leaving the First Church of Astoria was organized through the undivided effort of Sister Coon, who has labored faithfully and well to see us started in the right direction. She gave us an interesting lecture in the evening, followed by many messages from our departed friends. We meet in our little hall each Sunday evening and have the promise of the Doctor and his wife to be present whenever they can, and also to see that we have many good lecturers present.

The society has elected Mrs. Amanda Hall, President; Mrs. M.K. McCrosky, Vice-President; Mrs. Rebecca Gillette, Treasurer, and Miss McCrosky as Secretary; with the following as the quorum. M. A. Hall, Wallace McCrosky, Agnes Josephson, Chester Palmer, and Ida Eldredge, Treasurer.

We ask of you all a good thought that we may grow and prosper and thank you for your consideration.

MRS. SOPHIA A. HALL. President.

BIRDIE McCLOSKY, Secretary.

NOW IS YOUR TIME—

PRICE REDUCED.

In order to place that valuable book, "MYSTERIES OF THE SEANCE," (written by a life-long Spiritualist) in the hands of as many Spiritualists and investigators as possible this winter, I have decided to CUT THE PRICE IN TWO, and will, until the supply on hand is exhausted, mail it to any address for 12 cents per copy—less than half the former price. This book gives all the methods employed by fake mediums in producing bogus manifestations in all the different phases, and instructs the reader how to detect and expose the fraud. A silver dime and red stamp brings you the book, prepaid, by return mail. Get it and avoid being fooled. Address, ED LUNT, Roxbury, Mass.

"Talmagean Inanities, Incongruities, Inconsistencies and Blasphemies; a Review of Rev. T. DeWitt and Rev. Frank DeWitt Talmage's oft-repeated attacks upon Spiritualism." By Moses Hull. Price, 10 cents.

A PSALM OF LIFE

Life is real, life is earnest,
And the grave is not its goal;
"Dust thou art, to dust returnest,"
Was not spoken of the soul.

Nor enjoyment, nor yet sorrow,
Is our destined end or way;
But to act that each to-morrow
Find us further than to-day.

Art is long and time is fleeting
And our hearts, though stout and brave,
Still, like muffled drums, are beating
Funeral marches to the grave.

In the world's broad field of battle,
In the bivouac of life,
Be not like dumb driven cattle;
Be a hero in the strife.

Trust no future, howe'er pleasant,
Let the dead Past bury its dead;
Act—act in the living present,
Heart within and God o'erhead.

Lives of great men all remind us,
We can make our lives sublime;
And, departing, leave behind us
Footsteps on the sand of time,

Footsteps that perhaps another,
Sailing o'er life's solemn main,
A forlorn and shipwrecked brother,
Seeing shall take heart again.

Let us then be up and doing,
With a heart for any fate;
Still achieving, still pursuing,
Learn to labor and to wait,
—H. W. Longfellow.

SIX HISTORIC AMERICANS.

A Book That Every American Freethinker Will Delight to Own.

By John E. Remsburg.

The work consists of two parts, "The Fathers of Our Republic," and "The Saviors of Our Republic." In regard to Paine's religious views, Mr. Remsburg establishes the negative of the following (1) Was Paine an Atheist? (2) Was he a Christian? (3) Did he recant? Page after page of the most radical freethought sentiments are culled from the correspondence and other writings of Franklin and Jefferson, which show that these men were as pronounced in the rejection of Christianity as Paine and Ingersoll. That Washington was not a Christian nor a believer in Christianity. In support of Lincoln's infidelity he has collected the testimony of more than one hundred witnesses.

The book is handsomely bound in cloth, giving fine portraits of George Washington, Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Paine, Thomas Jefferson, Abraham Lincoln and U. S. Grant; also portrait of the author.

This book contains 365 pages, printed on heavy paper, well bound in cloth. Price, $1.25. For sale at this office.

Everybody Is Reading

Every Man a King

Or Might in Mastery

The latest book by O. S. MARDEN Editor of Success

It is the sort of book that grips one by its truths in relation to the inner self and its possibilities—that one wants to give to a friend after reading.

A millionaire, head of one of the greatest shoe houses in the world, writes: "Under the doctor's advice I spent the last three days at home, and put in the time reading, 'Every Man a King.' It did me great good, and has changed me so that I am anxious to give a good word to everybody in the future."

THE PATHWAY OF THE HUMAN SPIRIT.

Or, the Pathway of the Spirit Traced.

By J. M. Peebles, M. D., M. A.

Did it pre-exist and does it reincarnate again into mortal life? When did it enter the body? What is its form—how does it relate to the soul body? Can it leave the human body and return again? Can it live in and control another mortal body? These questions and many others are asked and answered by the Doctor in this, his latest book, of two hundred pages. Price 75 cents; postage, 12 cents.

"The Molecular Hypothesis of Nature." By Prof. Wm. M. Lockwood. Professor Lockwood is recognized as one of the ablest lecturers on the spiritual rostrum. In this little volume he presents in succinct form the substance of his lectures on the Molecular Hypothesis of Nature; and presents his views as demonstrating a scientific basis of Spiritualism. The book is commended to all who love to study and think. Price, 25 cents.

"Just How to Wake the Solar Plexus." By Elizabeth Towne. Valuable for health. Price, 25 cents.

A COMING HYMN BOOK.

Rev. G. Tabor Thompson, of 518 Spruce street, Philadelphia, is preparing a new Hymn Book to be used in connection with his spiritualistic meetings in the above city. When he was connected with the Baptist denomination as an Evangelist, and afterward a Minister, he edited and published a book called "Th Ministry of Song," which had a large sale. Being a writer and composer, it is expected he will give something to the cause of Spiritualism which will meet a long-felt need. At first the book will be printed as a word edition, and sell for 10 cents; later a music number may be added. If there are those in our ranks would like to contribute hymns for this work which can be used in connection with familiar tunes, they are invited to submit them to him for examination and approval.

Societies which are in need of something in the hymn line might write him for a sample. Some of his compositions will appear for the first time, and they should be in the homes of our people as well as in use by the societies. Mr. Thompson started to preach for our ranks last june, and has already built up one of the largest (if not the largest) societies in Philadelphia. His services may be engaged for lectures, funerals, weddings, etc., in and about Philadelphia, at any time but Sunday.

SOMETHING'S HAPPENED! SOMETHING MISSING SOMETHING KILLED.

READERS LISTEN SHARP, DON'T MISS—BEST THING EVER HAPPENED!

Hundred years coming, here at last, full grown—so startling will say it's impossible—miracles don't happen, but wait, don't worry.

LADIES, YOUR PRAYERS ANSWERED—THERE'S NO MORE WASH DAY!

GLORY HALLELUJAH! IT'S DEAD! LAID AWAY! WIPED OUT FOREVER.

Washing machine swallows wash boards.

Blessing the Inventor.

The world's watched for the man to cut wash day in two. He lives—takes more than half—left only minutes—cut so much wash day's all over, changed—there's new way cleaning clothes—different from anything known—new principals, ideas, methods, NEW EVERYTHING. Wonderful, but true, family washing cleaned with no more work than getting a simple meal, less time—no rubbing, squeezing, pounding, packing, pressing, no injury—no drudgery—that's past. Good-by wash boards, washing machines, Hundreds—throw them away—the EASY WAY is here to bless humanity. Women have prayed for death of wash day—for clean clothes without rubbing—ruining health, looks—when they could wash, get dinner, see friends, indulge in recreation without fatigue—which women thought no more of washing clothes than to get a simple meal. That glorious day has come. The world's full wash boards, so-called washing machines, yet wash day same as ever—still long, dreary day—easier, no shorter, no better. Use wash board or washing machine, it's drudgery, long hours, hard work—backache—a day no woman forgets. Invention that killed wash day named EASY WAY—name tells whole story—easy on clothes—easy used—kept clean—handled—easy on women—makes washing easy—easy to buy and sell. Not called a machine—powers inside concealed—caution the way it gets dirt—has awful appetite for dirt—increases more it gets—goes after all the dirt in all the clothes at same time—little, but mighty—silent, but powerful—uses no spirits, yet works in darkness. OPERATED ON STOVE—move knob occasionally—that's all—scarcely anything to do but wait between batches—child can do it. All from old methods. Verdict: wash day to stand—EASY WAY goods. Saves 52 days drudgery yearly—makes woman's hardest work easiest household duty—saves clothes, labor, fuel, health, looks. Surprises all—sounds strange, is strange, but listen, it's no experiment, going on daily. You can do it.

MRS. FRITTER, Norwood, writes:—"With EASY WAY I clean a week's washing in less than an hour without rubbing." W. BROWN, Ohio, writes:—"Wash day now wash hour—EASY WAY does the work with perfect success." J. H. BARRETT, Ark., after ordering 36 Easy Ways, says:—"I don't understand why it does the work, but it does. You have the grandest invention I ever heard of. People are skeptical; have to be shown." J. W. MYERS, Ga., says: —"Find check to cover one dozen 'Easy Ways.' Easy Way greatest invention for womanhood, forever abolishing miserable wash day. Saves me turning old washer for hours. I am ready to have old washer accompany all others to the Dump. Sells itself." I. BECK, Ga., writes:—"Enclose order. Find Easy Way as represented. Worked 4 days and have 15 orders." J. T. PEAY, N. C., says:—"Been out 2 days—sold 1 dozen, for which enclose order. Everybody is carried away that sees it work." CHAS. BOWLES, O., writes:—"Where tried have given general satisfaction." Guaranteed, everything proven, old house, responsible, capital $100,000.00. Price only $5.00 complete, ready to use—sent to any address. Not sold in stores.

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 35 CHICAGO, ILL., DECEMBER 8, 1906. NO. 889

MAN AND HIS BRAIN.

A Brief Study in Mediumship. By Charles Dawbarn.

The constant detection of frauds by certain mediums who revel in physical manifestations is naturally most discouraging to the investigator who is seeking proof that spirits return and communicate with mortals.

Of course a shadow falls also upon the mental medium, though, usually, there is nothing more tangible before the court than a claim for obtaining money under false pretenses. But the fact remains that all mediumship is under a cloud in the minds of many who have grown discouraged by the contradictions and mistakes, even in the family circle, untainted by mortal fraud.

It is natural that earnest believers should dream of conditions that would protect both sensitive and sitter from all errors and mistakes. Their idea is founded on the conception that the spirit is a natural truth-teller if there is no mortal interference. A recent proposition by the editor of The Annals of Psychical Science reverts to the practice of the ancient oracles whose priests buried their sensitives in seclusion from public influence and freedom from worldly care. This editor begs for a fund of $250,000, hoping to work a similar miracle on behalf of modern oracles, by removing monetary temptation from the mortal who is an instrument for wireless telegraphy between heaven and earth. Everything is ready but the cash. Just a glint of gold is all that is needed to assure success.

The present writer sympathizes with such an aspiration, but proposes to present a few cold facts that render such a scheme impossible of success. A medium is a mortal who is sensitive to sights, sounds, and thought-impressions which find no echo in the normal brain. There are many just enough susceptible to astonish their neighbors. They are probably psychometric and telepathic, which are every day senses, and do not, necessarily, touch the line of communication with an unseen world. Just a step further and the line is crossed, and the living and the dead meet. Most fortunately for the world, comparatively few cross this line, and realize the experiences that follow.

The secret of the power by which mind can make use of matter is, so far, hidden in the safe-deposit of the divine; but the fact remains that certain cells in the human brain do receive and impart intelligence by means of vibration. A thought, whether received or imparted, is intelligence at work, using energy to compel motion in the brain cell. This is now accepted as a natural fact. Indeed Modern Spiritualism is founded on the proved fact that a thought can travel across space and echo itself in a distant brain. If those brains be mortal the process is called "telepathy." But if one of the intelligences has crossed the "divide" it is called "spirit return."

There is common belief that a man can at will control his own brain cell. That belief may sometimes be true, and sometimes it may not. No mortal has entire control of his brain, and we must remember that the man we recognize is known to us by his brain activity. He may be a musician or a mathematician—rarely both—and probably has a memory almost perfect in some phases, at nearly silent in others. His loves, his hates, his aspirations, his whole passional nature demands brain cells for their expression. The man we know and see is merely an expression of manhood through certain brain cells. He uses certain cells, and leaves others inactive, and the marvelous fact, as yet almost unstudied, is that these unused cells can be suddenly called into activity, whereupon a very different manhood appears. The man who is a saint in daily life is leaving unused certain cells which the hypnotist can call into activity, whereupon the saint disappears, and a very active sinner may take his place. I refer the student to the profound work of Dr. Morton Prince on "Dissociation of a Personality" wherein one patient has some six different expressions of her womanhood, each demanding the use of cells apparently unoccupied. This "Multiple Personality" is to-day a well attested fact.

The thought I want to follow now is that the cells in the mortal brain used by an outside intelligence are most likely to be those unused, or least used by the mortal himself. In other words a medium will exhibit powers that we do not recognize in his normal life. These unused cells may thus be a source of danger when called into sudden activity by an outside intelligence.

Yet further, the physiologist tells us that normal man makes use, to a large extent, of but one of the two halves or lobes into which his brain is divided. In case of injury to one he slowly learns to make use of the other. Science has seemed to teach that one lobe was little more than Nature's precaution against accident to the other. Still the thinker will recognize that when the coming man acquires the full use of every cell in both lobes he will have powers that will evolve a manhood impossible to-day. For the dynamo that now limits his life's expression will be doubled in power. Meantime we see that not merely are there cells "to let" in the brain lobe he uses now, but much of the other lobe is offering its unused capability to the intelligence that can wield and direct it. Such seems to be a fact in nature, making the limitations and possibilities of man the mortal. When we apply these facts to mediumship we learn a striking lesson in what we may call the martyrdom of the medium." So far as a spirit expresses himself through the brain of a mortal we now see that his easiest pathway will sometimes lie through cells unused, or but little by the mortal. Thus while the form of expression which has become automatic in each of us may show but little change, the thought back of the verbal expression may be exhibiting a different personality from that known to the friends of the sensitive. That mysterious change demands, for the most part, the use of brain cells which the owner rarely calls into activity.

Those who have studied the remarkable changes in Miss Beauchamp's mental activity see at once that the girl whose life was that of a saint, as Dr. Morton Prince tells us, would have little or no use for cells which expressed passional hatred and gross animal propensities. But those cells are there, all the same, and when they were called into activity Miss B., exhibited a personality which Dr. P. calls a "devil," otherwise Sally Beauchamp. Other brain cells, apparently unused by the doctor's normal patient, exhibited, when active, several phases of womanhood with a distinct personality to each, and each personality living a life of its own, though using the one body. We must grasp this wonderful truth in its fullness if we hope to understand mediumship.

Let us take, as illustration, the case of General Grant, or any other person apparently destitute of musical sensitiveness. If by accident or hypnotism, you know, if you allow yourself to reason, that the cells for the expression of time, tune, harmony, etc., were all there in the brain and larynx, though unused by the man we knew, who could not tell one tune from another.

No deity has said "let there be musical cells and expression in this brain," but cells already there have become active, and therefore another manhood has appeared. It does not follow that a spirit has suddenly appeared to control that brain. That may, or may not be, but we are compelled to recognize the important fact the normal owner of that brain will exhibit a personality according to the use made of his brain. In one section he shows us a saint. In another section we see a devil. Apparently the same selfhood may exhibit a number of very different personalities.

We must also notice that this natural fact works both ways. One to the injury, and the other to the benefit of the sensitive. If there were an outside influence—say a spirit—using the brain of Miss B., and that spirit were of the very pious variety, he could, of course, use the same cells as the saintly Miss Beauchamp, and, as a result, the normal girl would simply be a little more of what she was before, in other words, probably become a bigot and a fanatic. But if the usurping influence, whether a returned spirit or not, was the very opposite of a saint—like Sally, who made the life of Dr. Prince such a burden that he called her a devil—then that control would use, and have to use portions of the brain which the good little girl had never called into activity.

Now let us apply this fact, which the reader will recognize as truth, to the everyday sensitives in our streets and homes. Here is the man we call "a good man." That means that he has little use for brain cells that express animal passions and propensities. But if he be a born sensitive, he is some day exposed, perhaps in a public circle, to an influence that demands liquor and the indulgence of animal passions. We remember these cells are, more or less, in every human brain, and can be excited to activity. So that sensitive, who was before "a good man," astonishes us by becoming a bad man, because cells in his brain, formerly little used, are now active. Of course, there will be many intervals when the man seems his former self, with the old cells active, but for the remainder of his earth life he will never again be reliable as a "good man."

A mortal of pure life is thus exposed as a sensitive to influences that may exhibit a very unbalanced mind. Sometimes good, and sometimes bad. Mediumship is really the development of this tendency to use certain brain cells that have before been rarely occupied. Now let us remember that an accident, or a shock, as with Miss Fancher, Miss Beaumont, Rev. Hanna, and many others, may suddenly compel certain brain cells to activity, and others to silence. We have at once a new personality, and perhaps several of them. The normal mortal has become what we call "abnormal" because his intelligence is using brain cells that were little used before. This changes the field of memory, and often the tastes and talents. For instance, in one of the cases the new personality shows marked talent in sculpture and music. The man had not previously exhibited either talent. Now for either of these gifts certain brain cells were necessary. Of course they were there, but unused. A truthful person will become untruthful, as in French cases, and an honest man dishonest.

So far we see a normal mortal becoming abnormal. It is the same self or ego using different portions of the one brain. And, for our present study we mark it as the result of shock or accident. Such cases do not necessarily prove spirit return. They do prove a changed personality. And they prove that the owner was not using certain portions of his brain till he was compelled to. We note that hypnotism will produce the same effect as shock or accident. Every experimenter knows that his subject is usually very different when under influence. That means that other brain cells have become active. But hypnotism imposes the will of another intelligence on that brain. And facts of spirit return prove that other intelligence may sometimes be a human being who has no mortal body. So much we accept, and must acknowledge its danger to any sensitive who is exposed to such influences, whether by shock, accident or the hypnotic will power of either mortal or immortal.

The point to notice is that no change takes place in personality save as an effect on brain cells. If that change be in the normal line the sensitive will be what he was before, only more so. It becomes doubled in expression. But if unused, or little used brain cells are called into activity, you will hardly know your old friend or acquaintance.

The highest development of a man demands the use of his entire brain. To-day most doctors tell us that one lobe seems held ready for use if the other gets disabled. But development means use, and there can be no development of limb or brain cell without activity. So the coming man, if he be superior, will have greater use of his brain cells—all of them. Each for its proper use and submission to the whole. Such a man will hardly be subject to hypnotized will power. He will be too much of a man himself. Accident or shock may disable him, but his developed brother will understand both cause and effect. When we apply these truths to our mediums, we must understand that a sensitive is, to that extent, unbalanced, and certain portions of his brain contain "cells to let." If those cells are, in any way, called into activity, we have a life and conduct that show us a different man and woman, and we should all realize THIS IS WHAT MEDIUMSHIP MEANS. It is true we hear of guardian angels, and protecting conditions for mediums, but they are only guarding and protecting a limited manhood, and the more sensitive the mortal the more limited the manhood.

The ancient priest sought to protect his medium from outside influences, and measurably succeeded. That is impossible to-day. Our policy is to protect ourselves by suspecting the medium. It will not do to condone fraud. It is almost impossible, as we have seen, to protect a public medium against the use of her brain by inharmonious controls. The sitters themselves constitute a fearful risk to the medium in every public seance, and especially for physical phenomena. And that risk reacts upon all of us, as the result of such influences and teachings.

The only possible safety is in the home circle where mother, father, son, daughter, friend, surround the medium, and protect her aura from hostile entrance. But better still is the individual struggle to uplift manhood to a point at which he may, without fear, give greeting to a spirit visitor, and thus ennoble his own manhood.

There is another important thought that follows from these facts. We really know, and can know almost nothing of the selfhood and conditions of our loved ones gone before. We never knew their actual selfhood in earth life, but only so much as peeped out through certain cells. But all may be different with them now, and myriads thus compelled to be silent, who perhaps even promised to return. We only knew our loved one in earth life as she manifested through certain brain cells. What she may be now we cannot even guess. The tales of both heaven and hell told by inspired mouthpieces, are but attempts to realize the unrealizable, and to prove that which is impossible of proof.

We know the mortal has become immortal, and, personally, whatever I may believe, I KNOW but little of the life beyond. It is our belief that many imperfections will disappear in the next life, and that will include both mental and physical. This will, of course, include the use of brain cells almost shriveled to-day from lack of use. But our friend will thereby become as different a person as any of Miss Beauchamp's or Miss Fancher's personalities. This must woefully affect both spirit return and identification.

The all-important point of this article is that we only use a part of our brain cells now. Therefore the use of the whole brain, or even of another part of that brain, if it become spirit, will destroy the identity of our spirit friend, so far, at least, as we depend upon memory.

BEYOND A SHADOW OF DOUBT.

Spirit Return Established by Alex. Watt of the Scottish Army in the Boer War—He Was Led Out of Great Difficulty by a Spirit Taking Hold of the Muzzle of His Gun.

To the Editor:—Thank you for sending my paper last week, though my subscription was out. I have had a sick husband, and he has now passed away, and so neglected my paper. Enclosed find one dollar. I would not be without The Progressive Thinker; it is a help and comfort to me.

I send a true incident in connection with my brother in the Boer War. He wrote me from Scotland where he now is, and could tell me much more. He writes as follows:

"You ask for some of my experiences. I will give you one. I had a chum who enlisted at the same time I did. We had been in India together and had been fast friends. He was killed at my side at Spion Kop. About a month after his death I was scouting one night, and I found the enemy was about to make a night attack on a very weak part of our lines. Our people must be warned, and at once. It was pitch dark, but I had been a scout long enough to find my way even in the dark, so I made all haste to warn our lines, but I stepped into a hole and was stunned by the fall, and when I got my senses back, in a dazed manner I turned in the wrong direction. I did not find out my mistake for some time. When I did so, the cold sweat broke on me at the thought of how much depended on my getting back into the lines at once. I had lost my reckoning completely. I did not know which way to turn. I was in despair, when I saw the FAINTEST LINES OF MY DEAD CHUM'S FACE. The face was all I could see, and I felt something grasp the muzzle of my rifle and pull it to the right. I turned with it, and then I felt it pull forward. I followed. I moved quickly with that long, swinging pace we scouts acquire, but no matter how quickly I went I still felt a slight pull, sometimes to the right—a little then to the left, thus guiding me over bad ground, till at last I heard the welcome 'Halt! Who comes there?' of the sentry on the first line of our post. THEN THE GRASP WAS TAKEN FROM MY RIFLE, AND I FELT MY GUIDE HAD LEFT ME. I was just in time to warn them.

"I could tell you of many such things, some of them so very uncanny that you who are not versed in these matters, would be skeptical, but such knowledge as we possess opens up a most vital question; it is this: If the spirits of the departed can see us at all times, when we go into the great hereafter, will we be perfectly happy when we see those we loved and left? But enough for this time."

Which One Would It Be, You or Me?

To the Editor:—Having read with some interest the various communications in your valuable paper relative to the subject of Theosophy, as a Spiritualist and medium I desire to relate an experience I had something like a year ago, which, in a measure at least, set my mind at rest concerning the probability, to say nothing of the possibility of a spirit reincarnating in another body after having been freed from its own charnel house. My guide for the past four years has been a lady of national reputation while in the body, and a versatile writer of no mean pretense, as the writings she has given thruogh my hand indicate, and which I expect to give to the public soon in a bound volume.

While sitting in my room one day meditating on an article I had been perusing in the columns of your paper, the idea came to me that I would consult my guide concerning the matter, which I proceeded to do, thus-wise:

"Mrs. S.," I said, "you always seem to be present with me, and ever ready to answer a question, write or speak orally through my lips, etc. I am almost constrained to believe you have reincarnated yourself in my body."

"Well, Mr. P.," she replied, "your statement reminds me of a story I once heard, which I will relate to you. A certain young man who for some time had been a regular caller upon a young lady, with a view to matrimony, but who was somewhat bashful in his ways, called one evening, and had been sitting for some time in silent meditation, evidently at a loss for something to say, finally hit upon this happy expedient of making his desires known to his intended. Turning himself in his chair so he very nearly faced her, he exclaimed:

"'Mariar, I feel like a fool.'

"'Why, John,' she said, 'what's the matter with you?'

"'I was readin' in the scriptur' last Sunday that when two were jined in holy wedlock, they would be twain of one flesh. What's been botherin' me ever since, if sich a thing occurs 'twixt us, is, which one it would be, you or me,' and now Mr. P., I suppose if I have thus trespassed upon your rights, you will soon be in the same predicament that John was, you'll be wanting to know which it is, you or myself."

The humor of the thing set me to thinking. The story evidently was intended as a sarcasm directed at the theory of reincarnation for in her after remarks relating to the story, I noticed particularly that she considered such an idea in the light of a trespass. This with the fact that she treated the whole matter in so flippant a manner would indicate at least that she did not think the subject worthy of serious thought. The above with the further fact that since that time she has informed me that spirits do hover so near sensitives, spreading their magnetism over them in such a manner as to bring them almost completely within their control, which would in a measure account for the theory of reincarnation, and thus I believe. OBSESSION AND EVIL.

Says They Have No Standing in the Vocabulary of Spiritualism.

It does not seem that the word "Obsession" should have any standing, whatever, in the Spiritualistic vocabulary. It smacks altogether too much of the admission of the personal attributes of that devil, that has rendered such valiant service in the Christian church for so many years. The condition represented by the word "obsession," assumes that there are evil spirits over yonder, and that they frequently do most grievous wrong to mankind; that those evil spirits, when they were clothed with flesh on the earth, were prone to do evil and that continually; and that they have not forgotten their old tricks because of the change induced by death.

In the first place the belief in obsession implies that there is evil in this life, as well as in the world to come; just as Christianity has taught, for so long a time, that there is sin here and sinners in the world to come, suffering the eternal penalty of wrong doing. Substantially, these two conceptions of evil are the same. They are the hideous progeny of the same parents.

The intelligent thought of to-day, however, has no place for either the devil or obsession. In that thought there is no satanic majesty or existence of evil spirits, to return to earth to harass poor humanity. Infinite Power or God has made no mistakes in the creation and government of this universe of ours; and what men are pleased to call evil is a part of the universe, and Infinite Power is responsible for its existence.

Isn't it more rational and comforting to believe that evil, in its ultimate analysis, has no existence at all? Can we with our limited intelligence and means of knowledge, correctly judge the wisdom of Infinite Power?

"Then say not man's imperfect, heaven at fault; Say rather man's as perfect as he ought."

Isn't it more becoming our human weakness not to harshly criticise a power, even by implication, which we are incapable of understanding, and to reverently concede that

"All nature is but art unknown to thee;
All chance, direction, which thou canst not see;
All discord, harmony, not understood;
A partial evil, universal good"?

Besides, it is practically impossible to define evil or obsession. The same thing is very often an evil to one man and a blessing to another man. The butchery of the fatted ox is a serious evil to it, while its lifeless body furnishes excellent food for man.

In looking out upon mankind we discover a very great variety of looks, capacities and dispositions. No two individuals of the human family are, ever were, or ever will be, alike. Nature never duplicates any thing. No two persons think alike or act alike. And, in fact, no person is capable of thinking or action twice alike. All of this heterogeneity is the result of the evolution of Infinite Power; and to me it is conclusive evidence of the wisdom and goodness of that Power. If everything is alike, if every man, woman and child in the whole world were equally intelligent, beautiful and what is called good, the condition would not be endurable. It has been said that the vast vocabulary of Shakspeare is the principal reason why the reading of his immortal dramas affords so much pleasure.

The traveler never wearies of beautiful scenery, where the outlook is continually changing, while the contemplation of the most beautiful landscape, day after day, is tiresome. Nothing is more tedious than a thrice-told tale. And it is a scientific axiom, that diversity in unity is perfection.

So, all sorts of people of all sorts of make ups, are what makes this life worth living. And is it not probable that the children of men need the trying discipline and experience afforded them by what we call evil or wrong, in order to individualize their souls, and prepare them for the next stage of life?

The life which we are living is eternal, but it has many stages. We know that there is a great diversity of talents among mankind in this stage of life, and it appears reasonable that such diversity must exist in the Hereafter. If the soul takes itself along when it goes hence, this must be so.

A monotonous paradise would be worse than an orthodox hell. The soul never grows strong by inaction, and we will likely have some perplexing trials to strengthen us. In the sweet "bye and bye."

There is no evil, there is no room for it in the boundless universe of God. There is no such thing as obsession, except in the mind of erring man, for God has created no evil spirits. All of the vast universe is working out its salvation in a manner quite acceptable to God; and the sooner that mankind recognizes this great truth the better. CARL C. POPE.

DREAM IS WORTH $50.

Vision Leads to Recovery of Lost Wallet From Dem Sewer.

Cleveland, Ohio.—Frank Braunagel, an Alton saloon keeper, recently lost a wallet containing $50, and although he advertised his loss, could hear nothing of it until yesterday, when the book and money were recovered by Frank Ackel an attache of St. Joseph's hospital, at Alton, who dreamed he saw the wallet and money in a sewer.

Ackel went to Braunagel's saloon yesterday, and, telling the latter of the dream, said:

"Your money is in the sewer, and if you will give me a wire I am sure I can get it for you."

The wire was furnished, Ackel went to the trap of a big sewer pipe in the building, and succeeded in fishing out the wallet.

The money was all there, but was discolored. Braunagel took it to St. Louis yesterday. He gave Ackel $10 for finding the money.

SOLID PROOF WANTED.

As Well as a Philosophy of Universal Love, Peace and Harmony.

Thos. Harding, Sturgis, Mich., in his article in No. 886, does not outline a "religion" which coincides with my belief. Admitting that the majority of the readers are women, yet an editor must cater to his patrons, whether they write about facts or fancy.

The Christian orthodox religion has no corner on precepts of love, for the whole philosophy of Spiritualism is full of the love our unseen friends bear toward us, and the all-powerful love of the Great Spirit toward mortals.

Our philosophy is not the cold-blooded, heartless, cruel thing his article would lead us to think but on the contrary it teaches us that a god of love, knowledge and virtue is shaping our destinies in the direction that will be most beneficial to us. It does not describe an angry and jealous God who invented hell, and glories in seeing his children perish in an unquenchable fire, but it does teach us that "the Father and I are one" and that the great soul of love is ever protecting us.

We all know the intensity of a mother's love; the wonder is how those mothers can subscribe to a confession of faith which says unless their loved ones walk in a path it is impossible for an angel to tread they shall be cast into everlasting torment. The women of America are, as a rule, as intellectual and scientific as the average man. Then if they cannot grasp the grand truths of our philosophy, let them educate themselves up to the high standard of intelligence displayed in that philosophy.

If I thought for a moment that the investigation of Spiritualism would destroy all the sentiment of my soul, I would give it up at once. Yet Mr. Harding says, "The most penetrating and scholarly reasoning can not fill the place of affection, or render permanent the unity of society, and without these there is immediate danger of weakness and death." Did the brother ever hear an address, or read an article in any paper in which penetrating and scholarly reasoning was intended to misplace affection? I never did.

My conception of Spiritualism is not that it expects to conquer the world, but by teaching such grand truths as the world at present is little acquainted with win the people by facts, "hard fact" if necessary. It is not enough to say simply, "The Progressive Thinker says so; we must present to the skeptic and the investigator something more tangible, some proof that there is truth in our philosophy. The Catholics, so say the pope, may be sufficient for Catholics, but the average man wants a more solid foundation on which to build his structure of hope in immortality.

So, my brother, while we teach a philosophy of universal peace and harmony, let us not forget that we must needs present proof to make the effect permanent and beneficial.

WANTS A FRATERNAL ORDER.

Favors New Organization, or That the N. S. A. Create a Fraternity.

That is the desire of all whom I have heard express themselves. Not that we wish to ignore the N. S. A., we realize that the N. S. A. is doing a grand work and an honest, conscientious work, and we feel a deep sympathy for the association and its officers and members. At the same time we feel the inability of the N. S. A. to reach out and get those who would gladly be its loyal supporters and advocates.

Why should not the Spiritualists have just as good a thing as other people?

Why should we not have just as good temples? BETTER FUNERAL CEREMONIES? Better and more impressive initiative ceremonies? Higher lesson in Spirituality, PLACING HUMANITY ABOVE PROPERTY?

If the N. S. A. would create such a fraternity I can see very clearly a great success, fraternally and financially, we have only to glance at the great work other fraternities are doing, and we see all about us thousands of good honest people holding up both hands to receive just such a fraternity. Every little village and hamlet might, and many of them would, support an imposing little temple where the spiritual ceremonies would be taught, where there never will exist anything of the kind under the present plan of organization.

I suppose my experience is the same as many others. How often have I interested people in Spiritualism, and then given them good literature, and they at once became interested. The next thing would be a request to attend a seance, and the next thing the whole business was labeled "fraud," or "dismal failure," or "legerdemain.

If we believe in evolution we must evolute to keep pace with our fellowmen and our associates. Sixty-four years of this kind of organization with scarcely any progress should arouse our slumbering spirits to shake off a few pessimistic ideas. I believe the time has come when we should wake up to this spirit of progress that is sweeping over our continent, put on our armor and regalia, if you please, and with spears, wands and shields, go out in the world and battle for our place in the front rank with the best fraternity in existence.

Now we do not want to supplant the National, we feel friendly to all and with the kindest spirit ask the N. S. A. to create for us the grandest work ever written, and let us all put our shoulder to the wheel and make it a success.

Mr. Tuttle says the N. S. A. is attempting to unite its elements of religion, science and philosophy, and it proposes to introduce an educational plan which can be made in every home. Almost as valuable as a college course. We greet this idea with applause and Amen. We sincerely hope they will do this and we will only be too glad to assist the placing of such a system of instruction in every fraternity. I consider this the first great work of importance to be done. In conclusion I want to say that I read the article written by B. W. Morrison of Meadville, Pa., and heartily endorse his sentiments.

THE MORRIS PRATT INSTITUTE,

E. W. Sprague Has Good Words for This Spiritualist School.

It has been my privilege to visit the Morris Pratt Institute on several occasions, and to be present at one of the yearly business meetings. I became a member of the Association and have kept in close touch with its officers and leaders, consequently I am quite familiar with its work and development. From the beginning it has had the best of teachers. Prof. A. J. Weaver, its principal, and all the other teachers are true Spiritualists. They are self-sacrificing, earnest souls, and are all contributing either the whole or a part of their time and salary to the work of the school.

Prof. Weaver and his good wife are devoting their lives to the work of this, the first school of its kind ever owned by the Spiritualists of America, and are doing it entirely without financial consideration or compensation, in order that it may live through its present struggle for existence and become that which Morris Pratt, its founder and donor, intended, viz.: an honor and a blessing to the cause of Modern Spiritualism.

The good work of the Morris Pratt Institute, like that of other liberal institutions, cannot be measured. Its graduates thus far in its brief history of four years, are an honor to the school and to the cause of Spiritualism. What the school has accomplished is a bright promise of what it can and will accomplish in the future if it is properly supported.

Every Spiritualist should be proud of the fact that we own a Spiritualist school. It is located in a fine little city. It owns a beautiful and complete college building containing class rooms, assembly halls, dormitory, dining room and kitchen, etc., and in fact everything needed to carry on the work. It is a school where our sons and daughters, as well as parents, are privileged to acquire an education without becoming subjects of sectarian forms, ceremonies and beliefs—a real spiritual and Spiritualist school, managed by Spiritualists, its faculty and its supporters being Spiritualists.

This school has what I believe no other school in this country possesses, viz.: a psychic class for the study of psychic law and especially the laws governing mediumship. "It stands for the truths of Spiritualism and for the defense of its rights, for the unfoldment of mediumship and an understanding of its laws."

It gives to those who have reached or passed the meridian of life without acquiring an education, the grandest opportunity to do so, and without the criticism that must be endured in other institutions if they had the temerity to enter them.

I wish every Spiritualist in the country could spend a week in the Morris Pratt Institute, if it were possible, so they could meet the students personally, attend the classes and witness the work of these bright men and women who are fitting themselves for the work in the grand field of Spiritualism and liberalism.

I do not know of a single Spiritualist who has visited the Morris Pratt Institute who has not come away a convert to the belief that it is one of the grandest and most needed institutions of Spiritualism.

The title of the Morris Pratt Institute is in the hands of its trustees, who hold it in trust for the Spiritualists of America. There is no mortgage on it. The title is clear, though its present indebtedness is about nine hundred dollars. Its business is in safe hands and will continue so to be, as will be seen by reading its constitution and by-laws. Article 11 of the by-laws reads as follows: "The Board of Directors shall consist of the President of the National Spiritualists' Association and seven other Directors. The directors shall be elected annually after the passage of this by-law, as follows:" (Send to the secretary for constitution, also catalogue of the school). No officer holds office for more than three years unless re-elected.

Fellow Spiritualists! Let us reason together. No other such school as ours exists on this continent. It is just starting, being but four years old. Other colleges in starting have had the same financial struggle that this Institute is passing through. The contest in the courts was won by the Association. It cost money and that is what helps to make the present deficit; but that will not be repeated. The school is in better condition than it has ever been, and if it is sufficiently aided a few years longer, it will become self-supporting.

The N. S. A. has assisted the school from time to time, but this year it did not feel able to do so, therefore help must come from other sources. As Spiritualists we have a responsibility resting upon us. Let us do our duty in this matter. Let us ask ourselves the following questions: What is my duty in the matter? Should I do something to help this splendid educational institution? If so, what shall be my contribution? How much can I afford to contribute? etc.

When reason, conscience, our own good judgment, and the knowledge that our spirit friends who made it possible for us to have the school, all affirm that the school should be supported and carried forward to a grand success; let us contribute as liberally as our means will allow. In this way the school may be sustained until some good souls may liberally endow it, or it is placed on a self-supporting basis.

Dear reader, will you kindly write Mrs. Lodena S. Weaver, secretary of the Morris Pratt Institute, Whitewater, Wisconsin, at once, sending your contribution, be it great or small, or pledging to do so at your future convenience? You will thus help along a grand and worthy institution, one that is preparing teachers and workers to better fulfill their appointd mission in life and in the advancement of Modern Spiritualism.

Gets Warning in a Dream.

Traveler in Mountains Has Vision of Wolves Chasing Him—Pack Pictured in Sleep Gives Him a Ride for His Life Next Day—Saves Himself by Seizing Limb of a Tree and Clinging Six hours.

"They say that dreams go by contraries, but from a strange experience I had in the Blue Ridge mountains of Virginia [as set forth in the New Orleans Picayune] in the early '70's I have always been of the opinion that the things we see while our minds are wandering in the mysterious precincts of Poppyland—that is, those things which vividly express themselves on our subjective being—are more generally warnings of some menacing peril or danger than vague indications of the opposite of that which is to happen, and to prove my contention I will tell you of the incident which converted me to the view of the rather puzzling subject I have just expressed."

Hiram Blake, of Cleveland, O., a visitor to the Pythian convention, with several travelers like himself and chance acquaintances sitting about him in the palm garden of the St. Charles on a night when the festivities were in full swing, was the speaker and Mr. Blake upheld the reputation already earned as a story teller by the yarn he spun.

"At the time of which I speak," Mr. Blake started off on his story, "I was a young man, hardly more than a beardless youth, but I was of a roving disposition, venturesome to a marked degree, and whenever the opportunity came my way I was off to the wilds for a hunt or outing.

Lonely Ride in the Mountains.

"One summer I spent at a farmhouse at the foot of the Blue Ridge mountains, near a little hamlet called Lovingston, in the central portion of Virginia, and I had a splendid time of it exploring through the granite hills and coursing on a swift horse through the forests and over the fields.

"Near the close of my stay in Lovington I determined to make the journey across the mountain to a place called Laird, where some friends of mine were staying, and secured a sure-footed horse for the trip. I started on a cool September morning and, proceeding slowly through the passes and defiles with towering and majestic masses of rock on either side, I gained a lofty portion of the range by nightfall and just reached the cabin of a mountaineer before darkness fell like a pall over the entire scene.

"My host was a hospitable old man and gave me the one spare room of his house. The room was scantily furnished, but the bed was a comfortable one, and, getting beneath the warm covering after a frugal supper, I was soon asleep, as my ride had tired me.

"I slept, but while my body lay chained in the drowsy influence my mind was active with a rapid series of awful happenings which were terribly real and left an impression on my memory seat that will never be eradicated.

Sees and Hears Wolves.

"In my dream I was on my journey through the mountains, my good horse going at a slow trot. We reached a place inexpressibly desolate and the road narrowed at the base of a high cliff and skirted for a great distance a ravine of terrible depth. It was then that I became aware of a sound most distinct for a dream sound; it was a soft pad! pad! and, turning in my saddle I saw following close at my horse's tail a gaunt gray wolf with slab sides, a red tongue lolling from between cruel jaws and a large brush tail drooping almost to the ground.

"The animal caused a chill to pass over me, and while the presence was still distinct to my eyes, which were closed in sleep, a wild, plaintive howl of the wolf, I knew, and from about me came answering cries and then a sort of blackness, as though night had fallen, and hid the scene. I struggled along through awful moments in that dread nightmare, and with the wolf cries sobbing through the rocky wilderness and the sense of a deadly peril tugging at my heart I became aware of strange lights quivering in the darkness of the dream scene. The light at first seemed pairs of tiny sparks set close together and they ever grew and gathered strength until at last they were like so many coals of fire burning into my soul.

Finds Pack Gaining on Him.

"The glare from the lights served to illuminate hairy faces and then dawned upon me that the weird glow as from the eyes of the wolf-pack came in answer to the howl of the beast that had followed me.

"The terror that seized upon me was keen and nerve-racking, and, with the chorus of howls sounding in my ears, I urged my horse forward. I could feel myself rapidly, so deep were the impressions, and a feeling of despair possessed me as I seemed to realize that the yelping wolves were gaining on me. I could see the gaunt, gray leader, galloping at my horse's heels with the pack in full cry behind him, and then the most horrible part of my dream came; the horse sprang over the edge of the precipice, and, man and beast, we both shot down, down, down!

"I awoke with a sudden start and discovered that I was lying on the floor with a deal chair on top of me. In my sleep I must have left the bed and in imitation of a horse's back straddled the chair.

"It was good daylight when my nightmare had its startling finale, and, arising, I bathed my face and hands, hurriedly dressed and went out to find a tonic for my shattered nerves in the morning air. The mountaineer greeted me warmly, said he hoped I had passed a good night and invited me into breakfast.

Resumes His Ride.

"I was feeling rather rocky, to use a slang term, but said nothing to my host about my dream, as the old man struck me as being a sort of matter-of-fact person, and I feared he would laugh at me. After breakfast I saddled my horse, mounted, thanking the mountaineer for his kindness and resumed my journey in the brisk, invigorating atmosphere, soon losing all the depression that I had experienced upon awakening.

"I traveled for several hours and reached one of the loftiest portions of the chain and then with, a suddenness I sat bolt upright in my saddle, checked my horse and looked about me thoroughly startled, but by what at the time I could not determine. Then it came to me. I had passed through the locality before; knew it well, had seen the same sheer rise of rocks, with the narrow ledge, striking the ravine at its base, and had ridden close to the edge of that treacherous precipice. My horse stood still and I pondered for a moment and a cold chill played up and down my spine when my dream came back to me, and my waking eyes looked upon the same drear picture that I had encountered in my nightmare.

"'Was that dream a warning?' I asked myself, and as if to give an affirmative answer to the mental question a sound came from amid the rocky fastness on my left that sent the blood from my heart and left the icy chill of fear there.

No Dream This Time.

"The sound was a long-drawn-out howl that rose and fell on the crisp air like a note of doom—a howl such as only a mountain wolf could make. I listened and soon other noises came, first short, sharp barks from the distance behind me and then sobbing, trembling howls like the first wolf cry. Alive to my peril, I urged my horse forward, and the poor animal, having taken alarm from the howling of the wolves, responded readily to the touch of my heel and galloped down the dangerous path rapidly.

"Turning in my saddle, I glanced at the road over which I had come and to my alarm saw several long, lithe objects moving swiftly in my trail. The objects were wolves. I needed no second glance to tell me that and I could see that the fierce beasts were gaining on me.

"By the time I had ridden a mile or more the wolves were yelping a death chorus, were leaping and springing at my frightened horse's flanks, and I felt that it was only a question of time when I would become their prey. But when all seemed lost my salvation came in a most unexpected way. Leaning over my straining horse's neck, I saw at a point several hundred yards ahead of me where the mountain fell away from the road a tree.

Climbs Up the Tree.

"The tree had an ancient and gnarled appearance, even from the distance, but its sturdy limbs hung low and I knew that to pass beneath them in safety I would have to stoop in my saddle. The sight of the tree inspired me to a desperate chance and as my horse galloped close to the object I let go the reins, loosened my feet from the stirrups and threw my arms forward. My hands grasped the lowest branch and my body was swung violently forward as my horse passed from between my legs and continued his mad flight.

"I held on with desperation and though my palms were torn and lacerated and my muscles nearly strained apart I summoned up all the strength I possessed and drew myself up. As I did so the foremost wolf sprang into the air and with a vicious snarl snapped at my foot, but missed by a narrow margin. I managed with a supreme effort to draw myself up into a position which made it possible for me to throw my leg over the branch, which had begun to crack and bend beneath my weight. Astraddle of the limb I slowly edged backward until I reached the body of the tree and there sat thanking God for my fortunate escape.

Treed For Six Hours.

"The fate of my poor horse was a sad one. Relieved of my weight, he increased his speed, but at the narrow portion of the road his hoofs slipped and he shot over the precipice to be dashed to pieces on the sharp rocks a thousand feet below.

"The wolves, losing the horse, trotted back, an angry, growling pack, to the tree where I had found refuge and forming a circle on the cliff they sat on their haunches, crying longingly and occasionally venting their melancholy howl. There were more than twenty of them.

"I stayed in the tree from 10 o'clock in the morning until 4 in the afternoon, when the approach of a party of mountaineers coming from the direction of Laird set the wolves a-scampering to the rocks for safety. The mountaineers sent a few stray shots after the hungry growlers, but unluckily hit none of them. I descended from the tree, went back with the party to Lovingston and abandoned the mountain trip to Laird.

"Perhaps you gentlemen may wonder why I did not shoot at the wolves. Well, on my ride along the cliff I feared to turn in my saddle to fire and when I was safe in the tree I discovered that the jolting of the horse had caused my revolver to fall from its holster.

"Do you not share the opinion with me now that dreams are sometimes warnings?"

SOUTHERN CASSADAGA.

Camp Meeting at Lake Helen Closed—News—Excursions.

Sunday meetings have been begun at this healthy and beautiful winter home. Every week brings new visitors.

From New England, the middle states and the Mississippi valley, people are going to Florida. Beside the genial climate, the immense orange crop of this year, makes added attractions.

Frank Johnson is building a new cottage for Mr. Kellogg.

Hotel Cassadaga has been painted outside, and other improvements have been made.

A new veranda adorns the Kellogg cottage.

The Spencers have greatly improved their boarding house.

The Valley County Record of November 16, has the following.

"It is reliably reported that work will very shortly be resumed on the Daytona, DeLand & St. John's river street railroad, and that it will be pushed to completion."

Hotel Webster and Sanitarium is getting ready for guests.

The rose garden is a great success, the roses have grown enormously, and still keep up their efforts to bloom.

H. M. Clark is preparing two nice furnished cottages to let. Write him and Mrs. Mary McGregory for housekeeping tenements.

The session will begin February 5, and close March 19, 1907.

The sad news of the death of E. A. Marsh, of Oaks Hill, Florida, came lately. He died at the home of Edward Archibald, in Daytona, of hardening of the glands of the heart. His daughter, Lillian, was with him the last few days, having returned from her summer visit to New England. She has the sympathy of scores of friends at Lake Helen and in Massachusetts.

Mrs. Witters is having the Buchanan cottage re-painted, which she has purchased, and will occupy it with her cousin, Mrs. Eugene Strong and babe, from Amherst, Mass. They sail December 7, on the Arapahoe.

S. B. Barker and wife, Mrs. L. A. Holt, and Mr. Barker's mother, sail on the Apache, December 14, all for Lake Helen Camp.

Among others who will leave for Lake Helen, in December, by Clyde steamers, are Mrs. Mary Wilson, Mr. E. T. Worthy, David Sloan, Dr. Critchley and wife, and Mrs. Marten, Miss Eva Thompson and father.

My December excursions sail on the 4th, 11th, 14th, 18th, 28th.

I shall have four excursions in January—probably on January 4, 11, 18, 25. I shall personally conduct the one for January 11.

Write me for low rates, circulars and other information, enclosing four cents in stamps for postage on Clyde folder, etc. H. A. BUDINGTON.

PROXY DELEGATES TO N. S. A.

A Californian Answers Questions, and Makes Certain Points Clear.

Will you kindly allow me to reply to the article in your valuable paper of November 17, signed "A Proxy Delegate," by a lady who asks the question: "Did I do right in voting for Los Angeles as the next place of meeting for our National Association?"

In the first place I would say, she did not do right in voting at all, nor in accepting the position of a proxy delegate, if, as she says, she was not a member of any society, local or state.

All persons invited by me, as chairman of committee of California Delegates, were asked the question: Are you a member of any auxiliary society? for if not you could not act.

Some names of persons who could act as delegates and who would like to be seated were brought me by personal friends and well known workers who knew as well as myself that none but such Spiritualists as were members of societies auxiliary to the N. S. A. had a right to be seated. Among those who assisted me was Mrs. Anna L. Gillespie, a Californian for many years, who brought me the names of four earnest women and men, members of auxiliary societies, whom I was proud to have as helpers. Mrs. Henrietta L. Lichtig, who had been hand and heart with us in our work in San Francisco for nearly a year, brought several, and in each instance we talked over the matter of who they were and to what societies they belonged.

This mistake might have been made on our part but we were certainly not obliged to resort to knowingly having any upon our committee of delegates who were not entitled to the position.

Two Californians arrived while we were making out our list, Dr. McLane and his wife. The doctor a well known medium of Los Angeles, who had suffered arrest and persecution by the unjust laws of California. He was gladly seated as a delegate while his wife was not, as she had not united with any society.

Dr. Pottengor, a well known Spiritualist, a lecturer and author, one whom I had known in California for years while living in San Francisco, and who was there a resident until the earthquake left him standing, stripped of all, home broken up, still with a heart filled with love of California, one I should gladly have authorized to work for Spiritualism in the name of California, but as he was not a member of a society auxiliary to the N. S. A., he was not seated; and this was the case in several other instances. So as I rejected pretty good material and Californians, at that, this lady was certainly out of place, which I very much regret, and as she says she has been greatly worried about her part of the decision, I would suggest that she stop worrying, as although the majority was only six, five would have been just as decisive; or even less than five, for a majority of one would have settled the question, unless some measure had been taken then and there.

Then she says, "I want to know if the officers of the National body cannot submit this question of the next year's place for the convention to every auxiliary society direct and ask for the voice of each one thereon and be governed thereby?"

To this I will answer: As this would necessitate a change of the constitution of the N. S. A., even the officers and board of directors of the same cannot do this, as the constitution says: "The annual convention of this association shall be held in the city of Washington, D. C., on the third Tuesday in October or any such time or other place as this association may determine at any convention.'"

And it was determined by the delegates assembled in Chicago that the next N. S. A. Convention should be held in Los Angeles. If the suggestion she makes could be carried out there would be eleven more California societies heard from than were heard from in our last convention, even by our proxies. The proxy voting is legalized by the N. S. A. California was entitled to 37 delegates, 26 were seated. I believe the other eleven societies would sustain us in the work we did.

Arthur S. Howe, president of the California State Association, and one of the trustees of the N. S. A., came to the convention with an invitation to hold the next convention in Los Angeles, from the State Spiritualist Association, seconded by an invitation from the City Council.

If the California State Association, which is a body of delegates from its 37 societies, sent us with this invitation and empowered us to work for it, should we have done otherwise? and should anyone who accepted our papers do otherwise consistently than carry out their instructions?

One may doubt the wisdom of having the National Convention in Los Angeles, if viewing it from the monetary standpoint alone, but here let me say, "The time must come and such measures be adopted as I urged upon the people at the last convention, which will make the National Association financially independent. Lazurus-like it was called from the tomb of its past inertia among the unorganized, disorganized, and scattered societies of Spiritualists: "Come forth," and it came, and from the first it has been bound hand and foot by lack of means to carry forward the great work which opened before it. It has been obliged to depend upon the generosity of a few, added to the inadequate means raised by the very indifferent measures, of a very imperfect system. And to-day an earnest cry goes up from many on this side of life, and a voice from the spirit forces who have asked so much of us and for whom we have done so little says:

"Loose him and let him go." Let us remove the bonds that have held our National Association by a system similar to other fraternities, Odd Fellows, Masons, and other orders. Do they go around with their hands in their pockets, catching on to the few pennies they have there and wondering if they can afford to hold a convention in California? No, they have all of them been here more than once, just for pleasure, and because they wanted to, and had money enough to do it, and money enough to own some of the best buildings in the best districts of every city and almost every town, while we rent halls in their buildings, and hold our conventions in Young Men's Christian Association buildings, annoyed by many things, because we lack the system and act as though we were afraid to exact proper yearly dues which would enable us to own buildings in every city and carry our conventions, where their influence is most needed, whether it is in Los Angeles, California, or Texas, or any other place.

Why do we ask that the convention be held in California? Is it because of its magnificent scenery; its sunny skies; its beautiful flowers? No, for at the time the convention will be held is the final month of the prolonged rainless season, and no one can have a correct idea of its beauty then. It is because Los Angeles has such municipal laws, and the state such unfair laws in many places that mediums are forced by them to leave the fields of labor to which they have been called by their natural gifts and prepared by their spirit friends.

Los Angeles demands the payment of fifteen dollars a month as a license or, to secure a permit to use their mediumship. This absolutely debars many from using their gifts at all, as this tax added to price of rent and living is more than they would receive.

The claim is made that these laws were made to protect the public from fakers and counterfeiters. This is erroneous. The fakirs and pretenders can pay the license and flourish, and they do so, while the mediums are silenced. These should be protected by our organization as a religious body; anyone of them holding papers from our National Association or its auxiliary societies should be exempt. This is what organization should accomplish, or the most important part of its work is a failure.

We want the Los Angeles municipal authorities to know what our N. S. A. is; we want work done in the convention at Los Angeles which will count for the freedom of the cause in this state. We want no delegates sent here to do sight-seeing until after their work has been faithfully performed for the good of Spiritualism. We desire to see so much accomplished that it will be accounted as rich reward for the sacrifice made by individuals or societies. The cause is one whether in Washington, D. C., or California.

Let the societies auxiliary to the National go to work this winter and raise the amount necessary to send delegates to Los Angeles, and see how it will seem one year out of fourteen to do this in return for California and the far away coast states sending theirs for fourteen years, and such delegates as were sent receiving, ofttimes criticism and insinuating reflections, because they were trying to do the work they were sent to do.

If we have a system of proselyting which is wrong, let's change. If it is thought to be the best under the circumstances, let's have no complaint if the persons authorized to work from one state find their people and seat their delegates, while some others are out sight-seeing in and around the city.

Brother Barrett, in his letter says: "Some ten or twelve delegates, all of them from the east, were in the audience listening to the lectures and messages on Friday night, when the vote was being taken as to the place of meeting of the next convention.

As he speaks especially of their being eastern delegates, I infer that he feels these ten or twelve eastern delegates would have turned the votes. I would say that of the twenty-six delegates we had seated, one-half of them were absent when the vote was taken, and at least one-quarter of the number never took any part, as near as I could find out.

The vote was turned by men and women from other states, who felt that in justice the next convention belonged beyond the rockies, and California was the state that asked for it, and they gave it their support. To these, I and my workers, return thanks.

As any amendments or changes to the N. S. A. constitution, or suggestions which would lead to amendments, must come as a rule from and through state associations, and in any exceptions to this it must be in favor of a member of some society, I would therefore suggest that the lady (who asks for a referendum, and calls for a new vote from societies direct, who adds that she isn't "strongly in favor of Washington," and tells what she would prefer, it might be well for her to join some society of Spiritualists which is auxiliary to the National, before she proceeds further in asking for such important action on the part of the officers of the National body.

A nameless letter of this nature savors somewhat of that which has been found too many times heretofore, an outside Spiritualist, who is not a member of any society, local or state, knowing so much better how to run things regarding organizations than those who have worked and are working in it.

FROM COLUMBUS, OHIO.

A Letter From Mrs. Elizabeth Harlow, Who Has a Two-Months Engagement in Baltimore, Md.

First Spiritualists' Society. Two months of the season's work has rolled into history, and thus far the same has been more than successful. The attendance has been good, and the interest in building up something stable and permanent is growing as well. Our membership is slowly increasing, which is a healthy sign; things that grow too fast do not last.

The Ladies' Auxiliary is busy keeping the social side growing, and the financial too. They have netted a nice little sum from their social and supper given when the Mass meeting was held with us.

A new feature this season is the afternoon tea-parties, which are held at the home of the members. These are very pleasant, and each one who gets a reading leaves a dime, so the lucre flows as well.

Just now the ladies have closed the Bazaar, which was more than a success. They took in $310, one hundred of this being the proceeds of a beautiful music box that Mr. Al Franck donated. They cleared, after all bills were paid, $265.

Tell me where there is better work than this.

Now, I am to leave them for two months, and Mrs. Murtha, the test medium, will take my place and demonstrate what I have been talking about. Mrs. Murtha is one of the best mediums. With her we are not afraid of any chicanery, and we do not have to make any excuses.

I go to Baltimore to work for the two months, returning February 1, to take up my work here again.

I wish here to thank one and all who have helped to make the society here such a success thus far, and especially those who sent me articles for the Bazaar from other states; there were several.

My address while in Baltimore will be 636 No. Carrollton avenue.

THE SCANDALMONGER.

It Approaches the Golden Gate and Is Turned Down.

An angular figure approached the great gate,
While the business seemed to be dull,
To enter, of course, and learn of its fate,
While St. Peter was having a lull.

The gate was ajar, but guarded the while,
And the figure bowed down very low;
St. Peter arose from his chair with a smile
That was cold as the beautiful snow.

He stiffly saluted; the figure arose
With its eyes like unto red fire,
And Peter divined the depth of the woes
Of this gaunt ghost of a liar.

"Sit down and be quiet," he said in a tone
That only a judge can command,
And then he concluded to place it alone
In silence somewhere in the land.

The figure, a quiver, sat down in a heap,
And Peter called up a small page,
A dapper young spirit, who put it to sleep
And summoned an ancient-like sage.

A council was held then in heaven to know
The proper disposal to make
Of this patron so feeble, that needed to grow,
And all its earth error forsake.

Says Peter, "I know that this being just fell
From mere force of habit on earth,
From pointing its neighbors to heaven and hell,
And giving to new libels birth.

"That face is an index to all down within
The walk and the eye tell a tale;
The nose and the mouth and the up-turning chin,
Are signs that quite seldom can fail."

Just then the gaunt figure came forth from its cell,
With a grin on its angular face,
Like a demon of venom just coming from hell
To imperil the whole human race.

"Now, Peter, you know that the earth-folks are bad,"
It said, in a shrill, squeaky tone,
"And in this great heaven you all should be glad To have folks's records well known.

"My neighbors were horrid, immoral and false
Until I got after them right;
I tell you what, Peter, I made them all waltz,
And some of them wanted to fight."

Another broad grin of conceited delight,
And the figure reached out for the latch,
But Peter, divining its penchant for fight,
Concluded to give it a match.

He made a few passes above the gaunt form,
And the head was that of a snake;
He then plated it in temperature warm,
Quite close to a fiery lake.

He said with a frown, that "the spirit's own sphere
Is builded by thoughts and by deeds,
And environments surrounding them here,
Oft made by those musty old creeds.

He stroked his long beard and watched with great pride
This being conceitedly wise,
Who slandered and libelled upon the earth side,
Now assuming its true form and size.

"Each being," said Peter, "constructs its own sphere,
From the monad up to the man;
And thus we receive it and treat it up here;
'Tis Nature's immutable plan.

"The angel of wisdom, of goodness and right
Must merit advancement, and win
By growth its own progress and all its own light,
Ere Nature will let it pass in.

"The chronic fault-finder, the liar and sneak;
The grafter, the greedy old grouch
Come hither quite often in white robes to seek
A soft downy bed or a couch.

"So pious and saintly sometimes they appear,
In the guise of the good and the true,
And plead for admission to heaven's high sphere;
They only are given their due.

"This angular being on earth was a snake,
With tongue full of venom and ire,
And justice compels it that venom to take,
And drink to its own soul's desire."

St. Peter related a few potent things
(He noticed my newspaper eye),
That people in earth-life should do to sprout wings,
For a beautiful heavenward fly.

"Be kind to all creatures; be just and be true;
Be generous unto the poor;
Send out love vibrations, the world to imbue,
And of heaven you may be quite sure."

He said that "the creature that we had just seen
Was one of the many on earth
Who tattied and slandered and acted so mean
It lost all its spiritual worth.

"It is oft sad to see them appearing as saints,
And sanctified preachers and priests,
And bringing to heaven just all sorts of taints
Of vermin and reptiles and beasts.

"We now are constructing a dungeon for those Who to greed and deception are slaves,
And who, as the loved ones passed over, oft pose,
Obtaining the names from the graves.

"'Twas first thought to burn these vile creatures awhile,
And melt all their meanness away,
But burning with sulphur has gone out of date,
And hell for reform had its day.

"A dungeon of silence and darkness in time
Will all the right purposes serve,
To cure these defamers of this blackest crime,
And give just the hell they deserve."

St. Peter, arising, then waved me adieu,
And closed the big gate with a slam,
And left me my journey alone to pursue,
Reflecting upon this great sham.

What Peter had told me and what I there saw
I pondered upon for a time,
But found it was only the justness of law
In spirit, in dealing with crime.

If man in his nature is snake-like and low,
Or brutal and cruel all through,
He must in all reason, until he can grow,
Remain to his tendencies true.

DR. T. WILKINS.

THAT SPURIOUS REPORT.

And Interview With Mr. J. C. F. Grumbine in the Boston Post.

May I have the space to correct a false interview printed in the Boston Post, of a prophecy I made in November issue of "Occult Science."

In the first place, the Post refused to print the prophecy as I wrote it, and wrote up a sensational story which is a lie from beginning to end; not a word of the interview being true. Take 99 percent from every alleged interview, and what is left is the truth!

I here enclose the prophecy as it appeared. Any conservative man of affairs could prophesy the same without appearing idiotic or a fool:

Danger Ahead—A Prophecy.

It is not often that I am urged to make a public prophecy, but when the spirit of prophecy is on it is wise to let the hand record what the unseen intelligences dictate. Let this message be circulated broadcast throughout the world:

That the (United States) ship of state is entering a stormy sea is evident by the dark black cloud which looms up in the East, and that it will strike dangerous reefers or hidden rocks is shown very clearly. There will be first a stagnation in business, this begins in January, 1907, followed by a cataclysm of untoward political industrial events, in which many industries in the north and west will be forced to the wall.

The political situation appears in the form of a sphynx and it looks as though President Roosevelt will be forced to become the candidate for re-election. A black hand arises in the South West and appears with fingers and palms in the act of grasping, and extends over the White House. This has reference to anarchy and it springs up suddenly, asserts its strong hand in the House of Representatives. Wait! This seems impossible, but it is so, and the chairs of the House are seen in disorder and the men are combating each other. Such a riotous scene has not appeared in such a judicial place for many years.

Banks fail, and large trust companies are forced to go out of business. There are riots in Chicago, Kansas City, St. Louis. The dread of a revolution throws business into a panic and stocks tumble, industrials suffer loss of from 25 to 50 per cent. Automobilists are held up by the infuriated populace, who throng the streets, because idle, as large factories once flourishing, close their doors. This condition goes on for five long years without abatement. A brother's hand is raised against a brother's, and still the end is not shown.

A warning is given to those with money. Invest in U. S. bonds or keep money in safe deposit vaults, as real estate will suffer and be a drug on the market. A great reaction sets in in 1912, and from 1908-12 there will be a final struggle, but not a revolution, nor will it be the end. This crisis will reshape public opinion so that truth and not falsehood, facts and not fabrications, will be the fashion. No danger yet from Catholic sources, and the present situation calls for political and industrial rather than religious remedies.

RELATES SLEEP'S FREAKS.

French Savant Lectures on Psychology of Somnambulism—Intimates to Johns Hopkins Students That Acting in Slumber Causes a Quickening of Dormant Faculties—Relates Instance of Bedridden Paralytic Who Climbed Unaided in Sleep to Housetop—Young Woman Enacts Death of Mother in Dreams.

The psychological nature of somnambulism was the subject of a remarkable lecture by Prof. Pierre Jouet of the Paris Sorbonne at Johns Hopkins university, Baltimore, Md. In the course of his remarks he said:

"The somnambulist has not our dull memory of things. He sees the objects he speaks of and really hears, feels, and touches them, exactly as if they were real.

"When a patient speaks he has a fluency of language and even an eloquence that are superior to his normal powers. When he acts he has a precision and quickness that are wonderful.

"The man who ran to a housetop showed more agility than he would have had in his normal state, even if he had not been paralyzed.

"In connection with this precision and certainty of memory we find some strange mental blanks. You speak to patients and they do not answer. You try to make your presence felt, they do not perceive. To make yourself heard you must dream with the patient and speak to him only in accordance with his delirium.

Somnambulists Never Remember.

"When a patient gets back to consciousness he forgets everything that has happened during his delirium. If you try to awaken his memory with questions two things result You will either do it so vividly that he will fall into a somnambulistic state again or he will be unable to recall it all.

"There is a man of 30 with both legs paralyzed, who has been an invalid for years. In the middle of the night he rises slowly from his bed, takes his pillow, hugs it close, walks out of the room, through a courtyard, and climbs to the top of a house.

"His friends have difficulty in reaching him, and must take great care in awakening him, for the moment he awakes his legs become paralyzed again.

"When awakened he does not understand how he has reached the housetop and why, he, a man sick with palsy, should have been carried there.

Enacts Dying Scene in Sleep.

There is a girl made ill with despair at her mother's death. They lived in a garret. For two months before her mother's death the girl was under a great strain, tending her mother and earning her living at the sewing machine. After the old woman's death the girl tried to revive the body by lifting it to a sitting position and appealing to it. She now has a singular habit of enacting these scenes over again while in a somnambulistic state. No actress could rehearse these lugubrious scenes with such perfection.

"The chief psychological characteristics of somnambulism are during the crisis of the huge unfolding of all phenomena connected with the cause of the delirium. The next is the absence of every sensation, every memory not connected with the delirium.

"After the crisis three things are noticeable—a return to consciousness, normal memory, and entire forgetfulness of all connected with the somnambulism."

THE PSYCHOGRAPH

OR

Dial Planchette.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than twelve years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the

FORMATION OF CIRCLES AND CULTIVATION OF MEDIUMSHIP

with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

THE GOSPEL OF NATURE

Is a most excellent work by Dr. M. L. Sherman, assisted by Prof. W. F. Lyon. Heretofore it has been sold for $2, but the price now has been reduced to $1. It is a book that will interest and instruct. It contains 380 pages, and is full of suggestive thoughts. Dr. Sherman was a medium of rare qualities, and his work is a reflection from the celestial spheres.

Mr. Hodge's Open Letter

Its Extreme Weakness Portrayed by P. A. Jensen, of Los Angeles, Cal.

To the Editor:—A circular has just reached me addressed: "An Open Letter to J. R. Francis, the Editor of The Progressive Thinker." Wm. C. Hodge of San Diego (now better known as the press agent for Elsie Reynolds), is the circulator and author of it. From beginning to end it voices his lament, setting forth the ill treatment he has received, both from myself and from The Progressive Thinker. It now appears that my letters recently published in The Progressive Thinker, taking his to task for exploiting "fake" mediums, have hurt his feelings. And yet throughout we have treated him with the greatest courtesy and consideration on account of his venerable age.

He accuses The Progressive Thinker, the N. S. A., Harrison D. Barrett and myself of trying to "eliminate the physical phases of mediumship." If Mr. Hodge means the physical phases of the phenomena that are made to order by bogus mediums for "DEAD-EASY MARKS" like himself, he is correct; but if he means the phenomena endorsed by reason and experience, he is wrong. The Progressive Thinker, the N. S. A. and its president have so far approached the question with great caution and consideration. The real work of separating the true from the false in Spiritualism HAS AS YET SCARCELY BEGUN.

There are a number of Spiritualists banded together in Los Angeles (and I hope there soon will be in every city in America) to separate THE TRUE FROM THE FALSE IN MEDIUMSHIP. We spend much money and time sometimes before we can get sufficient evidence to expose the methods of the worst offenders; but when such offenders are exposed, and found guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, those gullible Spiritualists (like Mr. Hodge) who extend their sympathy to such criminals, are liable to get their feelings hurt; for we are not by any means in this work for fun or for pastime; nor are we swayed by sentiment in forming our judgment. When Mr. Hodge comes forward exploiting physical phenomena, that a child under six years of age could readily detect to be trickery, he must not feel hurt when Spiritualists make him an object for jokes, nor find fault with the public generally who know him, when they declare that the wheels in his head are working the wrong way.

But says Mr. Hodge: "Please allow me to ask: Has the right of private judgment been suspended, so that a free-born American citizen cannot use his own reason, without being taken to task by a self-constituted censor?"

My reply is: A self-respecting American citizen cannot morally do that which Mr. Hodge has repeatedly done, namely—exploiting the worst "fake" mediums on the Pacific coast, and at the same time occupy the Spiritualist rostrum as a champion of Spiritualism. The fullest freedom of opinion ought to be enjoyed by every Spiritualist; but freedom of conscience and of expression mean not freedom to be a party to crime.

We necessarily expect that every Spiritualist out of an asylum, knows something even if his best sense be but horse sense; but what kind of sense would you call that which exploits Elsie Reynolds as a medium? She has now probably been exposed as a "fake" medium more times than there are days in a year. She is surely not a medium; her conduct can scarcely be called human, but is more akin to that of a ghoul in human form. She never flags in her devilish work. When exposed in one part of the city—after a crying fit—she bobs up in another part of the city, apparently none the worse for her experience.

Shall we call Elsie Reynolds a medium? Shall we call those who exploit her Spiritualists?

Some persons can only weigh a few ounces of evidence; others again can weigh pounds of evidence; but surely those who are conversant with Elsie's alleged mediumship and with Mr. Hodge's attitude regarding it, can plainly understand that the law of reason and evidence is not applicable to either of them.

"When Mr. Harrison D. Barrett made the statement that ninety per cent of the phenomena are of a fraudulent character, he made the mistake of his career as leader in the spiritual movement, and unless the attitude of himself and other leading officers of the N. S. A. is changed, their lives as officers will be of short duration, for I am in this fight to stay." So says Mr. Hodge in his circular.

Mr. Hodge is backed up in the statement above by about a dozen old people who live here on the coast. They think when The Progressive Thinker denounces Elsie Reynolds it attacks Spiritualism. These same old people got up a petition some years ago at the Mineral Park Camp to have Mr. Barrett removed because he DENOUNCED LEGERDEMAIN TRICKS when put forward as spiritual phenomena. They live in a world of their own; they cannot be reasoned with. They entertain the most extravagant notions about spirits and have the most delightful illusions imaginable about what spirits are trying to do for them; in other words, they have become unsound from continuously dwelling upon their pet fancies.

Every Spiritualist, worth the name, must of necessity be with The Progressive Thinker and be with the N. S. A. and its officers in their effort to purify Spiritualism. Mr. Harrison D. Barrett in his faithfulness to truth, duty and principles is a bright example that many other leaders in our movement might imitate with great profit to themselves and the cause. When Mr. Hodge ridicules Mr. Barrett's statement that "ninety per cent of the phenomena are of a fraudulent character," he plainly shows how little he knows about what is going on abroad in the land, while he is sitting, dreaming his life away in sleepy San Diego. If Mr. Barrett were to despatch me to locate that ten per cent of GENUINE PHYSICAL PHENOMENA among public mediums I declare that I should not know where to look for it. The fact is, Mr. Hodge has had a long sleep. "Rip Van Winkle slept for twenty years. When he awoke he did not know where he was at. Now Mr. Hodge is in the same fix as was Rip; he is even in a worse fix than Rip was, for he has slept much longer than twenty years. During his long slumber he dreamed many dreams, and had the most astounding experiences. He sat at the feet of wonder-workers who for a small sum of money evoked for him the mysteries of the other world. These enchantresses brought whatever he wished for. He had, undoubtedly, beautiful maidens, decorated with shining stars and shields, and dressed in the most gorgeous apparel imaginable, visit him. The wise sages who have made history in this world, but now are in the other life, were brought to him. He received favors from them that no other person would think possible. He saw himself as a leader among men, with a mission to convert the world to Spiritualism—then something happened—Mr. Hodge awoke.

He awoke to the realities of the material world, its hard, cold facts now oppress him. There is not enough poetry in them for his active imagination. He mechanically stretches forth his hand to grasp the pictures of his dream, like a child grasping for sunbeams; but they like flitting shadows elude his grasp. When he sees the sirens of his dream as a pair of miserable old women, he is disappointed; when he sees the beautiful maidens and the wise sages dissolved into wigs, paint, feathers, masks, cheap tinsel and illuminated cloth, he gets exasperated. And now there is an old man in San Diego, uttering vengeance against The Progressive Thinker, against the N. S. A., and against the pope's cardinal of Los Angeles for awaking him. But the mandate has gone forth that no soldier, whether he be a self-respecting American citizen or not, must sleep at his post.

Pasadena, Nov. 18, 1906.

To the Editor Light of Truth—Dear Sir:—Being a reader of your paper, I am greatly surprised and disappointed to see that you publish in your paper advertisements of disreputable, fake mediums, such as Mrs. Elsie Reynolds of Los Angeles, Cal. She was just lately caught and exposed again in her nefarious work of fake mediumship. Surely no honest person, more so a Spiritualist, would knowingly encourage such swindlers as Mrs. Elsie Reynolds, by publishing their advertisements. I was under the impression that the Light of Truth was for truth. Please explain yourself and you will oblige.

SPIRITUALISTS SEEK TO WIN THE KAISER.

They Failed to Convince Ruler That Spirits Signalled Retirement of Von Buelow—Prince Heads New German Movement.

Berlin, Nov. 17.—The Zukunft prints a remarkable story to the effect that a clique of statesmen, who are bound together in their political action by a common belief in Spiritualism, have been making efforts for months to win over the Kaiser to their cult, submitting to him evidence in the shape of spirit messages to convince him of the wisdom of their advice.

The head of the clique is Prince Philip von Eulenburg, ex-Ambassador to Vienna. Among the other members are General von Moltke, chief of the general staff, and an unnamed member of the imperial government.

When the Kaiser was visiting Prince von Eulenburg's castle at Liebenburg last week, the Prince exhausted all his talents to convince His Majesty that the spirits had signalled that Chancellor von Bueolw's retirement was urgently necessary for the empire's safety.

The Kaiser has been for a long time the personal friend of Prince von Eulenburg, but he firmly rejected his persuasions, and retained Prince von Buelow in office, emphasizing his confidence in the latter, and thereby intimating that he turned his back on Prince von Eulenburg's party forever.

The Zukunft accuses Prince von Eulenburg of going to ridiculous extremes to induce the Kaiser to entertain a deeper belief in the principles of divine right of kings and emperors.—Special Cable to the Boston American.

HINDU SEER FACES TRIAL.

U. S. Court to Rule If a Swami Is Constitutional—Indictment Charges That Prophecies Are Necessarily a Fraud, Hence Should Be Barred From Mail.

Is a Swami constitutional? And how would the father of the republic have looked upon the miracles of a Mahatma?

Judge Landis is learned in law, but there are persons who predict that this problem will puzzle him. He must decide whether a Hindoo seer is a proper person to be intrusted with a 2 cent postage stamp and free use of the United States mails.

"Prophet" Indicted for Fraud.

An indictment impends against one Moreta, who is alleged to have sent fraudulent matter, mainly prophetic, under seal and cover through the postoffice. It is further alleged in the indictment that prophecies are necessarily fraud. Moreta, however, has prepared a wordy defense, in which it is said, he will set forth that no one can know whether a prophecy is fraud or not until the time set for its fulfillment has come, and that as the date of some of his prophecies are sixteen years ahead, he cannot properly be convicted until those dates have arrived. Moreta will be tried on Monday at 4:30 p. m. in the federal court.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Modern Popery Is Ancient Paganism.

In the first issue of the now well known magazine, "The Forum," in March, 1886, there was an article by Rev. R. Heber Newton, D. D., the famous minister. The article supposes a certain group of persons to be visiting Rome—the group consisting of "Ecclesiastic," a papal priest; a Broad Church Episcopalian minister; a disciple of Ingersoll, called "Philistine;" and an Egyptian resurrected from his sleep of many centuries, and called "Pagan." The article is headed: "Is Romanism Baptized Paganism?"

The writer proceeds:

On our way to a certain church, Pagan asked what we called the day. We told him that it was Sunday; "which," observed Broad Churchman, "was set apart by the edict of Constantine as a period of rest on the venerable day of the Sun." On his asking what were the other festivals of the church, Ecclesiastic ran rapidly over the Kalendar, with such comments as these from Pagan: "Christmas—our old Saturnalia; Easter, the most ancient festival of the spring; Candlemas day, one of our joyous feasts in honor of the goddess Neith, observed as I note on the very day marked for it in your Christian calendar, 'Lady Day,' the old-time day of 'the Mother of the Gods,' also on the same date as our ancient festival, 'the Festival of the Conception of the Blessed Virgin Mary,' our Roman festival of the Miraculous Conception of the Blessed Virgin Juno, again upon the same date which the ancient world observed." Pagan wanting to know somewhat of the saints of the calendar, Ecclesiastic chanced to dilate upon the story of St. Josaphat, of which he remarked: "Why, this is none other than the legend of the Buddha himself."

The form of many of these churches attracted Pagan's notice. "Here," he observed, "the old Roman basilicas, those great halls of trade and commerce and justice, transformed into Christian churches." Arriving at last before the church to which we were bound, he paused to examine the external aspect. "It is cruciform," he observed, "as were many of the old world temples. When the great temple of Serapis, in our own Alexandria, was demolished, beneath its foundation was discovered a cross. Your church faces east, as did our sacred temples, to receive the rays of the rising sun." The first thing which arrested his attention on entering was this font of holy water by the door. Ecclesistic having explained its use, Pagan observed: "We had in many of our temples similar fonts of holy water, with the same significance. Worshippers washed their hands in them, on entering, admonishing themselves to come forward with pure minds to the service of the gods."

We then proceeded, at our friends request, to examine more carefully the symbolism of the building, as presented everywhere on walls and columns. "Triangle and trefoil," he remarked, "are copied from the ancient temples, in which they were used to symbolize the mystery of the Divine Trinity in Unity. This dove was likewise commonly used in the ancient churches as a symbol of the Divine Spirit. The Sacred Heart we had also. Horus, the Egyptian Virgin-born Savior, was pictured carrying the Sacred Heart upon his breast. Vishnue and Bel were depicted in the same manner. Those three letters 'I. H. S.,' formed the monogram of Bacchus. The curious oval frames in which I observe pictures of some divine woman"—"Vesica piscis we call the symbol," interposed Ecclesiastic—"these also were in our temples. They assure me of what I had already suspected, from many of the symbols which I have observed, that very much of your symbolism in this Christian church, however little you may suspect it, is drawn from that most ancient and most curious form of religion known as Phallicism. Your devout worshipers would surely be astonished and possibly revolted if they knew the original significance of these Phallic symbols. I presume you have spiritualized them as our devout priests had done in my time."

Pursuing our inspection of the sacred building, we came upon a peasant woman on her knees, counting her beads. "Such beads or rosaries," Pagan remarked, "were used by Buddhist monks. There were rosaries consisting of one hundred and eight beads, sometimes made from bones of departed saints; each rosary representing a special prayer." "Ours have one hundred and eight beads, each one representing an Ave or Pater noster," observed Ecclesiastic. "Wt had also reliquaries," continued Pagan, "in which sacred relics were kept, similar to these which I observe here. In one place in India, Buddha's robe was kept—probably quite as authentic a relic as the 'holy coat of Treves,' of which you have just told me. I do not think, however, that your priests have as yet come up to that magnificent relic of the Buddha, the shadow of Gautama, which was preserved in a certain cave, and which could only be seen by the faithful. These amulets or charms which your people wear are very much like those which were in use in my time. This church abounds in images and idols, as unfortunately did our temples, and by the way, many of these figures are most certainly our old gods rebaptized. That St. Peter is surely a statue of Jupiter, with the keys in the place of the thunderbolt. Some of these images of your Christ seem to be our Apollo and Orpheus renamed. This 'Black Virgin,' as you call it, which certain of your people seem to reverence so highly, I am sure, from the inspection that I have made of it, is nothing more nor less than one of our old basalt figures of Isis. We did not have such boxes as these which you call 'Confessionals;' and from what you tell me of their uses I am very glad we did not have them; but we had a better form of confession; a public acknowledgment of wrong-doing in the temples—a most salutary observance which kings were known to be manly enough to use."

While waiting for the chief event of the day we rested ourselves in some of the stiff-back chairs of the great church. Groups of monks and nuns caught Pagan's eye, and on being informed concerning them he observed: "A very old institution this of Monasticism. Buddhism had most fully developed it. In one city alone there were more than one hundred monasteries and ten thousand nuns and novices. Our own Egypt had developed quite extensively the cenobitic form of monasticism. I am not sure but your very word 'nun' is of eastern origin."

Some casual reference having been made to the rite of exorcism, Pagan asked for further information concerning it. Ecclesiastic showed him a ritual by Paul V., as revised by Benedict XIV., which he proceeded to compare with the Kabalistic ritual that had been familiar to the initiates of Judaism and Paganism; pointing out singularly close parallelisms which held between the two forms of service, as follows:

Kabalistic ritual for the exorcism of salt:

"Priest-Magician blesses the salt, and says: Creature of salt, in thee may remain the wisdom (of God), and may it preserve from all corruption our minds and bodies. Through Hochmael (God of Wisdom) and the power of Ruach-Hochmael (the Holy Spirit) may the spirits of matter before it recede.—Amen."

Roman ritual for the exorcism of salt:

"The priest blesses the salt and says: Creature of salt, I exorcise thee in the name of the living God. Become the health of the soul and of the body! Everywhere where thou art thrown may the unclean spirit be put to flight.—Amen."

At this point our friend's notice was drawn to a shrine of Mary, in which was one of the familiar representations of the sacred mother and child. He seemed greatly pleased with this. "The virgin mother," he said, "was common to various ancient religions. India had Maya, the virgin mother of Buddha, and Devaki, the virgin mother of Christna; each of whom was represented by art in the great temples as holding her divinely born son in her arms, in forms that might well take the place of this Christian Mary. The Egyptian Isis had the same character, and was pictured after the same fashion. She was even represented, as your Mary appears, standing on the crescent moon, with twelve stars about her head. The artistic resemblance is so close that, unless your historians can trace your traditional picture of Mary quite thoroughly, it seems to me quite probable that it was drawn bodily from our Egyptian representation of Isis." In answer to a request for further information concerning the offices of worship addressed to the mother of God, Ecclesiastic showed him the litany of our Lady of Loretto, between which and the Hindu litany of our Lady Nari and the Egyptian litany of our Lady Isis he proceeded to institute a comparison, some of the more notable features of which are as follows:

Life Triumphant.

A Funeral Poem. By J. Clement Smith, Topeka, Kansas.

Revised Carefully by the Author and Republished by Request—A Poem that Will Live in the Future.

The following poem was written at the request of the writer of these explanatory headlines. It is my custom to preface my remarks on funeral occasions with the reading of an appropriate poem, and wishing to add to my list of already many fine poems, I asked my venerable friend, J. Clement Smith, to contribute something original to my store. He immediately responded and the poem so perfect in method and versification—meter, rhyme and stanza—is here given just as it flashed from his pen at first thought. And let it be known, Mr. Smith is nearing closely the 89th milepost of mortal existence. Surely Spiritualism has many bright and refined minds of which to boast.

Life Triumphant, Revised and Corrected for Second Publication.

The mill is silent, but the living stream
Flows ever onward to the parent sea;
The setting sun has lost no radiant beam,
The stars are transient in obscurity.

All worlds revolving far through endless space,
Though shaded oft are ever known to glow;
There is no pause in time's eternal race,
In the far heavens, or on this sphere below.

That wondrous power we call mysterious life,
Unseen, unheard, builds, moves and fashions all.
Stars fade, worlds clash in elemental strife,
But life can never fade, collide nor pall.

By power conservatory all its own,
Life builds the form we call terrestrial man,
'Tis but a resting place, a transient throne,
Abandonment was destined in its plan.

Life has no rude beginning and no end;
Its changes are but evolution's toil;
Forces all powerful with its movements blend,
Its purpose high, can no resistance foil.

Perhaps this wondrous power, supremely great,
Gives the vast concave its cerulean hue,
Assigns all stellar worlds their routes and fate
And moves all systems, boundless ether through.

We know not where beyond the silent tomb
This human life may find its domicil,
But fondly trust that, freed from fear or gloom,
Love, winsome love, shall guide our beings still.

It is not cruel that the vital force
Should leave the forms of those we loved so well;
Life is most gracious, and most true its course,
Grieve not at falling clod nor tolling bell.

In springtime hours, wrapped in the melting mold,
Prophetic roses weave their petals fair
And upward press with ardor, to unfold
Their bloom and fragrance on the ambient air.

Thus, active life within its earthly flask,
Moulds its rich garniture, refines, expands;
Blossom of manhood is its aim and task,
Obedient to progression's high commands.

Deem not this casket-matrix for the rose;
Its frigid walls enclose but mortal clay;
'Tis couch where weary limbs shall find repose
In dreamless slumber, painless, soft decay.

He has passed onward through the portals broad,
To gorgeous spheres 'midst other loving friends;
Not to the palace of a monarch God,
But to a home where love with justice blends.

Fond hearts will throb and fervid tears will flow,
When friends depart to live in fairer clime;
Restrain the anguish; for our pangs of woe
Lessen the joys within their homes sublime.

Rather rejoice, and in great nature's plan,
Know that the transit, death, is kindly given,
For when on earth, there dies a worthy man,
A happy soul is born in yonder heaven.

Kind Earth, to thy unveiled maternal breast,
This borrowed form we tenderly restore,
In tranquil silence, guarded and caressed,
Be it thy sacred treasure evermore.

Topeka, Kansas. J. CLEMENT SMITH.

That a gradual transition, passing through countless intermediate gradations, exists between man and animals, both in mental and corporeal characteristics, can only be denied by those who insist upon setting their own opinion above facts.—Buchner.

TO BETTER CONDITIONS.

A Plea for an Advance All Along the Line.

To the Editor:—Being interested, and a young worker in the field of Spiritualism, I take this opportunity of (if it is possible)) strengthening the article by Rev. F. A. Wiggin, of Boston, in your issue of November 24.

As one of the youngest workers of the Spiritualist rostrum, I heartily coincide with the remarks of Brother Wiggin. To me it is a deplorable condition of affairs, the lack of ministerial organization, and better opportunity for young men and women to advance the promulgation of this, the grandest truth ever presented to the intelligence of man.

My experience in the past three years has taught me how deficient the work is in educated, up-to-date, men and women. Surely the world was never seeking so earnestly for truth and helpful thought as at the present time; and what do they obtain from the rank and file of mediums that come upon our rostrums? How often we hear the threadbare subjects used, "How I became a Spiritualist;" or, "How much our Spirit Friends Love Us," followed by the "medium-complexioned, medium-haired, medium height, grandfather or grandmother" test. It is certainly discouraging to the thinking investigator.

Again, the lack of advancement of the controlling influences; for instance, a child of five or six years of age having passed to spirit life forty or fifty years ago controlling awoman or man of brains for twenty years, using a childish voice, still continuing a child-like appearance—and we teach progression! Is it to be wondered at that men and women of intelligence do not unite with us and lend their aid, with money and influence to the advancement of the truth of the phenomena and the beautiful teachings of its philosophy.

What shall be done? Where and how shall a remedy for this condition be found? Among the very first of the obstacles we encounter is the lack of an incentive to encourage young men and women to undertake a training which will place them upon "par excellence" with the teachers of the religious world.

Secondly, if they do undertake it, it is more than likely that their remuneration will be so diminutive that they can not afford to feed and clothe themselves properly and make a comparative appearance with the orthodox clergy.

I have for the past year, from the rostrums of the East, advocated better conditions for the teachers of this truth; the ordaining of suitable mediums as pastors, and arranging circuits for the same, that they may feel assured of a suitable subsistence, and an opportunity to study, thereby assisting their influences to give forth grander thoughts that the world is hungering for!

Come, brothers and sisters, let us wake up to the thought of the twentieth century, a more systematic organization. Unless we do, other denominations of advanced thought will take up and incorporate our truths and teachings with their own, and what we know today as Spiritualist bodies will be things of the past.

Lynn, Mass.

The Cause at Lake City, Mich.

I have just returned from Lake City, a church town of this state, where I met many good intelligent people.

In all of my experiences as a Spiritualist worker I have never witnessed such eagerness as was manifested from those investigating minds.

Some of my Spiritualist friends might think where a church element prevailed it would be an effort to arouse an interest. I have always claimed that lectures should always precede the phenomena, and then our listeners are more prepared to receive the latter intelligently. When physical manifestations come foremost, they appear so wonderful to the uneducated in Spiritualism that they are likely to cry fraud, and church people are apt to say:

"It is of the Devil," as the pharisees thought of Jesus; knowing this to be the case, I began my work with lecturing, explaining the philosophy of Spiritualism. As my hearers were intelligent people I soon gained their respect and attention. After a few of those explanations, church members, even Catholics, came to me for readings, but had I given the readings first they might have called me a fortune-teller, and would have looked upon me with such disrespect that a coming lecture might have been given to empty seats, but giving my intellectual work first I had large audiences, and was respected.

After a little rest I would be pleased to find another congenial place of labor. My terms are, railroad fare and what people feel able to pay me for my work; not that I underestimate my spiritual gifts, but wish to reach as many as I can to do good.

THE MEDIUM BAILEY.

He Is Now Holding Circles for Mr. Stanford, of Australia.

In direct communication with the Australian people, Mr. Stanford assures me that in resuming his circles with the medium Bailey, the apports are even stronger and better than heretofore, and that the clay tablets which were destroyed in the Museum at the University, by the late earthquake, are being supplemented by others to replace them; other phenomena of great value and under rigid test conditions at each sitting, are being produced.

With many others, I am endeavoring to make the courageous fight for rehabilitation, and restoration to normal things. Let me assure you, though, that were I an orthodox of the deepest dye, there could be no terrors in the future possibility of a "hell-fire" service on the other side, after passing muster in San Francisco, during the reign of all the terrors, since that memorable April 118, 1906. Served Him Right.

Rev. Overholtzer, pastor of the Baptist Church of Marseilles, near Streator, Ill., according to a news dispatch, objected to the class of tenants, Mr. Osgood, a parishioner, allowed to occupy his tenement, and berated the landlord severely for so doing. The church, though divided, closed their doors on the dominie for the time being.

We notice this matter to remark that the Christian clergy are too frequently in the habit of lugging personal affairs into the pulpit, forgetting they are not dictators. If a member violates church rules charges should be made against him, where the accused can be heard in his own defense, but with pulpit attacks no such opportunity is given.

Years ago a Baptist clergyman in the South arraigned his wife, an educated lady, and a teacher of a young ladies' school, because she had enlarged her views and embraced Spiritualism. He was not content with making the charge of infidelity and heresy against her; but he took occasion to tell God all about the affair, and begged him to restore her to a sound mind, and bring her back into the folds of the church. Sensitive, as she had a right to be, she closed her school, came North, located in Chicago, where we made her acquaintance, and heard from her own lips her story. Both parties are now in spirit life, and it is hoped the cruel husband has learned to tolerate conflicting thought. The lady published a book of poems which well shows the noble mind the bigot husband wished to subordinate to his.

Information Wanted.

Will some person well versed in ethics come to the front and explain why it is the theological students in institutions of learning, are almost invariably the inciters of disorder in such institutions, and the leaders in acts of rowdyism? Even in theological seminaries aspirants for the pulpit are noted for their pranks in disregard of good order. The latest report of this character comes from Augustana college, where seventy-eight students, including many in the theological department, were temporarily suspended by the faculty. Grievous insults to college authorities are given as reason for this suspension of this hoodlum element.

Rowdies in colleges finally develop into the Sam Joneses, Billy Sundays and other agitators for Jesus, whom churchmen delight to honor; for they learned in college sports the language of profanity, which they employ in the pulpit in whooping up hell to the delight of the church, more effectually than ordinary sinners prepared for the ministry.

Which Most Merits Approbation?

Birds on the bird market of Lucknow, India, are bought by Mohammedans and given their freedom, to enjoy their natural instincts. Allah, they think, is displeased when a bird is restrained of its liberty.

In the Christian civilizations of the West the habit seems general to murder the innocent and beautifully decorated songsters, and give their inanimate bodies a place on the hats of the dear Christian ladies, hoping thereby to enhance the beauty of their headgear. And does God look on approvingly?

We hope no Spiritualist lady is ever seen with such a memento of death, and such utter disregard of the higher instincts of others on her person. Birds have as good right to life as has humanity.

The dependence of liberty shall be lovers; the continuance of equality shall be comrades.—Walt Whitman.

More Suspicious Scripture.

A patron writes from Maine, directattention to two strange passages in The Acts, which do not seem to fit the usual interpretation of Christian beginnings. The first is Acts 25:19. We condense what precedes to make the text intelligible:

Festus had just arrived in Jerusalem, when the high priest is represented to have informed against Paul. Soon after King Agrippa arrived at Cesarea, a port on the Mediterranean south of Tyre, where he found Paul recently sent there, in bonds. Festus related to Agrippa the facts pertaining to Paul's detention, and said the accusers brought no charges against him, such as he supposed would be, then, verse 19:

"But had certain questions against him of their own superstition, and of one Jesus, which was dead, whom PAUL AFFIRMED TO BE ALIVE."

They who maintain Jesus was taken from the cross by loving hands, and was laid in a new sepulchre; that he was not dead, but in a cataleptic condition temporarily simulating death, from which he aroused, walked forth, talked, ate, and was seen of many for forty days, though in hiding, when he disappeared, his disciples agreeing he had ascended, all is very discrepant as to time and place.

This idea of a physical awakening from suspended animation gains favor from the fact that they who die on the cross usually survive from six to eight days in great agony; whereas, if Jesus was crucified at the sixth hour, otherwise at noon on Friday, and his sepulchre was opened very early on the first day of the week, and found vacant, then less than forty-two hours, six hours less than two days, had passed since placed on the cross. Was he really alive, as Paul is reported to have said, as appears by the quotation? or was he in hiding? Jesus denied being a spirit, and proved it to doubting Thomas.

Really the cataleptic theory, as gathered from the Gospels, appears well sustained; but there are so many variant statements in every phase of that crucifixion and resurrection story, as related in the Gospels, we choose to credit them to the "miraculous in narration," like the generation, birth and general incidents in the life of the dear Jesus, nearly all inconsistent with natural law, and only believable by the credulous.

The second point to which our friend calls attention will be found in Acts 28: 8, 9. Here Paul is made to speak for himself, and he says he thought to "do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth." And he did, as Dr. Brown fully demonstrated in his late series of articles, proving Paul lived and wrote near a hundred years before the crucifixion, and perhaps several centuries before the Gospels were written.

Paul knew nothing of Jesus of Nazareth. He never mentioned him in his Epistles; never related or referred to any of his miracles; nor to the Gospels. Paul's Jesus was the one he claimed to have seen in his vision when nearing Damascus, a hundred years before Jesus' Death, if that vision occurred while Aretas was on the throne of Damascus, as Paul himself asserts was the case.

Rev. Cox Puts His Foot in It.

Bishop Crapsey appealed from the verdict of his synod at Batavia, N. Y., convicted of heresy, and was found guilty by the higher tribunal.

Rev. Dr. Cox of Cincinnati, who declared himself in full sympathy with Bishop Crapsey's position, said:

"I do not believe Jesus Christ to be 'Very God,' and only term him 'Son of God' in a poetical sense. I do not believe in his virgin birth, or his bodily resurrection, or in the atonement as is set forth in the Prayer Book, or in the doctrine of original sin, as is stated in the baptismal service."

For this written declaration, a position of every thinker of brains occupies, whether in the pulpit or out of it, but Rev. Cox is to be put on trial for heresy, as was announced in these columns several weeks ago must be the case. Of course he will be found guilty, and his pulpit utterances will be silenced. But back of all this is the fact that pulpit and pew of all denominations, the Episcopal church included, the nonsensical claim of the Apostle's creed is ignored by every educated person. If all Christians who repudiate the creeds, and indorse the positions of Crapsey and Cox would join in a new organization it would become the dominant church of America.

Good for Dr. Crapsey.

Bishop Crapsey, convicted of heresy, and about to be suspended from the ministry, has determined to resign and abandon the Episcopal pulpit he has occupied for near twenty-eight years. This avoids the necessity of passing sentence on the distinguished heretic.

How very unfortunate Dr. Crapsey was so constructed he could not believe a virgin, near 2,000 years ago, gave birth to a God, and nurtured that God to manhood; that that God died on a cross at the hands of men; that he would not stay dead, but awakened into full life, lived, ate, talked, preached, went into hiding, threatened, wandered away into Galilee, assisted in a fishing adventure, and after forty days bodily ascended into heaven, and took a seat at the right of his God-Father. It is a wonder so brainy a man as Dr. Crapsey had not retired before from an orthodox pulpit.

Dr. Cox of Cincinnati, will do well to copy the Bishop's example. Who next?

I would rather be poor, with a little sympathy in my heart, than to be rich as all the mines of earth and not have that little flower of pity in my breast.—Ingersoll.

The Danger Signal!

Facts Presented to Spiritualists for Them to Carefully Consider.

THERE IS DANGER AHEAD—THERE IS NO DOUBT OF THAT, AND THE SOONER YOU RECOGNIZE THAT FACT THE BETTER IT WILL BE FOR SPIRITUALISTS GENERALLY. ONE CAN ALMOST SENSE DANGER IN THE AIR, ARISING FROM A DETERMINATION TO "REGULATE" SPIRITUALISM, TO "REGULATE" ITS MEDIUMS AND CONTROL OUR RANKS GENERALLY IN THE DISSEMINATION OF THE TRUTH. WHAT DOES ALL THIS PORTEND? IS A QUESTION OF GREAT IMPORTANCE AND SIGNIFICANCE AT THE PRESENT TIME, AND ONE THAT WILL NOT DOWN UNDER ANY CIRCUMSTANCES, AND ONE THAT SPIRITUALISTS HAVE GOT TO CONSIDER—AN ABSOLUTE DUTY RESTING UPON THEM, TO DO SO, AND ONE THAT WILL NOT FLY AWAY.

IS IT NOT SINGULAR THAT SUCH A THOUGHT SHOULD ARISE AFTER SPIRITUALISM HAS ACCOMPLISHED SO MUCH FOR HUMANITY?

CERTAINLY IT IS.

BUT WHAT IS THE CAUSE OF ALL THIS EXCITEMENT—OF THIS DETERMINATION TO REGULATE SPIRITUALISM? WHY ARE LAWS ENACTED TO REGULATE OUR FOOD, AND HAVE IT PURE AND HEALTHY, NOURISHING AND STRENGTHENING? AH! THERE YOU HAVE IT IN A NUTSHELL! YOU CAN GUESS THE CONCLUSION.

OUR FOOD HAS BEEN CORRUPTED, ADULTERATED, AND IN MANY CASES RENDERED DELETERIOUS TO THE HEALTH, BY UNSCRUPULOUS RASCALS—THOSE WHO DESIRE TO MAKE MONEY, AT WHATEVER SACRIFICE—WHATEVER SACRIFICE TO OTHERS IT MIGHT CAUSE IN CONSEQUENCE OF ILL-HEALTH OR DISEASE, THE SAME WOULD NOT IN THE LEAST HURT THEIR FEELINGS, EVEN IF THEIR POISONOUS FOOD SHOULD RESULT IN DEATH OR MONTHS OF TORTURE.

THAT IS JUST HOW SPIRITUALISM STANDS, AT THE PRESENT TIME—IT HAS BEEN, TO A CERTAIN WELL DEFINED EXTENT, POLLUTED BY A SET OF RASCALS—IT HAS BEEN ADULTERATED—POISONED; IT HAS BEEN DEGRADED TO THE LEVEL OF THE ORDINARY FAKE, THE COUNTERFEITER, AND ONE WHO PRACTICES LEGERDEMAIN, WHO CLAIMS TO BE AN INTERMEDIARY BETWEEN ANGELIC SOULS AND THE DENIZENS OF EARTH. OFTEN THE DECEPTION IS SO PERFECT THAT IT WILL ALMOST DECEIVE THE VERY ELECT—THE VERY WISEST. THE RELATION BETWEEN ADULTERATED FOOD AND ADULTERATED SPIRITUALISM, IS SUCH THAT WHAT WILL LEAD TO THE "REGULATION" OF ONE WILL ALSO LEAD TO THE "REGULATION" OF THE OTHER. ADULTERATION, WHEREVER IT MAY BE PRACTICED LEADS TO DANGER, WHETHER IN THE RANKS OF SPIRITUALISM OR IN THE FOOD WE EAT, OR THE WATER WE DRINK. IT REQUIRES NO FAR-SEEING EYE TO SEE THE DANGER THAT LURKS IN SPIRITUALISM AT THE PRESENT TIME, IN THE THREAT MADE TO "REGULATE" THE SAME.

YOU NOW THOROUGHLY UNDERSTAND THE MATTER—THERE WOULD HAVE BEEN NO THOUGHT OF "REGULATING" SPIRITUALISM HAD IT NOT BEEN FOR THE LEGERDEMAIN PRACTICES IN OUR RANKS.

IMPORTANT MOVEMENT AGAINST FRAUD IN MEDIUMSHIP.

Society Formed to Prevent Fraud by Mediums and Psychics—Would License Genuine Hypnotists and Others of Same Class.

New York.—The formation of the Psychic Investigation Society, intended to prevent fraud by so-called hypnotists, Spiritualistic mediums and mind readers who ply their vocation for money, was announced to-day.

"All the founders of this society have had varied experiences with hypnotists, mediums, mind readers, mental scientists, Christian Scientists, clairvoyants, fortune-tellers, psychics and similar practitioners," said President Deutsch.

Alleged Fraud Denounced.

"Some have decided that fraud was practiced more or less obviously. ALL ARE OPEN-MINDED. ALL FEEL THAT SOMEWHERE IN THIS MAZE OF OCCULTISM THERE IS A PATH THAT LEADS TO POSITIVE KNOWLEDGE AND A DEGREE OF ENLIGHTENMENT BEYOND AND ABOVE THE MERELY MATERIAL AND PHYSICAL. We have therefore organized with the object of driving the frauds and the charlatans out of the business.

"There are fraudulent practitioners making between $20,000 and $30,000 a year by deluding people in this city under some 'psychic' or 'occult' pretense. We estimate that $200,000 represents the sum obtained yearly by honest and dishonest mediums, healers, etc.

Wants Mediums Licensed.

"Thousands of people, particularly women, whose honesty of purpose deserves all the guardianship the state can throw about it, consult these Spiritualist, hypnotic or clairvoyant advisers. Because of their number and the amount expended for such advice and the possibilities for good or evil we believe that such practitioners should be examined and if worthy licensed just as the state licenses physicians, dentists and lawyers."

The plan is to regulate hypnotism, Spiritualism, mind-reading and to a degree fortune-telling and clairvoyancy as the professions of medicine, dentistry and law are regulated. If it is obvious that practitioners have no such power as they claim and are accepting money for their services they will be prosecuted under the statutes forbidding the obtaining of money under false pretenses.

Here follows a specimen of what will lead to "regulating" Spiritualism. It is sent to us by A. F. B. Odin of Hot Springs, Ark. It is a "dodger" circulated by an individual who goes under the name of Foo Lun:

Without asking a question and before you speak a word he will tell you exactly what you called for, tells your name in full, whom and when you will marry (if ever); in fact tells names of your friends, enemies or rivals. He promises to tell you whether your husband, wife or sweetheart is true or false, tell you how to gain the love of the one you most desire, even though miles away; how to succeed in business, speculation, lawsuits; how to marry the one of your choice; how to regain health, youth and vitality. Removes evil influences; cures drink habit, cures nervous diseases.

Foo Lun has brought about more marriages, reunited more separated couples than ANY MEDIUM in America.

Are you sick? Do you know what is the matter with you?

Foo Lun tells you clairvoyantly all about it. That keeps happiness and success from you.

During the time in Hot Springs from January, 1906, to September, 1906, my record for successful work is as follows:

Reunited 130 couples; brought about 342 marriages; gained the love of certain ones, 278; located three buried treasures; located 105 absent persons; overcome 376 rivals—and hundreds of other cases, such as business speculations, law suits and transactions of all kinds.

Cured 85 cases of drunkenness and bad habits and nervous diseases; cured 38 cases of nervous prostration.

Developed SEVEN MEDIUMS who are before the public to-day.

I teach Clairvoyance, Hypnotism and personal magnetism and DEVELOP MEDIUMS. Can learn what gifts you possess.

Do You Wish to Know?

How I can make you happy?
How soon can I marry?
How can I have good luck?
How can I succeed in business?
How can I conquer my enemies?
How can I marry the one I choose?
How can I get a letter?
How can I conquer my rival?
How can I settle my quarrel?
How can I make anyone love me?
How can I control anyone?
How can I get a goo dposition?
How can I keep my wife's love?
How can I have good health?
How can I mend my family troubles?
How soon will my lover propose?
How can I remove bad influences?
How can I make a distant one think of me?
How can I hold my husband's love?

Foo Lun tells all and never asks questions.

As often said before, you grab the spirit in the ordinary materializing seance in these modern times, and nine hundred and ninety-nine times out of one thousand, you will have the medium or a confederate dressed in artificial toggery, and that practice will, if not ended, result in "regulating" Spiritualism, resulting in no end of trouble in our ranks.

The Chase-McCoy Combine Exposure.

On Nov. 1 an invitation was sent by Dr. E. J. Worst of Ashland, O., who is a believer in spirit manifestations, to his son-in-law, Prof. J. A. Miller of Ashland College, to bring a few others connected with the college to a seance to be given at the home of David Brubaker, another believer, by Mr. Chase and Mrs. McCoy of Cleveland. It was stated that some of the Ashland Spiritualists had attended the seances given at Mansfield by Chase and pronounced them specially good materializations.

In response to this invitation Professor J. A. Miller, Professor J. C. Beal, Professor Edwin Jacobs, Mr. C. G. Phillips and myself went to the seance, not as believers in spirit communication, but as MEN INTERESTED IN LEARNING MORE OF THE PSYCHIC POWERS OF MAN, AND HOPING TO SEE AT LEAST AN EXHIBITION OF TELEPATHY OR CLAIRVOYANCE. WE HAD NO PLAN OF CONCERTED INVESTIGATION OR EXPOSURE AND DID NOT ANTICIPATE THE MELEE WHICH FOLLOWED.

There were five ladies and seven gentlemen present, one of the ladies being a daughter of Dr. Worst, who was present with her father. Two of the ladies were Spiritualists.

At about eight o'cock Mr. Chase got his cabinet, which was apparently prepared for the occasion, as the black curtain before it had vertical slits so that a person could emerge from it at a number of places. The top folds also seemed heavy as if they concealed something, but none of us made a thorough examination of this.

The medium, Mrs. McCoy, seemed to be heavily dressed, but we did not insist upon examination of her person, as we hoped to be able to see full proof of trick work later, should there be any.

Mr. Chase tried to seat us so that there would be ladies separating the men as much as possible, and placed those in sympathy with Spiritualism nearest the cabinet. I noted also that when we first came in and were introduced, he tried to learn as much of each of us as possible, and later seemed to be communicating his information to Mrs. McCoy, who also before entering the cabinet, inquired who had ever witnessed a seance before, and said, "Great Peter, but we will have a time to-night."

When she entered the cabinet she yawned immediately, but I noted her shuffling about instead of sitting down on the chair to go into a trance. Once she shook the cabinet and pushed out the side as if changing clothes.

Mr. Chase meanwhile said some things concerning Spiritualism. He said that there are four forms of manifestation: Etherealization, materialization, impersonation and transfiguration. He said that this was his religion and very sacred to him. He said that Mrs. McCoy would go into a trance, and while in that condition would be the medium for the manifestations of the spirits, who would appear in material forms, the matter for their bodies and brains being obtained from the bodies of those present in the room, and that the forms would be assumed for this occasion only.

He further stated that to obtain the best results we must not touch the forms; that if they touched us all right, and if they approached us to rise and greet them as friends and help them to carry on the conversation, because it was as hard for them to know how to come the first time as for us to know how to converse with them.

He also urged us to sing and carry on conversation as an aid to the appearance of the forms. It seemed to me, however, that the attempts to have singing and conversation were to cover the movements of the medium.

In less than five minutes there was a flash of white from the cabinet, as if a part of a skirt were thrust out; then another, then two at once, as if each side of the white skirt were thrust through separate slits of the curtain.

Then the figure of a woman appeared and shrank back again, "Come on," said Mr. Chase in a coaxing tone. Then the form advanced to one of the ladies present and whispered something. Almost immediately after it retreated into the cabinet another appeared. One form came to Dr. Worst, and on his asking if it were his sister, nodded that it was. Presently one came to me, but could not talk, but when I asked whether it was a relative it nodded "yes." I peered closely and NOTED THAT THERE WAS A MASK OVER THE FACE OF THE FORM.

After messages had been given to several others in whispers, another female form came to me, and I arose according to instructions, and this time said, "Are you my sister?" It nodded "yes," and whispered, "Help me," several times. Now the fact is, I HAVE NO SISTER!

Next the figure of a little girl appeared, but did not venture more than half-way out of the cabinet, nor do anything that the medium could not do by getting on her knees and impersonating a child.

Then a form appeared and went about the circle, when one of the lady Spiritualists present said, "She wants a handkerchief." I did not see her give one, however. But the form began to work something white in her hands which developed into a large gauze veil, which was passed about for inspection, and then handed back and the form gradually worked it up into a bunch.

By this time I had noted that the forms did not glide, but walked, and that they made the floor squeak at one place with their weight. The warm breath of the forms could also be noted, and a very unskillful attempt to change the voice in the different impersonations. The same grammatical errors were also repeated in each case.

Occasionally also, the medium would call out from the cabinet (when there was no form outside) trying to use the gruff voice of a lake captain who was said to be her "control" but which was easily discernible as the voice of Mrs. McCoy. Once the voice called out, "There is too much light out there," and Mr. Chase turned the lamp still more. He had placed a newspaper about it with a hole in one side turned toward myself and the man beside me.

Once the voice called out, "In a minute. I've got to arrange these things here." Once one of the lady Spiritualists present said, "I do love to take psychic journeys." Then the medium in the cabinet began to comment about that.

At last the form of an Indian in dark clothes appeared, but did not come near me. The form jabbered a little in supposed Indian language and retired. Then a taller Indian form appeared, but I noted that the increased height was due to a tall hat of feathers. The form grunted about and said, "Chief, chief." The form came to me and bowed so that the feathers came near to my face. A sudden impulse came to me to touch them. I did so. They were real feathers. I pressed on them as the form retreated and rose as I did so. Almost instantly I felt a blow on my head, and knew that Mr. Chase had struck me, but I grabbed the form AND PERCEIVED THAT I HAD THE WOMAN MEDIUM! She struggled so violently that she got away from me, and ran into the cabinet. Mr. Beal, who sat next to me, grabbed Mr. Chase at once when he struck me, or he would have hit me again. I called for the light, and Mr. Phillips turned it up.

Mr. Chase acknowledged at once that he had hit me, and we sent for the marshal, who arrived in several minutes and several of us went with him and Mr. Chase to the lock-up. There the marshal demanded to know of him what he hit me with, and was about to search Mr. Chase when he produced the handcuffs and acknowledged that he had used them. He was refused bail and was locked up. I went to a doctor and had my wounds dressed. Had the blow been a trifle lower it would have put out my eye. As it is, no serious harm will result—only several gashes.

The next day, acting on the advice of the best citizens I prosecuted the man for assault. He made no defense, save a plea for clemency, and was fined $25 and costs. He pretended to be a poor man, and some of his Spiritualist friends helped to make up his fine.

After Mrs. McCoy fled into the cabinet she called out, "Oh, what has happened?" Chase answered, "I struck a man." She said, "You ought not to have done that." In several minutes she came out of the cabinet with her usual dress on.

When I charged them with fraud next day, Mr. Chase said, "Well if it was the medium, IT WAS IMPERSONATION." She said, "Well, if it was me I did not know it." To others, however, Mr. Chase said, "THE MOMENT THE FORM WAS TOUCHED IT TURNED INTO THE MEDIUM. IT WAS A CASE OF TRANSFORMATION."

The couple left for Cleveland Saturday morning. C. F. YODER.
Ashland, Ohio.

This is to certify that we were eyewitnesses of the exposure of the Chase-McCoy Combine at Ashland, O., and certify to the truthfulness of the account as given by Prof. Yoder.

JOHN C. BEAL,
EDWIN E. JACOBS,
C. G. PHILLIPS,
J. A. MILLER.

The Cleveland (Ohio) Plain Dealer had the following from Ashland, Ohio:

When H. E. Chase and sister, Mrs. Alice McCoy of Cleveland, give their next Spiritualistic seance they will undoubtedly make sure there is no one "from Missouri" in their audience.

Last night in the flat of Mr. and Mrs. D. F. Brubaker on Main street, this city, twenty invited guests were to have witnessed the manifestation of the spirits of departed white children, white women and Indians, for the sum of $1 per. All went well until the last big Indian chief with feathered headgear made advances to Rev. Charles F. Yoder of Ashland University, when the seance came to a sudden close.

The big Indian chief came so close to Prof. Yoder that when it bowed one of the big long feathers touched his cheek. This excited his curiosity and when he arose to pay his respects he casually extended his hand in the direction of the feathers of which he got a handful.

Then something happened. A sound was heard like the muffled report of a revolver. In the dim light Prof. Yoder was seen to stagger for an instant, then make a dash for and embrace the spirit. There was a fierce struggle. Someone struck a match to better enjoy the battle between the "spirit" and the flesh and it was all over.

Prof. Yoder had been stunned and as the "spirit" proved to be very much of an athlete, it escaped. Chase then stepped into the dim light and said: "I struck the blow; you did not comply with the rules. Sorry it happened."

Prof. Yoder looked as if he had just emerged from a football scrimmage. He had been struck a terrific blow with a pair of handcuffs and had two wounds on the forehead and one on the nose.

Chase spent the night at the police station and at the close of his hearing which lasted the greater part of the afternoon, was given a fine of $25 and costs which his friends helped him to meet.

By carefully scanning the above, one can fully realize why a tendency on the part of the public has arisen to "regulate" Spiritualism—to separate the wheat from the chaff—the clean from the unclean—the truth from error—the genuine from the spurious.

In trying to "regulate" Spiritualism, the public intimates that there is a great truth connected therewith, and they want that to stand forth prominently, thinking the same will not mislead those who are seeking the light of our philosophy.

In regard to the Chase-McCoy materializing seance, the same result has followed every exposure—the "spirit" was undoubtedly dressed in artificial toggery, such as has been found on the person of every materializing medium whose "spirit form" has been grabbed, and then the artful sophistry rises like a dark, pestilential cloud—"Oh! the medium faded away into the spirit," or "the spirit passed into the form of the medium—they becoming one." Any explanation to satisfy the gullible seems to be in order in connection with these materializing seances. Just glance for a moment at the pretensions of this Hot Springs medium! Don't you think he needs "regulating"? If you "regulate him you to a certain extent "regulate" Spiritualism. He belongs to a pernicious class that are infesting our ranks on all sides—they cling to the same with unyielding tenacity, and they are all the unswerving, villainous opponents of The Progressive Thinker, crying out vociferously, "It is opposed to mediums!" when in fact it is the acknowledged organ of all honest mediums

But here arises the difficulty; in "regulating" these pretentious characters, there is danger of interfering with the rights of honest mediums, and great damage may result to them. With the artificial toggery, the bogus materializations and stock tests, the truth as manifested in SPIRITUALISM IN ITS PURITY, can not be otherwise than darkened. Those who think otherwise, think to little purpose. With impurities connected with it, the same as with food, it will in the estimation of the public have to be "regulated;" that may possibly come in due time, sooner or later, however much you might wish it to be otherwise, and under the circstances, "DANGER SIGNALS" should be erected throughout the ranks of Spiritualism. Laws—laws intending to suppress what is bogus in our ranks will be enacted, and in a measure, it is greatly feared, they will, more or less interfere with honest mediums, and trouble to them will arise.

Spiritualists, you have the facts, and you should face them at once. Commence NOW to suppress those whose "spirit" manifestations are the result of legerdemain or deception, and thus save our glorious Cause from being "regulated" by the outside public, by those who are ignorant of the laws governing mediumship and spirit return.

Learning vs. Ignorance.

Hutton, the great mineralogist and geologist of Scotland, died in 1797, wrote:

"In the economy of the world I find no trace of a beginning, no prospect of an end."

It was the task of a romancer at the dawn of civilization, who discovered the earth and all it contains, with the boundless heavens added, had a beginning; and it remained for another, whom ignorance has denominated a God, and who is worshiped as such, who told of its destruction.

Can Instruct but Not Restrain.

On account of shortage in pulpit supplies a college in Northern Illinois, offers free tuition to fifty young men to prepare them for the Christian ministry. This act of itself shows the desperate straits into which the churches have fallen. But however successful in augmenting the ministry by education, can the mind of students be so paralyzed that it can be induced to discard the teachings of science and accept the dogmas of the church as God-inspired? We apprehend not.

"There are six ways of dissipating wealth, young man, strong drink, theatre going, evil companions, dicing, wandering about the streets at night, and idleness. Six evils attend upon the sluggard. He says it is too cold, and does not work; he says it is too hot, and does not work; he says it is too early, and does not work; he says it is too late, and does not work; he says, I am hungry, and does not work; he says, I am full, and does not work; and while he thus lives, ever neglecting his duties, he both fails to acquire new property, and that which he possesses dwindles away.—Buddha.

Sacred are the lips from which has issued only truth. Over all wealth, above all station, above the noble—the robed and crowned—rises the sincere man. Happy is the man who neither paints nor patches, veils nor veneers! Blessed is he who wears no mask!—Ingersoll.

There is work that is work and there is play that is play; there is play that is work and work that is play. And in only one of these lies happiness.—Gelett Burgess.

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER

We Remind you that the SPIRIT OF THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER NEVER SLEEPS! There is need of a WATCHMAN and WE ARE IN THE TOWER and ON DUTY for the best interest of TRUE SPIRITUALISM!

Another Announcement!

In Reference to the Remarkable Works of Andrew Jackson Davis.

A letter from Dr. Davis indicates that a change has been made in the price of a full set of his remarkable works. They will be furnished per set when republished at $20 instead of $30, as heretofore announced. There are thousands who ought to have a set of these books. Their publication at an early day depends on the number of subscribers that can be secured. His books are a fundamental part of Spiritualism; the history of Spiritualism can not be written without them.

Since last week, the following subscribers to a full set of the Doctor's works have come to hand:

W. H. HARRY, MORO BAY, ARK.; MRS. D. L. BURROWS, GIBSON, PA.; JOHN A. GRESSLE, HAMILTON, OHIO; V. L. CAPWELL, KINGSTON, PA.; MARY H. GODBE, SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH; JOHN NAPPER, ENTERPRISE, IDAHO; J. RUEGG, MILWAUKEE, WIS.

The Power of Thought in Moldiug Character.

Address by Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond at the World's New Thought Convention, Chicago, October 25, 1906.

Mr. Chairman, Members of the World's New Thought Federation Convention and Friends:—Some years ago, perhaps not to be mentioned or numbered, your present speaker was addressing a large audience in Liverpool, England, under the auspices of the Spiritualists of that city, when some one sent up the question, "What are the Spiritualists driving at anyway?" and the speaker answered: "Not being their coachman, I cannot tell." Today some one said, who had been at the New Thought Federation Convention, "What are the New Thought people driving at anyway?" and the same question was answered in the same way.

Since fifty-six years ago your present speaker, as a little girl, commenced to talk "New Thought" called "Modern Spiritualism, and since our speakers on this platform, our genial and venerable friend, Judge Benson of Kansas, and Dr. Burroughs of Detroit, in their "History of New Thought" and their "Evolution of New Thought," never mentioned among these causes and bases as the foundation and head the word of "Modern Spiritualism," I would be doing injustice to the truth if I did not say at this moment, that I think Spiritualism has done more to break the barriers of creed and dogma from modern thought than any other word in the English language. I stand before you to-night as the result of what that word has done for me.

I am not here to discuss Spiritualism, but in the taking up of the lines of thought that have brought forward the "New Thought" movement of the world, nothing could be either complete or partially so without reference to that which has compelled the organization of the Psychic Research Society to explain, and finally accept, its facts; to induce the manifestation of "Christian Science" and "Metaphysical Healing" as the legitmate result of Healing Mediumship, and which has allied the whole world, under its power of liberalizing the human mind, to listen to the voice of the spirit as presented at this convention.

The subject assigned me was chosen by your committee without your speaker knowing of it beforehand. But you know well enough by experience that it was not necessary for her to know of it until to-night.

The subject of new thought, or of "Thought in the Molding of Character" is exactly the opposite to what the speaker would have fashioned it. The speaker would have said: Character, as the framer and only source of thought.

In order that you may understand our attitude on this subject we would say, that we believe that there is but one Infinite source of intelligence, and one finite avenue of expression of intelligence. The source of intelligence is the Infinite Being, the avenue of manifestation is the finite being. That which soul expresses through matter is spirit, that which spirit, in contact with matter, evolves is mind, and thoughts are the most external manifestations of the soul and spirit.

Thoughts are many, and there are many vagrant thoughts that wander hither and thither meaning nothing and doing nothing. When the parable says, "As a man thinketh in his heart so is he," the heart is made superior to the brain. We have only come to worship the brain in modern thought, formerly it was the affections, the intentions. That which formed the central force of activity was not simply the intellectual process, but "what a man thinketh in his heart" and this was said in reference to a worldly man that might express himself in one way and mean another. It was Talleyrand, we think, who said that "words were given to conceal the thoughts," and thought sometimes is said to conceal the real purposes of the human being.

There has not been a greater barrier to the expression of all that the World's New Thought Federation Convention stands for than the mere intellectual methods of the world. There is no greater barrier to the revealing of truth than the commencing from the outside of things to arrive at spirit; as things are but the manifestation of thought, and only imperfectly at that. So words are but the imperfect expression of ideas, and ideas at first are but the imperfect expression of all the boundless possibilities that are within the soul.

The New Thought Federation affiliates with science, because science is attempting to bore a hole into this fountain of life and light from the outside. All hail! to Science, because when arriving at the truth it will find it in the same methods you have. All hail! to those who attempt to discover by external means the true God. They will ask as did one of old, "Can we by searching find out God?" Never! The stone may be analyzed, the earth may may be solved in the experimentum crucis of science, or all other means in the laboratory of scientific investigation may be applied and you will not find God. Only that which is like unto God can find God. We perceive by the power that is like that which we perceive. Often we have said that the fishes in the Mammoth Cave have no eyes, because there is nothing to see, there is no light to see with. The spiritual power that perceives God is the power that has taken possession of this New Thought, this modern thought, and says, you do not begin to find God through the senses, through the reasoning of the intellect and the mind. That which is within perceives and knows God.

What New Thought is trying to do (no one on this platform claims that New Thought is a New Truth) is to manifest the new method of arriving at and expressing the truth that is eternal. We must have new methods. Science, philosophy, even theology and medicine have been converted to new methods. When materia medica can be converted to new methods you may know there is something new under the sun. Therefore, what we wish to express is: That the character that is formed by this constant knowledge of the powers of the soul and the powers of the Infinite is expressed in new methods of thought. If people can arrive at results by direct perception and knowledge of the soul and of the Infinite, we do not see any use of endeavoring to arrive at them by the external method, which never succeeds.

It has never been known in the history of the world or the perception of truth, that truth was ever evolved by thinking it. But it has always been known that when truth appears the thought will appear and the language will be manifest.

The character of each individual is formed, not by the thoughts that the individual thinks, nor by the thoughts that are thought at that one, but by that which is brought forth from the inner consciousness, which makes a good part of the conception of life and its purpose.

Your previous speaker has made "affirmations" and "denials." They are the result of direct experience. They come from his inner, not his outer, consciousness. They develop into external forms as they are needed. By whatever process this knowledge comes to human beings, we all know "there are more things in heaven and earth than are dreamed of in" the philosophy of the materialist or the material scientist. We know that no material investigation has ever brought people into a knowledge of their spiritual possessions. But the habit of opening the windows, when once they are opened, invites that which is within to come forth, to give more light, atmosphere and room for the primal truths to express themselves.

I believe the advantage of this New Thought method is, that all the windows of the soul are open that look outward. There are no windows in the soul looking inward to get this light, this truth, this power. Of course, the manifestation of this power comes in manifold ways, and of course it comes according to the unfoldment, according to the need. Human character is evolved or unfolded to expression by its own innate purpose. On the money of the United States is stamped that which gives it character. Any other piece of paper, any other piece of metal would be just as good if it had that stamp upon it. So that which comes from the spirit bears its own living evidence, bears its own testimony. This spiritual power, this unto which the world is gradually turning is a part of the rightful inheritance of the human race.

I would use my body to express my spiritual purpose; I would use my mind to think the way I wish it to for the purpose of enabling the body to express that purpose. I would use my intellect as the manifestation of the spirit, and I would know that what life is, what "natural law" is to the material universe, such is the Infinite power to the soul and spirit of man.

What is this power? Is it physical? No. What is this power? Is it dynamical? No. But it sets in motion all physical forces, and it can control all dynamic relations. It can do this in various ways. It does it by the manifestations of nature through what is called "natural law," although no one ever knew what natural law is. We claim that laws neither fashion nor execute themselves. Our friend the Judge here on the platform knows that, and he knows that often those who are appointed to execute them do not always do it. We know that without some kind of intelligence in the universe that fashions the law, the law would find no expression; that when the soul, which is like unto that intelligence, places itself in harmony with that intelligence then the possibilities of the soul are as boundless as those that are manifested in that universe. Nay! that which is termed natural law by the material scientist (we use the word science with reference to its especial technical meaning) differs from that employed by scientists like Dr. Alfred Russel Wallace, Sir William Crookes, Camille Flammarion and others who are investigating physical things by physical science, but who have, happily, come into the higher knowledge of spiritual things; those manifestations in nature termed natural law may be, and are, superseded the moment we come in contact with another set of laws. Now that set of laws is not material, and not to be measured by physical things. But what "natural law" is to the material universe, God's love is to the realm of the spirit. Therefore, the only commandment that the Great Teacher gave to his followers after all the laws and doctrines of the Mosaic Dispensation was, "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another."

God's love sets in motion in the human spirit all the attributes that are like unto himself: Love and Wisdom, the thought of liberty, of everything that can be expressed in man in the forwarding of human welfare and happiness. That love is what sets in motion the possibilities of conquering substance: the power of requesting and receiving that which seems impossible in the physical universe. So we say, that when you arrive at setting in motion this set of laws and functions you supersede the material process, and the healing—of which our friend has spoken—takes place. There is nothing in healing but adjustment. This instrument (the piano on the platform) did not make itself, nor did it make the harmony that proceeds from it when touched by the hands of the master musician. Ever since the piping of Pan with the reed there has been a steady unfoldment in human expression of what is called harmony. You hear the Thomas Orchestra to-morrow night, or Saturday, and you will know the culmination of this great harmony that was first symbolized in Pan and was then brought forth. If you go out into the groves you discover that Orpheus is there with his lute. But Orpheus is not a personality, he is that conception of harmony within your own spirit. You go out on this glorious night of stars and you almost hear the music of the moving worlds and the suns in their places. Apollo is there with his wonderful harp and you set yourselves to the music of the spheres. But that sound reaches not the material sense; it is not borne in upon you by the external discord that you call music, it is attunement of your spirit to the harmonies of your soul, and you find it symbolized there. We know that if there were absolute harmony instead of the compromise (which all musicians understand) in music, you could not hear it. We know that when President Northrup asks you, and all people who believe in the great music and harmony of "the silence," that you withdraw, it is for the purpose of placing your mental and spiritual being in harmony with the Infinite, in the silence which is the voice of God and the universe.

The character of every human being is built up from within. This rose unfolds from within, the sunshine, and dews and fresh air constitute the methods that remove the obstacles to its expression. The only value of giving to one another these words, the only value of expression is, that it wins that which is within to come forth. We believe that if any one has an urgent truth that wishes to come forth it will find words, it will find the way, it will make itself manifest. When William Lloyd Garrison, who was a non-resistant, who believed only in stating that the slaves had the right to freedom, faced the mob in Boston, he stood alone, he folded his hands and said: "I will not equivocate, I will not prevaricate, I will not retreat a single inch, and I will be heard." And the voice of that freedom came forth from his lips, not at the mouth of the cannon, not with the guns of an army, but with the great urgency of the voice of freedom. Just as soon as Truth sets your spirits free, not only will thought, but speech will find its full expression and arrangement.

"But," says one, "I am not responsible for my thoughts, they come unbidden." That is just where we want you to be made responsible. You think you are in a measure responsible for your words, and you do keep silent when you think it best to do so; and your actions, you claim are fully, or ought to be, under your control. Now govern your thoughts; set your minds to thinking along the ways you want to go.

Longfellow says: "A boy's will is the wind's will, and the thoughts of youth are long, long thoughts," but that is before he gets ready to do anything. When he gets ready the thought is there; when he gets ready his will is not vagrant. As long as one is never busy he is not responsible for his thoughts. If something comes to your spirit and urges you by its great force and power to speak the truth, do its bidding, you may know that it is the voice of God, and your spiritual power will bend to it, and you may know that His messengers accompany you, and your spirit will press forward.

But people say, "well," when they are engaged in any plan, "I will think about it." There is another thing to be considered; you never can think about a thing you know nothing about; you cannot think of it, you cannot think toward it; you cannot think around it. When Dr. Alfred Russel Wallace was chairman of the Psychological Department of the British National Association of Science they were discussing Hypnotism or Mesmerism and Spiritualism at one of their meetings, when some man got up in the back part of the hall and said: "Mr. Chairman, I do not know anything about this subject, but I think—" "Stop!" said Dr. Wallace, "it would take too long for the gentleman to tell what he does not know; he has no business saying he has been thinking about something he knows nothing about." All our thoughts are predicated upon knowledge, then we think what we will do with that knowledge.

Every idle thinking may produce vagrant thoughts. Somebody, perhaps two or three people said on this platform, we think it was ascribed to Prentice Mulford, that "thoughts are things." That thought is horrible. We know things in their formation are the results of thoughts. But thoughts are not things. Fortunately they are perishable, they are very changeable, unless they are true, and all thoughts about truth will not make it any more true, it will simply enable the one possessing the truth to decide what he will do with this truth. Now you have some money, what will you do with it? You have some valuable information in science or philosophy, what will you do with it? Give it forth. Thinking will enable you to arrive at the method of doing it.

"Now let us send our best thoughts to our sister who cannot be here." Thinking our best thoughts will convey to her our love. Over there in Russia is the mother who loves her boy who dies upon the battle-field, that love makes her know when the boy's body dies, because his life is nearer unto her. The instantaneous manifestation of the power of the spirit is because in your consciousness you have the perception of truth. There is nothing to intervene between you and the Infinite, and between you and every other consciousness that is in accord with that.

Physical science sometimes offers an apology—please do not take it literally, comparisons are only to reach the outward conditions of the mind—: Marconi's system of wireless telegraphy requires that there shall be a transmitter and a receiver in exact accord. In exact accord, that is the meaning of orchestriation in music; that is the meaning of choral singing; that is the meaning of the silence in these meetings; that is the meaning of everything that you do to be one with each other. If you are here or in London, or St. Petersburg, or in China, you are one with us. It is instantaneous, instantaneous.

People have used the word "vibration" in connection with spirit. We ask your pardon for even referring to it; nobody of any intelligence could ever dream that there is any need of vibration between spirit and spirit that are in accord. Whenever and wherever the spirit of God is manifest it is instantaneous. That is why there can be instantaneous healing when you are in accord with the spirit of healing. That is why there can be instantaneous perception of truth. That is why the scales fell from Saint Paul's vision. The truth makes people free, in that respect as well as in all others; it makes them know, and knowledge, as said before, cometh from within.

Now this character, this one word character that the New Thought is seeking to build up in the present and future generation is, the character of correct willing, correct thinking and correct doing!

ETERNAL TORMENT RULES OUT HEAVEN.

Is there a literal lake of fire, a horrid place called hell?
Where spirits of erring ones with legions of devils dwell?

Is there a place of writhing torture from which there is no release?
Then in all the universe there is no
God—no rest, no peace.

Could you sing the "great new song," knowing that your friend
Was writhing in a lake of fire where the tortures never end?

If you could, then you're a devil and ought to be in hell;
If such a place there surely is as many preachers tell.

If there is a hell where demons dwell,
and spirits unforgiven,
Then the universe is hell—there is no room for heaven.

A friend of mine in the place called heaven, could not happy be,
Knowing that I was doomed to hell
through all eternity.

The mother remembers her first-born
babe, and all her care;
Her oft-repeated admonitions—her constant prayer

That God would direct those little feet in virtue's path;
Oblivious of all her prayers and tears,
He is pouring his wrath

In hot vindictives, on the head of this her darling boy,
Beneath the fiery, crested waves of hell, to burn, but not destroy.

The husband that loved his erring wife, who into temptation fell,
And suffered much through all earth life, died and "went to hell."

He remembers that with all her faults, oft she bathed his aching head,
When prostrate lying on his couch, or lingering on a bed

Of illness, and helpless as a child, she was so good and kind,
And attentive through the long and tedious night—such thoughts run through his mind.

Is he happy? has he a heaven found where all is love and life?
Or is he weeping tears of blood because his wife

Is writhing in a liquid lake of fire—can you tell,
Dear reader, where this good man is?
In heaven or hell?

Perhaps he remembers, too, his wayward son—his daughter dear;
He is in heaven, must shout in sing,
must not shed a tear.

Oh! no, there are "no tears in heaven,' all are free
From care and tears, and gladly submit to God's decree.

"Is the baby here? Oh! where, oh, where, is my darling child?"
The angels much embarrassed were,
the "Man of Sorrows" smiled,

Looked pleased and said, "the angels dare not tell,
But according to God's decree, your child is now in hell."

Then cried the father and the friends:
"Open wide the gate;
Let us escape this horrid place"—the angel said, "Too late."

Then some of the angels tried to sing,
others seemed to weep;
The weeping, sorrowing spirit said:
"Better eternal sleep."

Then echoed through the plains afar,
and beneath the deep,
"There is no heaven, all is hell."
"Better eternal sleep."

Yes, let them sleep the sleep of an eternal night,
Rather than pass eternal day just in sight

Of those I love, writhing beneath the fiery wave
Of torture—and I no power have to save.

If those I love must in eternal torment
—thro' endless cycles dwell,
Rather than remain in this place called heaven, I, too, would go to hell.

Heaven itself becomes a torture where no man of heart could dwell
In vain look for a place of peace—the universe is hell.

Is there, then, no God, no Christ, no heaven? Is all a lie?
Is creation all a failure? Is man just born to die?

Does he die eternally? Is it the extinction of the race?
Or does just move out and go to his own place?

As Judas did—not as the clergy all believe and tell,
But to "his own place"—not a burning hell.

Judas was under complete control,
hence his fall;
Not that he was worse than most of men—not at all.

When he came to himself again, free from that control,
He said, "I've innocent blood betrayed." Sorrow filled his soul.

He went away and hanged himself,
did not want to live.
Was he worse than the murderous
Jews, for whom Christ prayed,
"Forgive."

"Forgive them, Father," said our Lord, "they know not what they do."
Each man goes to his own place, and there's a place for you.

Every man will find his place, it may be low or high,
And if disposed may onward move
through all eternity.

He will, no doubt, be punished as his works have been;
Punishment within himself is the result of sin.

We have a foretaste of such a hell
when we sin,
A conscience full of guilt, a fear, a dread, a fire within.

The thing called death will make no change, only a change of state;
With spirits thus imprisoned it will never be "too late."

Man was made free at first; will he lose that freedom? Never.
He has the power within himself to go on, and on forever.

Will he continue still in sin? Possibly he might;
But the probability is, he will try to do
what's right.

And thus he by consecutive steps will paradise regain,
He may relinquish sin, conquer hell,
and rise to a higher plane.

He has learned the great redeeming thought, that never can deceive,
That salvation comes to all men—especially those who believe.

Spiritualism in Lancaster, Pa.

Spiritualism in this conservative hod-bed of orthodoxy does not grow as fast as it does in other localities where educated public opinion is more open to glimmerings of truth that come from other sources than the outgrown creeds of the dead past.

The Spiritualist society started in Lancaster about five years ago, through the efforts of our late president, Geo. A. Kiehl, has had a strenuous time establishing itself as a recognized body of workers for the advancement of liberal thought and the higher things of the spirit. But by patient perseverance and determined effort we have now arrived at that point in our slow but sure progress where we can no longer be ridiculed and slighted. We have had some of the best speakers and teachers of the philosophy of Spiritualism with us at different times such as B. F. Austin, Harrison D. Barrett, W. J. Colville, Mr. and Mrs. Kates and others, and they have done a great work here in diffusing knowledge that is more in keeping with Twentieth Century enlightenment than is the bigoted ignorance of the dark ages of religious superstition, in which this benighted community is so steeped. But so wedded to their idols of orthodoxy are the majority of people, that we have had the greatest difficulty in getting paying audiences to hear even such able and eloquent men as Austin and Colville, and our society has always suffered financial loss in bringing them here. Physical phenomena mediums, however, such as Mrs. Etta Wreidt, Mrs. Wilcox and Mrs. Bartholomew, have done very well here from a financial standpoint, though the result of their work is not apparent in the way of an accretion of new members to our society. We are, however, holding our own, and what little we can do to spread the light of spiritual truth we are trying to do courageously and with fidelity to the highest ideals of Spiritualism.

We have had the pleasure of a two-weeks' visit from Mrs. Fannie Spaulding. She did good, conscientious work here. Her "tests" were remarkably startling and convincing, if not always infallible. Her lectures were scholarly and inspiring, and we, as a society, can fully recommend her as a medium and lecturer of more than ordinary power and ability.

CHURCHES AND MANLY SPORT.

They Want to Introduce New Features in Order to Attract the People.

For some years there has been a tendency [says the Daily Journal of Chicago] among liberal churches to make week day amusements a part of the "religious" education. In some instances there have been large parish houses erected where settlement work and social amusements go hand in hand seven days in the week. A still wider departure from conservative ideas is the proposal by two South Side liberal pastors to introduce dancing, billiards, bowling and other amusements into their congregations.

Rabbi Hirsch is one of these apostles of a new order. He prophesies that unless such steps are taken "the churches' influence will wane and their usefulness become a matter of serious question."

Rational amusement for the young is the rallying cry. It is claimed that a modern church should not only teach the highest and best thought, but should supply all the amusements for the young that they are now forced to get from outside sources.

This doctrine will not appeal to many church people of the old-fashioned type. There is still a profound belief that churches have enough to do to teach religion. The greatest humanitarians sometimes admit that if the church confined itself to saving souls, it would make the work lighter for those who deal only with minds and bodies. And yet, there is room for every experiment that has a high motive.

If young people can be attracted to churches by tenpin alleys and weekly dances, the churches that offer these attractions are doing good kindergarten work. Perhaps in time the recruits thus gathered in may be susceptible to the more serious phases of soul saving. More power to the billiard hall and dance parlor under church auspices. If they tend to lure the young away from less reputable resorts they will have their place in the altruistic world.

REGULATING SPIRITUALISM.

A New Plan by Which Spiritualists Do Their own Regulating.

To the Editor:—I saw in your issue of November 24, the words, "To Regulate Spiritualism." I find there is regulation necessary in organization; Spiritualism will regulate itself if organization is perfected.

So we have attempted to regulate our State organization in Nebraska. Our State Spiritualist Association of Nebraska has been owned by self-aggrandizing individuals, and kept in a dormant condition for about ten years; no growth, no interest in the cause or progress of the association; and our funds have been converted to the use and support of individual officers until we are entirely bankrupt.

Since our convention of October 19, 1906, we have made a new start, putting in office the more honest sex, "OUR SISTERS," to guide and protect the association; Rev. Mrs. V. A. Bell, of Crete, Neb., our president, who is now lecturing for us every Sunday evening. Mrs. L. Wilcok, vice-president; Mrs. T. J. Ward, treasurer; Rev. G. S. Klock, secretary; Mr. D. A. Thomas and Mr. H. L. J. Loughner, as trustees. The executive board consists of the officers and the people may look forward to a just and progressive administration for this year, and new regulative powers. We have it so regulated here in the city, that when new mediums come into the city, they must either get a license of the city or the S. S. Association to work their cause; a license from the S. S. A. Secretary permits them to work without any disturbance from the city authorities.

We are establishing our organization under Three Fundamental Principles: 1st. Social investigation of the continuity of life. 2nd. Spiritual Relations our Religion. 3rd. Fraternal Co-operation of Spirit and Material. In our "every Sunday meeting," we will give lectures, tests, having a social investigation of the philosophy of spirit life, uniting ourselves with a more united belief and knowledge. In our second degree, we will teach our relations to each other in spirit and in earth, loving each as each would be loved. In our 3rd. degree, we will teach, and demonstrate the co-operation of spirit life and earth life, making commerce a pattern of spirit co-operation, giving relief to the distressed, and benefiting the sick. After we have founded our organization upon the foregoing principles, we will then try and establish organizations all through the state upon the same principles. Hoping that the N. S. A. will co-operate with us in our state, making our organizations attractive and fraternal.

Organization has been used as a tool in this state, and the end has come. We have worked hard during the last year to drive out the fraud and pretense, and make a pure organization that will grow without the weeds and tares. We allow all classes of people to associate with us in our "every Sunday meeting," that we may convert them to the truth of spirit return, giving them a knowledge of the same, with the philosophy. None are allowed to enter our second and third degrees until they have associated with us in the first degree six months; these we call associate members, subscribing to the organization without cost of fee. When they unite with us in the other degrees, a fee of $1.00 is charged for each degree.

These rules bar out all frauds and pretenders, making our organization perfect and pure.

Hoping that you will publish the foregoing, as we believe it a great improvement in the organization of spiritual societies.

G. S. KLOCK, Secretary.

NOT WANTED.

Little children, soft and sweet,
Clinging hands and dancing feet,
Dimpled cheeks and eyes of blue,
'Tis God's richest gift to you.
All Golconda's sparkling gems,
Fairest roses from their stems
Are but dewdrops, when compared
To this angel golden-haired.

'Tis a mother's dear old face,
Silver strands 'neath cap of lace,
Wrinkled hands, blue-veined and true,
Waiting till the day is through;
Watching for an angel face
To guide her to that resting place
To sleep and dream, to watch and wait
And float through the eternal gate.

Not wanted, 'tis the thought, alas!
That often through the lips doth pass;
The stony stare, the smileless face,
Rend a true heart's biding place.
O, weary one, whose feet have trod
Forbidden paths, look up, 'tis God
Whose tender smile and gentle hand
Will lead thee to that better land.

Not wanted, yet for bread they cry,
'Tis not alms they ask, then why
Should you turn them from your door
Bid them go, and come no more?
Help the helpless, feed the poor,
Words prophetic, "Be the doer,"
For ye know not when or where Heavy burdens thou may'st bear.

Spectacles Can Be Abandoned

"Actina," a Wonderful Discovery That Cures Afflictions of the Eye and Ear Without Cutting or Drugging.

There is no need for cutting, drugging or probing the eye for the cure of most forms of disease, for a new system of treating afflictions of the eye has been discovered whereby all torturous methods are eliminated. There is no risk or experimenting, as hundreds of peple have been cured of failing eyesight, cataracts, granulated lids and other afflictions of the eye through this grand discovery, when specialists, they state, termed the cases incurable.

Mr. A. O. T. Pennington, special agent Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Co., Kansas City, Mo., writes: "Having used Actina for several years, I cheerfully recommend it for the cure of eye, ear and throat affections. It cured my mother, of cataracts."

Susan Cardwell, Lincoln, Kan., writes: "I am 78 years old. I was so blind I could only know persons by their voices. After using Actina I can now thread a needle without glasses."

Rev. W. C. Goodwin, Moline, Kan., writes: "My honest opinion of Actina is that it is one of the most marvelous discoveries of the age. It cured my eyes, and cured my wife of asthma."

Hundreds of other testimonials will be sent on application. "Actina" is purely a home treatment and self-administered by the patient, and is sent on trial postpaid. If you will send your name and address to the New York and London Electric Association, Dept 342B, 929 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo., you will receive absolutely free a valuable book, Professor Wilson's Treatise on the Eye and on Disease in General.

A NEW CATECHISM

BY M. M. MANGASARIAN.

Fourth Edition—Six Additional Chapters—260 Pages, Bound in Cloth, $1.00.—Containing Likeness of the Author.

"A New Catechism" has enjoyed a remarkable sale both in America and England. George Jacob Holyoake, in his introduction to the English edition of "A New Catechism," says:

"A New Catechism" is the boldest, the brightest, the most varied and informing of any work of the kind extant. The principal fields of human knowledge, which the churches have fenced round with supernatural terrors, the Catechism breaks into, cherishing what is fair and showing what is deformed. The notes, of which there are many, both ancient and contemporary, are as striking as the text. The book is a cyclopedia of theology and reason in a nutshell.

HOW THE BIBLE WAS INVENTED.

A New Lecture.—Price, 10 cents.

This little pamphlet should be placed in the hands of every American citizen. The attention of preachers, theological students, and all church members should be called to the wonderful story of the Invention of the Holy Bible, which this lecture tells.

See that at least one orthodox neighbor of yours reads this lecture.

MORALITY WITHOUT A GOD.

With letter to Right Reverend Bishop Anderson, of Chicago. Price, 10 cents.

JESUS CHRIST A MYTH.

A New Book.—Price 25 Cents.

This book examines the evidence for the historical existence of Jesus, and finds it quite insufficient to prove that such a man as Jesus ever lived. It is a most important contribution to Modern Thought. It is prefaced by a letter to the Christian Clergy, and concluded by an answer to an editorial in one of the Chicago morning papers, attacking Mr. Mangasarian's position. Send your orders at once, as the first edition will soon be exhausted.

Germs of Mind in Plants.

By R. H. France, Translated by A. M. Simons.—Cloth, Illustrated, 50 Cents.

A cardinal point in the philosophical systems favored by the ruling classes is that the mind of man is something unique in the universe, governed by laws of its own that have no particular connection with physical laws. Modern science has proved that not only animals, but also plants receive impressions from the outside world and use data thus obtained to modify their movements for their own advantage, exactly as human beings do. These facts are told in this book in so charming and entertaining a style that the reader is carried along and does not realize until later the revolutionary significance of the facts.

HEROES AND HERO WORSHIP, AND THE HEROIC IN HISTORY.

By Thomas Carlyle.

A remarkable book by a remarkable man. Marked by terse strength and vigor, deep thought, philosophy and dramatic tensity of earnestness. A notable literary effort. A fine edition in cloth. Price 50 cents.

What All the World's a-Seeking.

RALPH WALDO TRINE.

Each is building his world from within; thought is the builder; for thoughts are forces—subtle, vital, irresistible, omnipotent,—and according as used do they bring power or impotence, peace or pain, success or failure.—From Title-page.

The above books are beautifully bound in gray green raised cloth, stamped in deep old green and gold, with gilt top. Price, $1.25. For sale at this office.

General Survey.

The Spiritualistic Field—Its Workers, Its Work, and General Progress, the World Over.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper. Please bear this in mind.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

THIS GENERAL SURVEY DEPARTMENT IS ONLY INTENDED TO CHRONICLE THE ENGAGEMENTS AND WORK OF SPEAKERS AND MEDIUMS. A REPORT OF WHAT THE VARIOUS SPEAKERS SAY WILL NOT BE PUBLISHED, AS WE HAVE NOT SPACE SUFFICIENT FOR THAT PURPOSE.

The Song Cards for sale at this office at $4 per hundred, are the help you need in society work.

J. E. Coble writes of a circle held at his home as follows: "Mrs. McCauley, our medium, was controlled the first time she was ever in a circle. We have a circle of five regular sitters, and occasionally a few outside ones, and get some beautiful lectures by Dr. Baker, through Mrs. McCauley. It might be of interest to some to know that the late Rev. Sam P. Jones also has made several very good talks to our circle, but has quite changed his method since passing over. Instead of pleading to people to 'come to Jesus' and be saved, he tells them to get to work and save themselves."

Mamie Young writes: "An attentive audience Sunday, both afternoon and evening, greeted the pastor, Rev. Lucy A. Hodge Koontz, of Divine Spiritual Church. Too much praise cannot be given this true medium for her hard work in trying to spread the spiritual truth. She has labored earnestly to establish her services in Hygeia Hall. Her psychometric tests from the platform are the best I ever had the pleasure to listen to. Her subject Sunday evening was 'The Prophets of Old,' which was interesting and truth-bearing, and cheered the hearts of those who were sad."

The Psychical Research Society of Rockford, Ill., reports that Mrs. Alice C. Barry's last address to the society, Nov. 25, was a series of rhetorical gems and verse which have rarely their equal on the spiritual rostrum. At the close of her address she crowned a beautiful little girl, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Servatius, with a wreath of flowers, and dedicated her to the service of the loved in the land of the leal. It was a beautiful service. She afterwards gave the right hand of fellowship, with cheering words, to new members, and the evening closed after spirit messages, all of which were recognized, and a unanimous vote of thanks to the speaker, and a kindly invitation to her to visit the society again at an early day.

C. Kirchner writes: "Mrs. C. Parkhurst, lecturer and medium, of Baltimore, is still in Chicago, and is open for engagements with Spiritual societies. She has just returned from Rockford, where she spoke for the Spiritual Science Society. Her address is 181 South Hoyne avenue, Chicago."

Dr. John Osenbaugh and Miss Rue Ailing, both of Chicago, were united in marriage by the Rev. Charles L. Breckon, on Thanksgiving Day, at the residence of the bride's parents. They will make their future home at No. 216 N. Humboldt street. The Doctor has been an active Spiritualist for a number of years past. He helped G. S. L. Jenifer and others to organize the original Illinois State Spiritualists Association. We congratulate the Doctor and his bride, on this change in life, and trust that their future may be exceptionally bright.

Della Platt writes from Battle Creek, Mich.: "The First Spiritualists Church of Battle Creek, Mich., has been highly favored in having Mrs. Anna L. Gillespie, one of the best lecturers in our ranks, as its pastor for the last three months. Our society has gained in numbers and interest at each lecture. She is a true worker for the cause in every way, and her words of wisdom and counsel have cheered and comforted many a sad soul. Besides her other duties she has given three fine entertainments, which netted the church a neat sum. She leaves this morning to join her husband in Pittsburg, and will take a much needed rest, but will be with us again in March and will receive a right royal welcome on her return. A farewell reception was tendered her last evening at the home of H. J. Wells. A host of friends assembled, and the evening was pleasantly spent in social converse and music, light refreshments being served, after which some substantial tokens of regard and esteem were presented her, and the guests departed, wishing her God-speed on her homeward journey. We have engaged Frank T. Ripley for December."

AS A GENERAL RULE, IN THIS OFFICE WE PAY NO ATTENTION TO ANONYMOUS COMMUNICATIONS. THE NAME AND ADDRESS OF THE WRITER SHOULD ACCOMPANY ALL MATTER, OF WHATEVER KIND, SENT TO THIS OFFICE.

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

ALWAYS GIVE YOUR FULL NAME AND ADDRESS WHEN SENDING NOTICES AND COMMUNICATIONS FOR PUBLICATION, OTHERWISE THEY WILL FIND THEIR WAY TO THE WASTE BASKET.

Boston Meetings.

The First Spiritualist Ladies' Aid Society meets in Appleton Hall, 9 Appleton street, Boston, Mass., every Friday.

The Ladies' Lyceum Union meets in Dwight Hall, 514 Tremont street, Boston, Mass., every Wednesday.

The Ladies' Industrial Union meets in Dwight Hall, 514 Tremont street, every Thursday.

Next Sunday the meeting at Grand Boulevard Hall, over which Mrs. Georgia G. Cooley presides, will consist of memorial services to the arisen friends. The subject for the discourse will be, "The efficacy of prayer for the arisen friends." Messages will also be given.

Lorenz Lerch writes from Boonville, Ind.: "We have had Mr. Charles J. Barnes of Warsaw, Ind., with us for the past ten days. He gave us some very fine trumpet seances. He is certainly a fine trumpet medium, a man of excellent character, and one of whom Spiritualists can be proud."

Services Sunday evening. Test seance Tuesday evening. Magnetic development Wednesday evening. Regular developing class Thursday evening, by Mrs. C. Kirchner, 181 South Hoyne avenue. All welcome.

John G. Dinkelbihler writes from Joplin, Mo.: "Dr. Marie Seeah is giving a series of lectures at the Odd Fellows' Hall, Seventh and Main streets. She is greeted with large attendance, showing her work is appreciated. She speaks under influence, and does not know at any time before lecturing what her subject will be. Last Sunday night it was 'Progression from the Cradle to the Grave'—a most interesting reminder to the parent and child as well. Her tests are spiritual, and all are pleased with her presence in Joplin."

Mrs. Lula Collins writes from Lawton, Okla.: "Rev. Alice Baker of Dallas, Texas, and state missionary of Oklahoma, has just completed a series of lectures and an organization of a Church of Spiritual Light in Lawton, O. T. Her meetings were attended with great success and many thanks are due her for her efforts in our behalf."

Rev. Nellie S. Baade writes from Detroit, Mich.: "I completed a two months' series of lectures in Pontiac, Mich., last Sunday evening to a crowded house. Considerable interest was manifested, though only a few Spiritualists in that city. All seemed greatly interested, and were sorry to see the meeting close, but other engagements compelled us to return to Detroit, hoping that our efforts in that city will later bring forth a harvest for good. We circulated your paper among the audience, and many saw a Spiritualist paper for the first time, but several expressed themselves as being well pleased with it, and said they would subscribe for it in the near future. With such a paper as The Progressive Thinker and the earnest efforts of our speakers and mediums, our cause is bound to succeed and great good be the result."

Correspondent writes: "The afternoon and evening meetings of the Independent Church of Truth, at Grand Boulevard Hall, over which Mrs. Georgia Gladeys Cooley presides as pastor, were a success in every way last Sunday. The afternoon exercises consisted of short talks by Lucinda B. Chandler, the the noble and earnest veteran worker for human reform, Dr. T. Wilkins and the pastor, Mrs. Cooley. Messages were given by Mrs. Zazelle, a young medium of the South Side, and were recognized, and by Mrs. Cooley, which were readily recognized. The sumptuous luncheon served in the evening, between meetings, was all that could be desired, especially Mrs. Dr. Cross' baked beans, and Mrs. Cooley's dainty salad, and other things in proportion, coffee and all, were soon devoured by the hungry crowd. In the evening the house was packed to hear the lecture by the pastor, on "How will the race question be settled?". It was good all the way through—handled without gloves—in Mrs. Cooley's usual logical and radical, as well as sympathetic way. Her messages were all clear-cut and appreciated by all who had the pleasure of receiving them."

Dr. J. H. Randall has been engaged to lecture Sunday evenings as follows: Sunday, Dec. 2, for the Church of Psychic Forces; also Sundays, Dec. 16, Dec. 23 and Dec. 30, Wilcox Hall, Forty-third street and Champlain avenue; Sunday, Dec. 9, the Golden Rule Spiritualist Society, O'Donnell's College Hall, Paulina street, near Washington Boulevard. He will make engagements for future dates and to attend funerals. Address 1058 Washington Boulevard.

Dr. S. F. Ayers writes from Ceres, Okla.: "I certainly should feel lost without The Progressive Thinker, and hope you may find success in driving out the fakes."

Correspondent writes: "An ordination service took place on Sunday evening, Nov. 11, at the regular services held by Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley, in her hall, corner of Grand Boulevard and 47th st, Chicago, on which occasion an official of the Illinois State Spiritualists Association conducted the ordination service, ordaining Mrs. Henrietta L. Lichtig of Chicago, to the ministry of Spiritualism. Mrs. Cooley followed with a charge to the newly ordained minister, in a most beautiful, eloquent and touching manner. Mrs. Lichtig having received a call to the pastorate of the Spiritualist Church at Galveston, Texas, accepted the call, and has taken up the work in that field of labor, followed by the kind wishes of her many friend."

DO NOT FORGET the Bazaar to be held by the BAND OF HARMONY, on Thursday, Dec. 6, in Hall 512 Masonic Temple, afternoon and evening. Lunches will be served from 11 to 1:30 and 5 to 7:30 p. m. Don't buy your Christmas presents anywhere else. Popular Church of the Soul ladies in charge of booths.

L. Wilcox writes: "A good audience assembled in the parlors at 3239 Indiana avenue, Sunday evening, Nov. 18, and enjoyed very interesting services. Mrs. Holmes' guides gave a very beautiful lecture followed by a few remarks from one of the brothers present. Our medium, Ada Zazelle, was listened to very earnestly by those always so anxious for spirit communion. All tests were thorough and fully recognized. Our social, Dec. 12, will be as interesting as our Cob Web Social last month."

Robert Schmus of the Spiritual Science Society of Rockford, Ill., speaks approvingly of the work of Mrs. M. A. Burland, of Chicago, while there. Her lectures were interesting and instructive—all that could be desired.

S. A. Huntington writes from Malden, Mass.: "Malden Progressive Spiritualist Society, Louise Hall 138 Pleasant street, Mrs. F. S. Sheriff president. At the Sunday services, Nov. 25, the president presided at both sessions, with Miss Mabel Carter at the piano. The afternoon circle was as usual very interesting. Mrs. Smith of Everett made a short address, after which she, Mr. Lyons and Mrs. Morton gave many fine messages. The evening meeting was very interesting and soul-inspiring, Mrs. Maud Litch of Lynn, being the speaker and message-bearer. She prefaced her work by reading a beautiful poem entitled 'The Angel of the Soul,' after which she chose for her theme, 'Spiritualism,' giving a very able and interesting address; then she devoted three-quarters of an hour to giving many beautiful messages, most of which were very convincing. Mrs. M. A. Bonney of Boston, will be the speaker and message-bearer, Dec. 2, 1906."

O. J. Brown, secretary, writes: "The West Grove Spiritualist Association, of Balbec, Jay county, Ind., enjoyed a real spiritual feast during the past week, awakening much enthusiasm in the cause of Spiritualism. The Spiritualist Quartet, composed of the Wattles family of Winchester, including the speaker, W. D. Wattles, finished their engagement with our society on Sunday night, Nov. 18. Prof. Wattles is a forceful speaker, a good reasoner whose arguments are plain and convincing. The music rendered by the quartet was effective and soul-inspiring, and we feel that much good will be derived from these meetings. We hope to have these four gifted workers with us again in the future. Will J. Erwood will be with us December 7, 8 and 9."

Eva L. Stewart writes: "The Memorial Services last Sunday night at the Hyde Park Occult Society for Mrs. Emma Guckert were very interesting and impressive, and participated in by singing, messages and speaking by the following: Dr. Marvin, Mr. Frazer, Mrs. Hazel McNeil and Mrs. Jennie Staner Adams. Mrs. Dr. Caird gave messages, which were very comforting to the friends; also Mr. Frazer. Mrs. O. B. Wilson was controlled by Mrs. Guckert and gave comforting messages to her brother and sister, and to different ones in the audience. Mrs. H. T. Stewart, who was with Mrs. Guckert during the last week of her sickness, spoke of her suffering and patience through it all. She realized that she would soon pass on, and her life had been such while here that she was ready and anxious to take up life on the other side. The remarks and messages of each one were of such a nature that it made one feel that to pass to the other side or to be born again was not to be dreaded, but to be a comfort and relief from many troubles on the earth plane. The society decorated the chair Mrs Guckert used to occupy, in white and yellow, and an autumn vine. Baskets of flowers were on stands on either side of chair. The flowers were distributed among her dearest friends after the services. Dr. C. S. Tisdale will be with us on December 9."

M. A. Thieman writes from Milwaukee, Wis.: "Under the auspices of the Truthseekers' Society of Milwaukee, an enthusiastic mass-meeting was held Sunday, Nov. 25 at Fraternity Hall. Mr. Max Genztke of the 'Searchers' Publishing Co., Chicago, delivered an address on 'Spiritualism and Socialism,' in his usual forcible manner, and set many to thinking. He was followed by Dr. G. von Langstorf, a regular contributor to the Lichtstrahlen, the weekly Spiritual German publication of the Searchers Publishing Co. The Doctor spoke on 'Harmony.' Mr. Fritz Obruck addressed the audience, admonishing the people to live Spiritualism; he ended his discourse with a well-rendered poem, illustrating the teachings of Spiritualism. The test mediums were Mrs. Anna Dodge and Mr. Franz Joseph, both of Chicago. Mrs. Dodge strongly appealed to the voting element of the audience, asking them to cast their ballots for such men who would give the constitutional rights of the unmolested religious worship to Spiritualists. She emphasized the fact that in many cities mediums were forbidden to practice their cult. This, she argued, kept Spiritualism in the background, in defiance of the Constitution, which is supposed to permit religious liberty to every individual of the Union. Mr. Joseph's work was well received also."

Mrs. M. A. Logue writes from Butte, Mont.: "Mr. Ernest Stephens of Columbus, Ohio has been here for the last month, doing a grand work, holding seances every night. No one can doubt the honesty and genuine work of Mr. Stephens. All receive messages from their spirit friends, recognizing the voices of their loved ones. He will visit all the important towns of Montana if called on to do so. He held a seance at the home of the writer; 21 persons were present and all received messages from their spirit friends. A well-known Catholic priest of Butte who passed out a short time ago, announced his name, reciting the litany in Latin, and then spoke in a loud voice to a friend. His face and form were seen by many. He said he knew of spirit return while here on earth, and regrets very much he did not teach it. He wanted this friend to tell all of his church that spirit return is a grand truth. Mr. Stephens will remain in Butte all of December. On his way East he will be pleased to visit other places in Montana. Address him at 101 S. Montana street, Butte, Montana."

A card with 10 cents entitles the holder to a chance on a hand-painted sofa pillow, and admission to the Christmas Bazaar to be given by the Golden Rule Pleasure Club, December 15, afternoon and evening, followed by dancing. O'Donnell's Hall, Paulina street, between Washington Boulevard and Park Avenue. Pillow donated by Cameron & Martin, 54 N. Ashland avenue. The person holding the lucky number will be entitled to an enlarged portrait of self, relative or friend. This same offer applies to the person selling the most chances.

Mrs. Marcia Hill writes: "Friends will please remember the Bazaar to be given by the ladies of the Band of Harmony, Dec. 6, 1906, in room 512 Masonic Temple. Come and secure your Christmas gifts; also your noon luncheon and supper. There will be some of Chicago's noted mediums who will give readings, and many other attractions that will enable you to enjoy yourself from 10 a. m. until 10 p. m. Come early, as we anticipate a big crowd, there being unusual preparations in progress."

F. L. Kershner writes from Wichita, Kans.: "The past six weeks have witnessed a wave of spirituality, the effect of which will be lasting. In October the society first had the privilege of listening to an address by Dr. Jose Montoya, late of Benares, India. His subject was 'In Tune With the Infinite.' Since then he has served the society twice. Sunday evening, Nov. 18, the Rev. Josephine A. Bover delivered an address on 'Progressive Spiritualism.' This gifted psychic received the encomiums of the entire audience. Prof. J. Edward Cook favored us with a lecture on 'Immortality,' on the evening of the 25th. He was well received. The society meets every Thursday night at the home of Mrs. Minnie Martindale, 407 S. Emporia avenue, for development and healing. A keen interest is felt here."

Mrs. C. L. Hatch writes from Boston, Mass.: 9 Appleton street, Appleton, Hall, Friday, Nov. 30, the First Spiritualist Ladies Aid Society held its meeting as usual, with the president, Mrs. M. E. A. Allbe in the chair. This was a Thanksgiving meeting and a truly good one. After a bountiful supper the meeting was called to order, when Mrs. Kate R. Stiles gave a very interesting discourse on 'Thanksgiving and Its Significance.' She gave also many messages which were highly appreciated. Mr. J. Graham spoke also on 'Thanksgiving.' His remarks were very interesting, and he closed with tests. Mrs. Shirley spoke briefly. Congregational singing interspersed, with Mrs. Mary Lovering at the piano. Next Friday we have an experience meeting, and Dec. 14, an apron sale. Be sure and attend."

The Herald of Los Angeles, Cal., has the following: "R. T. Hale, president of the Anti-Faker Society, claims to be a genuine Spiritualist, but is fighting hard against all fake propositions within its ranks. He said last night that he had been wielding the cudgel against fakers as president of the Anti-Faker society for about three months and had been successful in getting the promise of state legislative action to weed out the Spiritualistic fakers and to virtually get rid of them. His idea is to have laws passed in this state similar to those in other states to prevent the impostors obtaining licenses to conduct their nefarious practices."

W. J. Howes writes: "Central Spiritual Church holds service every Sunday evening at Trimble Hall, 1977 W. Madison street, corner 40th avenue, commencing at 7:30. We are pleased to say our meetings are increasing every Sunday. Last Sunday Mrs. Howes spoke of the dangers of dark circles and gave some light on the subject of spiritual development, which was listened to with much interest. We had with us Sister Hild, who is a very earnest, forceful speaker, and she also gave some very convincing messages. Mrs. Howes also gave messages, all recognized. Next Sunday, Dec. 9, we shall have with us Dr. Geo. B. Warne. Good music by Mae I. Calander."

Laura C. Morse writes: "With my added years—am near my 80th birthday—I am very thankful to be able to still read The Progressive Thinker, which has been the light of my life for years. Words are inadequate to give you a faint glimpse of the joy your paper brings me weekly. With your Gems of Thought, and the galaxy of advanced spirits who give us their knowledge of the other side of life, and the many able minds of earth who add lustre to the columns of your paper from week to week, I ask, as I have for years, where could the knowledge be found to fill this void, the loss of such a journal? When my name is no longer on the list of The Progressive Thinker, you may know I have passed on to the land of progression, where I hope to find much my heart sought that earth denied."

VERY REMARKABLE.

All Along the Line the Spirits Are Advancing and Manifesting Themselves to Those They Love.—Read the Following, a Letter Written to Mr. Daniel McDougal.

Dear Sir:—I get your name as president of the Psychic Research Society of Rockford, Ill., from The Progressive Thinker. I thought you would be interested in what I will relate: I am a country woman, have lived on a farm all my life; knew nothing of Spiritualism or its teachings until one year ago when my only son passed to spirit life, aged 36 years. He was a good man, kind and brilliant beyond the ordinary; but my sorrow has turned to gladness because he comes and writes me, and makes beautiful pictures of scenes in his spirit home. He brings his new made friends to me, who also write to me, as do my parents.

WHEN I LEAVE THE HOUSE I LAY A PENCIL ON A TABLET. WHEN I RETURN I FIND A MESSAGE. SHOULD THIS INTEREST YOU, AND YOU WOULD LIKE TO HEAR MORE, I WILL GLADLY WRITE AT GREATER LENGTH.

LIFE'S PROGRESSION.

"There is no death; there are no dead."

These words stand out on the cover of Edward C. Randall's new book. They are a challenge to the orthodox world, and through all of its pages runs this challenge to those whose ideas of God, of heaven, of hell, of a future life are based strictly upon the Bible. Yet Mr. Randall believes in life hereafter, based on positive knowledge given him from the living friends passed to the life beyond. Price $1.50. For sale at this office.

ETERNITY OF THE EARTH.

Electricity the Universal Force. By Daniel K. Tenney. A valuable book of 105 pages. Cloth, 75 cents.

To Spiritualists of Indian Territory.

I have a call from Madill, I. T., to lecture at that place, and I would like to hear from those interested in securing a speaker for other towns in the Territory. I will probably make a tour of the Indian Territory, and therefore would like a list of places where Spiritualists are to be found. Address,

MRS. CARRIE M. HINSDALE,
President Texas State Ass'n of Spiritualists, R. R. 5, Box 01, Fort Worth, Texas.

"'TWILL ALL BE OVER SOON."

A friend was suffering intense pain, as he was about to exchange worlds, when all of a sudden he seemed very happy. "What has made this change," asked his mother. He answered, "A heavenly voice whispered, 'Twill all be over soon.'" He passed away five minutes later.

What though the tears are in our eyes,
And grief lies heavy on the heart;
What though we gaze on darkening skies,
And palms are crossed to part.
God knows what's best for him and thee,
Let's thank Him for the precious boon,
Pass calmly toward Eternity,
"'Twill all be over soon."

There is no room for deeds unkind,
Dear fellow-traveler, as you roam,
Then clasp thy brother's hand in thine,
And walk in love toward Home.
The sun may leave this vale below,
Yet kiss the hills in softest noon,
Our trials, which God seems to know,
"Will all be over soon,"

O for the strength of soul to rise,
Above earth's direst, darkest ill!
With eyes fixed on the matchless prize,
Press on with mighty will!
If winter gives us dangerous ground,
Roses we know will bloom in June;
We'll cherish thoughts sweet and profound,
"'Twill all be over soon."

ARZELIA C. CLAY.

Grand Rapids, Mich.

SAN DIEGO, CALIFORNIA.

It has been some time since I have seen anything in print from Sunny San Diego," so I thought I must tell the friends that the First Society of San Diego is still alive.

Yesterday being the 47th Anniversary of our worthy president, Mr. C. A. Buss, the ladies of the society planned for him a little surprise party, to be held in our temple; and to say that he was most thoroughly surprised is putting it very mildly. It was planned that our good brother, Harry J. Moore, who has been with us nearly two weeks, was to dine at the Buss residence in the early evening, and then to persuade Brother Buss to go with him to his own room to look over some books and papers, and hold him there until a few minutes past eight o'clock, when Brother Moore suddenly thought of a book which he wished to get from the Temple Library, so asked Brother Buss to walk with him up past the Temple, which they found all dark with door locked, but on opening the door and stepping inside, the electric lights being all turned on at that instant, beheld something that made the eyes of one, at least, "bulge a little bit."

There was on the Lyceum floor a well arranged circle of 47 chairs, all occupied by smiling men and women, except the two left at the head of the circle, for the late arrivals, to which they were conducted and seated 'mid strains of sweetest music; thus forming a complete circle of 47 people beside the musicians, who were at their respective places by the piano, and the lyceum children, who were crowded together upon the rostrum.

Then there was music both vocal and instrumental, with speeches, recitations, presentation of presents, and more speeches, and as Brother Buss' case was diagnosed "entirely speechless," Brother Moore was necessarily compelled to act as his spokesman. Then came poems "thick and fast," followed by messages and communications. Refreshment and games finished up an evening of very great enjoyment at the temple, such as we always have when congregated there for enjoyment.

One unique feature of the evening was the numbering of the sitters in the circle who, while being numbered, were frequently admonished to be sure and remember each one his or her number, as there was to be a prize given to the lucky number; and when the box containing the prize was opened it was found to be number 47.

Now I wish to say to the many friends of Brother Harry J. Moore, that he came among us on November 1, with the intention of remaining some five or six months; and judging from the perpetual pleasant, happy smile, beaming from his open countenance, I am inclined to think we will keep him. I don't know as yet whether it is the happy sunshine smiles he meets with face to face in the Temple building, or our perpetual "San Diego sunshine," outside the building, that he appreciates most; may be both. At any rate, I think we will keep him long enough to be of great and lasting benefit to each and every individual who is broad enough to allow themselves to come out and hear him talk.

T. J. McFERON.

Secretary First Spiritualist Society of San Diego, Cal.

Dr. Bland's View of It.

I am impressed to give my view of the proposed National Department of Health. In doing so I speak, not as an individual member of the medical profession, but as an official representative of the "American Medical Union," a national organization of physicians of all medical sects.

This organization was formed in 1899, by physicians of high standing representing different schools, many of them being professors in medical colleges. It was organized for the express purpose of securing the repeal of the oppressive medical laws which exist in the various states of the Union, and which were prepared and lobbied through the legislatures by Allopathic state societies aided by a few recreant Homeopaths and Eclectics. These laws, although very oppressive, have not given the Allopaths the complete monopoly which they desired, hence, at the annual meeting of their national organization, "The American Medical Association," held in the summer of 1905, a great scheme was proposed and adopted, which, it it can be carried out, will give them a complete monopoly of the practice of medicine and of the guardianship of the public health. That scheme is to secure the passage, by congress, of an act creating a National Department of Health, with a cabinet officer at the head, and a dozen or more bureaus under him.

At its annual meeting, last January, "The American Medical Union" resolved to oppose the scheme by appointing its secretary chairman of the legislative committee and instructing him to visit Washington when congress assembles, and remain there during the session of 1906 and 1907, for the purpose of opposing, before the committees of congress, any bill in the interests of that scheme of the monopolists.

I have successfully in past years, appeared before committees of congress in opposition to medical monopoly bills, and I hope not to fail now. I invoke the earnest support of the liberal press and of the liberty-loving people. The liberal medical journals of all schools, and the health journals are with me in the fight.

The days of commercial trusts are numbered, may we not hope that the worst of all trusts, the medical trust, may soon be relegated to the limbo of the superstitious and despotic past.

A Chinaman's Experience.

To the Editor:—I wish to relate an experience Wong Woo, a Chinese cook, witnessed on the morning of November 7, last, at one o'clock a. m., or thereabouts, on his way home from the town of Menlo Park.

When three-quarters of a mile or so from the above town, he met a small boy dressed very neat and tidy, wearing flowers, and apparently looked like any other boy one would meet, except that he seemed to hop along the road rather than walk. Wong dismounted from his wheel to learn the reason why a boy so small and alone should be out so late, he received an answer, saying he was going to town to see his folks. After putting his hand to assist the boy, as he thought, on the wheel to take him part of the way back, the boy vanished out of sight with a rustling sound, as with a high wind. The moon was shining bright, and it being a straight oiled road, no object could he see for half a mile or more.

There is a Catholic cemetery half a mile from where the Chinaman met the boy, and he thinks that's where the devil came from. I told him the people buried in the grave yard would do him no harm.

Wong related another rather startling experience some yeears ago.

Being employed in the same capacity as cook, he had to walk four miles to the Chinese quarters after his work, or rather, should he wish to do so, that being the distance to Chinatown. Between the two, he had to cross a creek spanned by a bridge. On his way home on two occasions, as he approached the bridge he saw a man with a team, and asked for a ride, thinking it what looked to him, as though the man and team were going in the same direction. All at once everything vanished out of sight.

After relating his story to his employer, he was informed that the man and team with his wife, had drowned in the creek some years before.

Radical Treatment Needed.

A fountain cannot rise above its source, and may there be contaminated by injurious substances cast therein. Too many Spiritualists are content with its phenomena, relying on this and not upon, indeed without a thought of, the philosophical laws connected therewith, nor upon the laws that must govern and control all its phenomena.

Presenting an analogous condition to the churches, whose adherents worship too often its pomp and sociological opportunities, its tenets and its truths are ignored, thus, the masses have no respect for the truths and teachings or religious thought, and condemnation and ridicule for its adherents.

Spiritualism, to advance its purposes, must present proof to the skeptic (for by skepticism is truth unraveled), and the multitude whom we would enlist in humanity's cause must not only denounce counterfeits, but must with no uncertain act adopt such a remedy, that shall disarm the credulity of the mass of individuals who are too eager to absorb the miraculous or supernatural in these seances—to have later their belief cast to the winds, and thereafter these utter condemnation of anything with a flavor of Spiritualism.

What value are our glorious truths, if we do not defend them? We think that the only way to establish our value in these truths, is to throw around them such safeguards as we can invoke; this is radical treatment, we admit, more certain in its curative means than the attempt that is now being used of filtration.

Mrs. Pepper, of Brooklyn, will be secured, as also others, who pass the examination and secure a license, as the Society of Psychical Research will do, thus eliminating all fakes in the city of New York; these will then infest other cities and towns throughout the United States,

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Passed to spirit life, from Melrose, Alameda county, Cal., Oct. 29, 1906, Captain Daniel G. Jewett, a native of Maine, aged 76 years; formerly captain of Company I, Fourth Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry.

Captain Jewett was for many years a confirmed Spiritualist, the husband of Clara Mayo Steers at time of his death, and to whom he expressed his desire as to the ceremony and putting away of his body when its finality came, which wish was fully carried out. The funeral ceremony was conducted by Comrades Addie L. Ballou (formerly army nurse) and Captain Henry Harrison Brown, both of whom paid due credit to his patriotism and services to his country, as soldier and citizen. The casket was draped with the American flag, and banked with flowers, the offerings of many friends. The musical services were conducted by C. H. Wadsworth and Mrs. Norton. The body was taken for interment to his old home at Healdsburg, Sonoma county, where in Oak Mound Cemetery concluding ceremonies were conducted by Roanoke Circle No. 4, Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic, closing which Professor Smith rendered bugle selections, "Sleep, Comrade, Sleep," concluding with "Taps." ADDIE L. BALLOU.

Passed to spirit life, in Jamestown, N. Y., Nov. 7, 1906, Dr. Abraham James, aged 79 years. Burial was in Forest Hill Cemetery, Nov. 10, after service in chapel. He was a deep thinker and a Spiritualist for forty years. W. H. JAMES.

Passed to spirit life, October 11, Ruth Hill, wife of F. W. Micklewaite of Toronto, Canada, sister of Mrs. H. Correll and Mrs. W. H. Samme of Chicago; one who spent her life for others.

Passed to the higher life, Thursday, November 15, 1906, Louise Taylor Metzger, age 22, at the home of her parents, 949 West avenue, Buffalo, N. Y. She was a believer in the beautiful philosophy of Spiritualism, and a very talented musician, and together with her ever charming manners, made hosts of friends. She was the wife of Mr. Fred G. Metzger, a medical student at the University of Buffalo. The funeral service was conducted by Prof. Wm. Lockwood of Chicago, who is serving the First Spiritual Church. He gave a very able and sympathetic discourse, touched on her beautiful life, so young and musical, which has only changed to a higher consciousness.

Beautiful flowers, the gifts of her dear friends, made the scene one of beauty, long to be remembered.

"Sweet music she'll play on that beautiful shore,
Where chords that were broken will vibrate once more." COR.

FROM INDIA TO THE PLANET MARS.

A MOST REMARKABLE WORK.

Fascinating, Interesting and Instructive.

By Th. Flournoy, Professor of Psychology in the University of Geneva.

"This is an account of the experiments with the 'Geneva Medium,' Helene Smith. In her trances she lives the dual existence of an Indian princess and of an inhabitant of the planet Mars. Professor Flournoy and his fellow scientists have for more than five years experimented with these astounding physical phenomena."

This is a work of thrilling interest. It has excited great attention in this country and in Europe. Price, $1.50.

THE WOMAN'S BIBLE

PART I.--The Pentateuch.

Comments on Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers and Deuteronomy, by Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Lillie Devereux Blake, Rev. Phebe Hanaford, Clara Bewick Colby, Ellen Battelle Dietrick, Mrs. Louisa Southworth, Ursula N. Gestefeld, and Francis E Barr.

THE WOMAN'S BIBLE.--PART II.

Judges, Kings, Prophets and Apostles. Comments on the Old and New Testaments, from Joshua to Revelation. The comments are keen, bright, spicy, full of wit, the work of radical thinkers who are not ignorant of the higher criticism. There is not a dull page in either of these books, but each is a galaxy of the bright minds of the day and throws new light on the Bible teachings relating to woman. Price of each, paper, 50 cents.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

M. B.: Q. The Progressive Thinker quotes from Carroll D. Wright, Census Commissioner, that nothing can be done when persons have made misstatements to the census takers, after the returns are sent to Washington. Why cannot corrections be made where the returns are evidently untrue?

A. To correct such misstatements would be equivalent to taking the census anew, which would be the only method. The census probably is nearly correct as to the number of people, but in many details is unreliable or altogether misleading. For instance the number of Spiritualists in the United States is given at 46,000. It would be interesting to know on what basis this was obtained. The yearly statistics gathered by assessors are yet more erroneous and misleading. To illustrate: "How many acres of wheat had you?" asks the assessor of the farmer, who wishing to show a good hand, makes his estimate twenty-five while he had but twenty. "What was the yield?" The farmer again wishes to appear successful and replies twenty-five bushels to the acre, while he had only eighteen. Thus it goes all over a state, and the amount of wheat grown for the year, is at least one third less than the "statistics" show. Is it a marvel that "figures lie."

The following actually occurred, and shows how statistics for census reports are gathered, and how reliable they are. An assessor taking inventory of an old farmer's chattel's, asked: "How many hens have you?"

"I don't know; guess about forty."

"How many eggs did they lay?"

"I don't know; never kept count."

"Well, do you think they'd come up to the average of 250 a year?"

"Guess so."

"The assessor makes a rapid calculation. "Well, roundly that is eight hundred dozen; suppose you had all of that number?"

"Well, probably, with what we ate and what we sold, I guess so."

When the reports go in and are tabulated by "census experts," the newspapers headline the American hen, and the egg crop is represented as a veritable bonanza! Those who read do not know the guesses on which such statements rest, and how unreliable they are.

M. Biemitter: Q. Some time ago the Question Department expressed rather decided convictions in opposition to many scientists, and spirit messages that Mars is not inhabited by man. In the light thrown on the question by the researches of Prof. Lowell, wherein he has almost demonstrated the presence of wonderful executive beings on that planet, how do you maintain your position?

A. In carefully reading the statements of Prof. Lowell, I fail to discover wherein he has demonstrated that human beings reside on Mars, or even that it is capable of supporting a being like man. On the contrary he is unable to explain how the inhabitants live through the awful winter almost twice the length of ours. Perhaps they hibernate, or migrate like birds from north to south, and south to north with the seasons. The Martian year is twice as long as ours, the winter much colder, and the summer of extreme heat. Gravitation on Mars is about one-third (38-100ths) of what it is on the earth; or a man weighing 150 pounds, transported to Mars would weigh only fifty. There is water on the planet, but it is nearly used up, for the planet is growing old and depleted. Mars is a desert, being all land, while the younger Earth presents an ocean surface. But the time will come when the oceans will dry up, by the resolution of the waters into elements, and the earth become a barren desert.

Prof. Lowell proceeds, step by step with his theory. There is watery vapor enough during the long winter to alternately condense ice caps at the poles of Mars. About all the water on the planet is piled up in these ice caps. With the coming of spring this ice melts and flows from the poles. The inhabitants have learned to use this precious fluid for irrigation, and the "canals" about which there has been so much dispute, are constructed to convey the water to irrigate the plains. They prove the presence of beings "immeasurably" further advanced than man. They are not necessarily men, for the conditions prevailing on Mars, Prof. Lowell declares, makes it impossible for man to exist there.

Now, how is it proven that there is one drop of water on Mars, or the earth, more or less than a million years ago? It cannot be proven, for it is only a fancy. Chemical processes are decomposing water continually, while other processes are manifesting it. It is presumable, comparing other processes in nature, that these two are balanced. Yet the reasoning and conclusions are founded on this fancy. It is because the irrigation facilities afforded by the melting of the Martian polar ice caps, have been taken advantage of, by excavating "canals," that it is certain intelligent beings, greatly superior to man exist there. The so-called canals radiate in straight lines unlike natural fissures and follow. What little water remains is conveyed in the ramifying canals for growing food. Prof. Lowell thinks that if only a mile wide a canal might be visible through the best telescopes. These canals to be seen must be at least a mile wide. They ramify, intercross, and cover the face of the planet apparently following great circles. What mighty beings these Martians must be, to excavate thousands and thousands of miles of these mile-wide ditches! Some of the larger must be two or three miles in width. The surface of Mars is almost a level plain. Being smaller than the earth, and of less potential energy, its surface was not thrown up in mountain ridges or depressed for ocean valleys. Hence the excavation of these canals would not be difficult. The point, however, is that canals one or two miles wide, for the conveyance of the scant water supply, running in every direction across the planet, would be superfluous. It would be like putting conduits six feet in diameter to carry the water from the roof of a house, when three inches would be fully sufficient.

If such water ways are required to convey the water, there cannot be a scarcity. The intelligence of the Martians is not shown by these canals, several times larger than needed. The only possible reason that can be assigned for their size is to make them visible to earth. If artificial, any one of these canals makes the greatest engineering feats of man appear as boys' play. Think of a channel a mile wide from New York to San Francisco, from San Francisco to Portland, thence to Dawson, thence to Moscow, thence to Berlin, Rome, Alexandria, to Cape Town, thence to Valparaiso, thence to New Orleans, thence to New York, thence to Northern Hudson's Bay, thence to Chicago, Indianapolis, Pittsburg and Washington, and this only the beginning! The absurdity of referring them to artifice is as great as to suppose the planet itself an artificial creation. It is absolutely impossible for any telescope to reveal anything necessarily as small in size as the work of man, from the distance of Mars. Anything circular or square must be a mile in diameter to be visible as a speck. Prof. Lowell has pointed out that in case of long lines the diameter must be about a mile to be visible. It follows that everything that has been written about the inhabitability of Mars is fanciful and in conflict with known facts.

SPIRITUALISM IN ST. LOUIS

Some Misapprehensions Corrected and Real Facts Noted.

In The Progressive Thinker, number 886 I read under the heading "An Imbortant Lecture," an article from the able pen of William John Ward of Mount Pleasant Park, Clinton, Iowa. It has never been my privilege to meet Brother Ward, but his article is not only an able one, but as the heading states, along a very important line. I can heartily endorse the general trend of his article, but he has made one misstatement and I believe will be broad enough to permit me (in the interest of truth and fairness) to correct it. I refer to this statement: "Take St. Louis, for example, In that city, taking in East St. Louis, there are enough people interested to form a nucleus of a central church, or perhaps two. But what have we got there? Numerous little classes, semi-private, each working out its own little hobby, wriggling through some psychic gymnastics and listening with painful awe to a pretended Pythagoras at one moment and an American Indian the next."

The statement made by the brother in answering his own question, as to what we have here in the way of societies, "only numerous little classes semi-private, etc.," is not only wrong, but shows his ignorance as to the state of affairs here in St. Louis. To prove this to the brother, I will say that we have 7 societies, not semi-private classes, but flourishing societies holding charters from the State Association, who hold regular meetings at well appointed halls every Sunday, where they wriggle through no psychic gymnastics under the control of a pretended Pythagoras or American Indian, but give spiritual consolation to the hungry in a manner that appeals to the heads and hearts of the intelligent.

The Psychics affiliated with organized Spiritualism here in St. Louis stand as a unit in favor of a higher, cleaner and more intelligent exposition of both our philosophy and phenomena. For Brother Ward's benefit I will cite him:

Temple of Spiritualism, 3015 Pine St., Rev. T. Grimshaw, pastor; First German Spiritualist Society, Debsecti's Hall, corner McNair and Lynch Sts., Hev. K. F. Hary, pastor; Spiritual Research Society, Rev. E. B. Price, Hall 3331 S. 7th St.; Advanced Spiritualist Society, Rev. Laura M. Jones, pastor, Shuettes' Hall, 19th and Wright Sts.; Carondolet Spiritualist Society, Rev. Mrs. Hary, pastor, Judd's Hall, 7801 S. Broadway; Central Spiritualist Society, Pythian Hall, 3137 Pine St., speaker, J. B. Bates, medium, Mrs. Nelson Armstead.

These societies are all doing a good work for the cause and are well attended by an intelligent class of people.

When, on November 4, at Sister Hary's society, I addressed an audience of 300 people and declared that Spiritualism per se did not stand for or teach soul mate gush and rot of that character, silly, ignorant sensitives controlled by influences as silly, as ignorant as themselves, to the contrary, notwithstanding, the applause both from the rostrum (filled with my co-workers) and the audience, showed that they endorsed the statement.

When the Luster murder case was on and the daily press published the statement that the teachings of Spiritualism on soul mates, etc., were responsible for the murder, I prepared a statement and submitted it to the state board for approval. It was unanimously endorsed as being the sentiments of the entire board, and was sent as the official statement of the State Association to the press, who trimmed it (as per enclosed entire clippings also the original letter).

I am citing these facts to show Brother Ward that the trend of thought here in St. Louis is not as low as he seems to think. The State Association is composed (largely) of the pastors of the different societies and members, and I have yet to see them opposed to any move that would tend to elevate the cause here in St. Louis.

Now as to the brother's idea of having two central churches, one under the management of Prof. Peck. I wish that there could not only be two, but 20, and one of the best of the twenty was under the management of that able brother, whom I am proud to call friend. But truth compels me to state that not two years ago there was two central societies such as the brother advises; one under Prof. Peck, which is now a society almost in name only, and one under Brother T. Grimshaw, which still flourishes. But in the most flourishing time of the Unity Society (which was when Brother Peck was in charge) they were never affiliated with organized Spiritualism here in Missouri; but looked out for their own personal interests first, last and all the time.

You speak of the right system of organization; can we get it that way? Even the other central society (The Temple) only affiliated with the state association within the past year. It is but justice to say that both Mr. Peck and Mr. Grimshaw (as individual Spiritualists) rendered the state association in the recent trouble with the Stewarts all the assistance in their power. This idea that the Brother advocates will never prove a success. You cannot put an A, B, C Scholar in the high school until he has worked by diligent study up to that plane of education. It is easy to see at a distance what others should do to succeed; a critic's position is the easiest one of all.

I have given time, thought and labor to the upliftment of the cause here at St. Louis, without money or price, but in heaven's name let those who refuse to co-operate either stop knocking or take off their coats and go to work. I shall be glad to take a breathing spell and attend to my own private affairs.

If I were inclined to get back at our good brother, of Clinton, Iowa, and take hearsay rumors regarding affairs at Clinton, I might retort that a sample dose of your own medicine at home would prove its efficacy.

We are doing very nicely, thank you, and will work out our own salvation. Our leaders are elected by a majority of the Spiritualists, and are not self-appointed and will never be.

PAUL McARTHUR.

Reincarnation.

Life demands expression through matter; therefore our loved ones in spirit life will descend to the gestating condition and develop a new material body; this change from spirit to matter and from matter to spirit to continue forever.

This is the sum and substance of the argument advanced on reincarnation by Jessie S. Pettit Flint in The Progressive Thinker No. 886.

I fail to discover anything to sustain such a theory by looking "directly at the earth" or in any other direction.

Life is developed from the germ; in no other way can life obtain expression through matter. "One cycle of experience" in the material and pass on to something higher, is the unchangeable law of Nature. I will not ask our friend to explain how a mature spirit enters the foetus, at what time it occurs, or what becomes of the life already there. If she will cite me to a similar process in any department of nature it will open the way for a more favorable consideration of the subject. When the garments of the spirit "will have become worn out" our loved ones will pass on to a higher condition and thus fulfill the universal law of Evolution.

THEOSOPHY AND SPIRITUALISM.

Mrs. Tingley Insults Spiritualists.

The following letter was sent to the San Diego Union, but that paper refused to give it publicity:

A Slur on Spiritualism.

I was very much surprised to see a remark by Mrs. Tingley in her Tuesday evening address, wherein she announced that she refused the use of the Isis Theatre to so-called Theosophists, hypnotists, Spiritualists, and prize fight pictures.

As a Spiritualist of years' standing, and a diligent student of Theosophy as well, I beg to say that I consider Mrs. Tingley's gratuitous insult to Spiritualists sounds very small indeed and in very bad taste.

Spiritualism has existed in America since 1849, twenty years before Madame Blavatsky appeared on the scene, and yet Theosophists are never tired of telling us that she alone, through the Theosophical movement, was the one who just came in time to stem the tide of materialism that threatened to destroy all belief in God and a future life.

Many people think that Spiritualism has to do solely with table rapping and fortune-telling and materialization seances, whereas the phenomena of Spiritualism are only one branch of the subject. They are necessary indeed in order to prove that the so-called dead really continue to exist, and to the mass of mankind one spirit message through a medium from a departed relative, is more convincing proof of a life after death than all the philosophical discussion and papers read by the students of Point Loma, at the Isis Theatre, can ever be.

When this evidence is once obtained, the next question is, "What have the spirits to tell us about the next world, and its bearing on our lives here?

This side of Spiritualism is treated in a score of extremely interesting volumes containing the philosophy of Spiritualism, inspired by spirits through writing mediums, inspirational or trance speakers.

Now, sir, what makes Mrs. Tingley's slur against Spiritualism all the more inexcusable is the fact that neither she nor any other Theosophist in the world to-day can know one iota about the life after death except what has been communicated to them through their own mediums, for Madam Blavatsky was nothing else than a high-class inspirational writer, and Mrs. Tingley has herself been one, and is probably now an inspirational speaker.

So with the writers on Spiritualism Andrew Jackson Davis, an uneducated cobbler apprentice, was put into a trance by a mesmerist in 1848, and for 13 weeks every day, delivered a series of lectures entitled, "The Divine Revelations of Nature," a work of stupendous importance to mankind.

And yet, not one Theosophist out of one hundred has ever read a line of this marvelous work that appeared thirty years before Madam Blavatsky.

Nevertheless, they never neglect an opportunity to rail at Spiritualism whilst they prate about Universal Brotherhood and toleration and truth.

What makes their attitude still more incomprehensible, unless it proceeds from jealousy and egotism, is that the teachings of Spiritualism so far as the lesson to mankind is concerned, are entirely in accord with the main teachings of Theosophy—some even accept the reincarnation doctrine.

ORDINATION PAPERS.

Alleged to Have Been Sold for Ten Dollars Each.

Inquiries reaching the undersigned official indicate that "August Ries" as President of "The Universal Spiritual Association," is trying to sell Spiritualist mediums of St. Louis, ordination by that body for the sum of ten dollars.

This man was formerly known as John A. Ries. Why he should discard the first section of his Christian name must be left to surmise. Could it have been due to forgetfulness, inaccessibility to the family genealogy, or for a business disguise of personality? Under the full cognomen he travelled with "Lady Ries," until her death in Denver, some time ago.

He is alleged to have offered the same kind of papers to Chicago mediums for only one dollar and promised half rates therefor on the railroads.

Representatives of the R. R. Associations with headquarters in Chicago, have refused to grant him or his Association, any kind of official recognition, so that its ordination does not secure for holders thereof clergymen's travelling rates.

Soliciting candidates for ordination, or peddling papers constituting anyone having the price a "Minister," is not calculated to command respect for any system, sect or denomination, while it savors of graft, and the methods of bogus medical diploma mills.

Ries has never had recognition upon the platforms of the Chicago Spiritualists' League, The Illinois State Spiritualists' Association, nor those of Chicago's most representative Spiritualist societies

Enough is known of his work to lead me to advise repeated and patient investigation under most rigid test conditions of whatever he may offer as the Physical Phenomena of mediumship through his own personality.

Excellent Results Arising From the Home Circle.

To the Editor:—I thought it might interest some of the readers of The Progressive Thinker to know of the success we are having at a home circle we have formed here. We have been running for about five months, and for that time I think we have had splendid success. Remember, we have no professionals among us to help us—nothing but a few neighbors we gather together every Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock sharp, and we aim to get through inside of an hour; but we are getting such grand results, we sometimes run over that time.

So far we have got rappings of different kinds, moving of pictures on the wall; trumpet manifestations (not speaking), independent and automatic writing, and the grandest lights I ever saw; I don't even except those coming through professional mediums.

I have made up my mind to one thing, the way to convince the skeptic is in the home circle where everybody knows what we get can be relied on. Our principal control is Prof. Hodgson (so we are informed), who is forming a strong band over there, and we expect something grand will come from it.

We are now working for materialization, which we are promised in time we will get trumpet speaking.

What a grand thing this is, where one can communicate with spirit friends who have passed to the other side. My advice to all is, form your home circles; then when you get any demonstrations you can rely on them. Ten times more satisfactory than the other way. From time to time I will let the readers of The Progressive Thinker know how we progress.

PLEASE AID US IN THIS DIRECTION, BY SENDING IN NOT ONLY YOUR SUBSCRIPTION, BUT AN ADDITIONAL SUBSCRIBER. THE WINTER EVENINGS ARE COMING, AND EVERY SPIRITUALIST SHOULD HAVE THE PAPER.

SOWING AND REAPING.

A Bible Text That All Spiritualists Believe.

"Be not deceived, God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall be also reap."—Galatians vi:7.

For nearly two thousand years the Christian church has been saying, "You must believe every word in God's inspired book, or be eternally damned," and at the same time have in their teaching constantly given the lie to the text I have quoted.

They tell us, "You may spend a lifetime in sin, and at the last, even on your death bed, if you sincerely repent and ask God, for Christ's sake, to forgive you, he will, and an eternity of happiness will be your reward."

What would be said of a farmer who industriously sowed nettles in his fields, and at the last, away down in one little corner, sowed a handful of wheat, and who, when the time for reaping came, went forth confidntly expecting to reap from all his fields, a full harvest of the choicest grain?

Would not his neighbors cry out, "Why, you fool! do you expect to reap wheat when you have only sown weeds?"

Do you expect God is going to send you a harvest of goodness from the seeds of sin you have sown?

I know a good orthodox lady whom I have frequently heard declare that she believed every word in the Bible. I said to her one day, "There is one passage in the Bible that I believe implicitly and which I am sure you do not," and quoted to her my text.

She said, "Why, I believe that; of course I do."

"Well, then," I replied, "you believe differently than any other Christian I ever met, for they all believed that one could spend a lifetime sowing the seeds of sin, and if they spent only the last day of their life in sincere repentance, they would reap an eternity of bliss." She could not make me any answer whatever.

Oh! let us not deceive ourselves. Spiritualism teaches a sterner, harder lesson than that. We may not hope that any wrong act of ours, however small or secret, will be overlooked. Every wrong deed brings its own punishment, and for everyone we ourselves, must atone. No bleeding, mangled Christ can bear our punishment for us.

Oh, my friends, look well to what you are sowing; let me entreat you not to sow seeds that will bring you a harvest of bitter regrets and tears.

Surely man's allotted three-score years and ten are long enough to suffer in, and the best we can do, more or less sorrow and suffering will come to us here.

Without spreading it out into eternity, think of the needless waste of opportunity, of the time that must be spent over there repairing the wrong we have done here, which might—nay, should—be spent in learning real happiness, and in teaching those we leave behind us in the ways of truth and right. For methinks not the least of our punishment will lie in seeing our loved ones, perhaps our own little ones, suffering for the sins we have committed. Not only sins against the physical body, but against the spiritual as well.

You fathers, who have debased your manhood with strong drink, and who look back from the other shore after you have grown into purer conditions, and see your son, whom you left a bright, promising little fellow, staggering along in the footsteps you left for him, do you not think it will add to your harvest of bitterness to think that this, too, is a part of the harvest of your sowing?

For we must remember that not only must we reap our full crop of nettles, but some of the vile seeds will inevitably be scattered to curse the harvest of those who sow the fields after us.

Therefore, "Be not deceived, God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth must he also reap."

The field of the world lies waiting,
For the scattered seeds of grain,
That shall quicken and grow to the harvest
Through the summer sun and rain.
What are you sowing, my brother,
My sister, from day to day?
And what are the fruits you will gather
From the seeds you are casting away?
For as surely as clouds bring showers,
As surely as spring brings May,
The harvest will follow the seed-time,
As the night succeeds the day.

Are you scattering seeds of hatred,
That will blossom into strife?
Yielding dark fruits of sorrow,
Making a wreck of life?
Or, are they seeds of kindness,
Which fall from your willing hands,
That shall bring forth fruits of gladness
To brighten and bless the land?
For whether we scatter blessings,
Or curses along the way,
The harvest must follow the seed-time,
As surely as night follows day.

ABOUT RELIGION.

Wants Deific Personalities Injected Into Religion.

In an editorial of this paper, of Nov. 17, 1906, it is given out that "we have lately discovered that we have religion," and in fact the tone of the acknowledgment indicates that we may have had it for a long time, but like the Irishman's decapitated turtle, "though dead, yet not sinsible of it." Perhaps the source of the final discovery of this peculiar condition, the Century Dictionary, has a system of abridgment peculiarly its own, which it must have, if it defines "Religion as a sense of obligation, conscientiousness, duty," etc., confining it subjectively, and ignoring all objective relationships.

I find, on consulting Worcester, and also Encyclopedic Dictionary, that there is an objective consideration, and that that consideration is God, Jehovah, Brahma, Allah, Osiris, Isis, Pan, Ra, or any other deific or deified personality. Not obligation, duty, etc., in general, but obligation duty, etc., in particular.

I quote the following synonyms from Worcester: "Religion signifies both a system of faith and worship, and duty to God; Piety, both duty to parents and duty to God; Devotion, piety as applied especially to Divine worship, etc.

A sense of obligation, duty, etc., to a God, is religion: A sense of obligation, duty, etc., to a fellow-man, is, in its various aspects, fraternity, love, charity, etc.

In the abstract, religion evidently is simply a mento-physical response to the impulse of the organ of reverence (re-veor, again to fear), and culminates in the choice or creation of an objective individuality, either real or ideal; before whom or which, the subject presumes or assumes to prostrate or present himself in timid, humiliating prayers or pleadings for "A Square Deal," or a little more, either in the subaltern or sovereign transactions of life.

Therefore, duty or obligation felt for, or performed to, our fellows is not religion; it is, I repeat, in its various aspects, charity, justice, love, etc.; all of themselves, cardinal impulses of the moral faculties; the golden bands that unite all cotemporaneous mortals in a fruitful bond of fellowship.

Charity gives to the needy a tangible something, a something that supplies a vital necessity, or the dollar that will procure it.

Religion gives a hollow prayer to some assumed personality, some ideal burden-bearer, to do the charity act, and saves his precious dollar.

Atheistic charity gives a loaf to him who starves. Theistic piety gives a loud-mouthed order to his servant, God, to shower universal blessings on all. The effect of the one is altruistic and good and eternal; that of the other is egoistic, bad, and dies with the sound of the voice that directs it.

In the ethical world, fraternity emanates from human love, and vibrates uncommanded, undirected from soul to soul, from man to man.

Piety emanates from human religion and vibrates in response to a threat and command, without reciprocity from master to man.

In the social world, patriotism constitutes love, fear and obedience of man for his parent country. Religion constitutes love, fear and obedience of man for his offspring, God. Spiritualism constitutes love, fear and obedience of man for his brother man.

King and country is the realism of man's career. God and heaven is the idealism of man's career. Friend and home is the Spiritualism of man's career.

Now, Mr. Editor, while no doubt all atheistic readers of your splendid paper are satisfied that you have a large sense of duty, conscientiousness, obligation, etc., to your fellow mortals, yet both common usage and our sense of judgment insists that those faculties are not religious ones, unless their objectives are deific personalities.

A Strange Circumstance.

They Heard Muffled Footsteps Walking About the Room, and the Dog Followed the Steps.

Whilst spending an evening with a friend a few weeks ago, she gave me an account of a strange circumstance which occurred two years ago in a large mansion on Peachtree street, in which she and her husband together with her husband's mother were living at the time, her father-in-law having died some years before. This Mr. and Mrs. Stanley had no children, but were much attached to a large, beautiful Irish setter dog whom they had purchased when a pup six years ago. He had been brought up in such an atmosphere of comfort, affection and kindness, that his intelligence was wonderful. I myself have told him to do certain things and he has obeyed me or vice versa, he would do as he was told. Then there was employed two negro servants who as usual went home to sleep every night. Mr. S. was in the habit of going away for a week at a time and Mrs. S. and her mother-in-law were not afraid to stay in the house by themselves with no one but the dog at nights, Mrs. S. junior being young, healthy and not at all troubled by nervous fears.

For the sake of convenience to herself Mrs. S., senior, slept in a room on the ground floor whilst Mr. and Mrs. S. occupied a large bedroom upstairs. This room led into another large room the fireplace of which was right opposite their bed. They had a fire at night in this room, preferring it to a fire in their own room and they could see the fire from their bed. By this fire slept the dog on a quilt, tied to a staple in the wall to prevent him roaming about the rooms at night, and also to give him the warmth all sleek-haired dogs seem to crave.

On the night this manifestation occurred, Mr. S. being away up North, Mrs. S. had gone up to bed after leaving Mrs. S. senior in bed downstairs. She first tied the dog and left him settled on his quilt, then went to bed herself. She felt well as usual, and quite untroubled by any fear or apprehension. She turned the gas low as usual but not so low but that she could see the time by a small clock which was on a small table by the bedside. She fell asleep and then awoke suddenly. She looked at the little clock and saw it was then ten minutes to one. As she lay there she could see the bright light of the fire, and the dog asleep on his quilt. She suddenly heard footsteps; muffled footsteps—she said the steps of a heavy person walking about in his stocking feet. She could not see anything, but the footsteps were heavy, distinct, and then seemed to go from the bottom of her bed to the fire-place opposite, quite a distance in the long rooms.

Then the dog began to whine and howl, making a noise as if something excited and distressed him. She was then herself more surprised and excited than she was frightened, but she at once got up and went to the dog. Never before had she seen him in such a condition of excitement, and he made an effort to get away from the ribbon which tied him. She untied it and the animal commenced to follow the footsteps backwards and forwards all the time making a low noise something between a growl and a whine and occasionally stopping to look at her as if asking for an explanation.

Then, Mrs. Stanley said, she became frightened and unnerved. It was so uncanny, nothing to be seen at all, but the footsteps went up and down and the dog following. She stood there in her nightdress and clasping her hands, said out aloud, "Oh, God, Thou knowest that I have never knowingly hurt or injured any creature." She prayed from her heart for protection from all the powers of evil and also for courage to bear the manifestation. She said the sound of her own voice had a calming influence, the footsteps got fainter. She felt less nervous and then drew the dog by his collar to her. She put a hand upon his brown satiny head and to her amazement found it was wet. She said to him, "Don't be scared, doggie darling; nothing will harm us. God is watching over us." He then got quieter and lay down for he is so accustomed to be talked to as if he were an intelligent child. All noise ceased and Mrs. S. went to bed, but said nothing to her mother-in-law the next morning for obvious reasons. The next day Mr. Stanley returned unexpectedly. Upon retiring that night his wife told him the whole affair. It made a great impression upon her, which she says will remain with her as long as she lives. But while she had been simply indifferent to the occult and supernatural, her husband is quite aggressively opposed to it. He said nobody but a fool could imagine such an occurrence, with various other uncomplimentary things and finally said he did not want to hear any more about such "trash."

No more was said on the subject that night, but on the following night when they went to bed Mrs. S. found herself unable to sleep, though Mr. S. went to sleep at once. At ten minutes to one came again the sound of the muffled footsteps. Again the dog began to howl and whine, but did not manifest the excitement he had shown before. She called out to him not to be frightened as there was nothing to be afraid of. Then suddenly as if he had been shot, Mr. S. sat up in the bed and striking his hands together, exclaimed, "My God! There is someone walking about." He was about to get up, but she restrained him saying it was the footsteps she had told him about. They both lay quietly listening. Now and again came a protest from the dog, but he made no effort to get up and soon the footsteps died away as before. Then Mr. S. said, "I know those steps; my father who was like myself, a large, heavily built man, used to walk about in his stocking feet when in his bedroom, complaining of his feet hurting him. Many a time I have heard him."

What do you think it means? No more slurs and sneers as before, on the subject, but he was plainly frightened, and she could not feel sorry for him. She thought he deserved a scare. She said she thought it must be meant as a warning to one of the three then living in the house.

The next morning at breakfast the old lady asked her son if he had been walking about his room in the night, as she had heard someone in their stocking feet walking about the room, and also thought she had heard someone walking about two nights previously, but supposed she must have imagined that. The subject was ignored and then dropped. The old lady was then in her usual health, which was fairly good for an old person. She became ill quite suddenly five days after this occurrence and on the night of the tenth day she died unexpectedly at exactly ten minutes to one in the morning when the footsteps were first heard.

Mr. S. still objects strongly to any conversation on the supernatural, but no longer sneers at it. I give you the story as it was given to me and the little lady told it in a most impressive manner. She and her husband are people of wealth and social standing, and there is no possible reason they should make up such a thing. The house was burnt down since, and has been rebuilt, but they have not occupied it and are traveling at present. The dog I know well and I have had many proofs of his intelligence and understanding.

THE PATHWAY OF THE HUMAN SPIRIT.

Or, the Pathway of the Spirit Traced.

By J. M. Peebles, M. D., M. A.

Did it pre-exist and does it reincarnate again into mortal life? When did it enter the body? What is its form—how does it relate to the soul body? Can it leave the human body and return again? Can it live in and control another mortal body? These questions and many others are asked and answered by the Doctor in this, his latest book, of two hundred pages. Price 75 cents; postage, 12 cents.

"The Spiritual Significance, or, Death as an Event in Life." By Lilian Whiting. One of Miss Whiting's most suggestive, intensely interesting, spiritual books. It is laden with rich, thoughtful spirituality. Price $1.

MAN'S FAREWELL TO LOW WAGES

GOOD-BY FOREVER TO HARD WORK—LITTLE PAY—HARD TIMES—JOB HUNTING! YOU CAN DWN AND BOSS THIS MONEY-MAKING BUSINESS! GET MONEY AS THIS MAN DID! CHANGE FROM WAGE EARNER TO WAGE PAYER--FROM SERVING OTHERS TO COMMANDING OTHERS

As it Would Be Told at Home.

You may well rejoice, my wife, over our good fortune in getting for almost nothing a business which made money the very first day and has grown better all along until now after a few weeks the daily profits run from $2.00 to $12.00. You have just counted today's receipts and seem surprised that they amount to $15.00 plus some cents, but I have good reason to expect even larger returns as time goes on. Of that $15.00 you must take out about $2.00 for cost of material and the $12.00 remaining is profit. So business gets better as it gets older. I need have no worry about the future, because there remains many dollars' worth of unfinished work upon which I can calculate as in the past about 95c profit on the dollar and more orders coming in all the time. My trouble has not been the want of orders, but facilities to fill orders as fast as my many customers would like, and to make matters better have engaged a boy to help in the shop, including an extra solicitor.

It has kept me hustling this far to take care of family customers whose orders range from $2.00 to $10.00, but increased facilities will enable me to get business in even larger quantities from hotels, restaurants and public institutions, manufacturers and retail stores, there being scarcely any person in business or out who does not at all times have urgent need for my services. I never thought it possible to like This with only a few dollars, for almost every business worth having requires several thousand dollars to begin with, and I was not in that class, in fact, we can both recall with sad regret the days of no work—no wages—debts piling up—nearly everyone and everything combined to keep me down. Then my stock of sickness—no work—laid up—laid off—almost laid away—nothing coming in—expenses going on—doctor bills and what not, trouble, trouble, trouble, but that's the common hardship of every man who sells his time to others—hard work—long hours—little saving—enriching those who hoop, but never himself. Verily, my good wife we know from experience that it's mighty inconvenient to be poor, and now after years of hard labor here and there and almost everywhere—from factory hand to office clerk—teaching school or selling goods—town and city trades—now and then the farm—we find ourselves in prosperous circumstances, owning a pleasant business which promises to pay from $1800 TO $2500 ANNUALLY.

Goodness knows, we might still be slaving for a bare existence if this opportunity hadn't come as a God-send, but we know too well the need of money to get foolish or spoiled by sudden prosperity. I am happy to think that our days of self-denial and privations are over, that you and the children can have many things in the future which you craved but alas! didn't have the money to buy. You can dress better, visit more, work less, buy new things for the house and give the children a better education. What a blessing it is to have money coming in all the time, and how different the people treat a successful man.

It's really wonderful how people took to my business from the very start, just seemed that everyone had something for me to do—eager to have it done—a cordial welcome everywhere and people came from miles around—almost a dollar cleared every time a dollar taken in. You remember my starting here at home—set off one room which was soon filled with a great assortment of merchandise—some gold, some silver—big and little heaps—how things glistened when the sun came through—then the change to larger quarters owing to increased business with profits growing. It did my heart good to receive such generous encouragement from the people everywhere, for I can't forget my ups and downs and my hard knocks—never a boost until this thing happened.

GOODS WERE GOING OUT—MONEY COMING IN—

Prosperity.

The people certainly looked kindly upon home industry, and because my business was conducted thoroughly in their very midst a feeling of confidence was immediately established. My work has always been well done and I do not fear to meet the same customer twice even ten years from now. I have never been the kind to deceive anyone and would not care to bring that disgrace upon my children even though success was the reward.

Yes, people do wonder at my sudden rise in the world, but there is nothing remarkable in my performance, simply a case of supplying something which the people did not have but wanted awful bad—never had before—it's a regular business in some large office, but just as well suited to town and country places as my own success proved. My success has not been due to influence, business training, special schooling or technical knowledge, but to human endeavor, faithful work and earnest purpose. Had I failed to make good in this opportunity when everything was favorable to success it would have been an ever lasting cause for self criticism. It would be an act of ingratitude on my part if I did not give who not only suggested the opportunity but furnished at slight cost everything needed to start the business, including special teaching, valuable instructions and trade secrets and did this so well that my ignorance of the business itself was no drawback at all. Quite a few people from other sections have already written them on my recommendation, for they in all parts of the world, either men or women, in this business at home or traveling, all or spare time, but do not encourage business relations with drones or idlers. I am only one of thousands whom they have started in their twenty years of business experience, and I can't imagine a business which offers equal money-making opportunities to people of limited means—something easy to do, easy to get, easy to maintain, offering almost the only chance for people in moderate circumstances to better their position in life.

Pleasant Business.

Though you, my wife, regard my success as remarkable in comparison with the old days it seems to be quite the regular order of things with their customers, as for example, one man claims $301.27 in two weeks, another $38.18 the first three days and hundreds of similar reports have come to my notice, which makes me feel that there is nothing of personal quality in my own success. You won't forget how skeptical I was at first, but these fears were unfounded, as we both know now, for I have found the business even better than their claim as a money-making chance which anyone without leaving home and without previous experience can manage successfully.

I shall continue advising people out of employment or working hard for a little money to send their name on a card to and receive FREE as I did their proposition, valuable information, testimonials and samples.

GRAY & CO., 809 MIAMI BUILDING, CINCINNATI, OHIO,

They don't offer any impossible inducements, such as $50.00 a day without work, but simply claim that those willing to hustle have every reason to expect from to begin with and more than that as their business grows. I feel sure and believe that you, my wife, also believe that no one will ever regret the day they started with Gray & Co., for they are the largest concern of their kind in the world and are backed by $100,000.00 capital. It's well that you should know these things as I do so as to answer inquiries intelligently when visiting friends outside of my territory.

$30.00 TO $40.00 WEEKLY

SIX HISTORIC AMERICANS.

A Book That Every American Freethinker Will Delight to Own.

By John E. Remsburg.

The work consists of two parts, "The Fathers of Our Republic," and "The Saviors of Our Republic." In regard to Paine's religious views, Mr. Remsburg establishes the negative of the following (1) Was Paine an Atheist? (2) Was he a Christian? (3) Did he recant? Page after page of the most radical freethought sentiments are culled from the correspondence and other writings of Franklin and Jefferson, which show that these men were as pronounced in the rejection of Christianity as Paine and Ingersoll. That Washington was not a Christian nor a believer in Christianity. In support of Lincoln's infidelity he has collected the testimony of more than one hundred witnesses.

The book is handsomely bound in cloth, giving fine portraits of George Washington, Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Paine, Thomas Jefferson, Abraham Lincoln and U. S. Grant; also portrait of the author.

This book contains 365 pages, printed on heavy paper, well bound in cloth. Price, $1.25. For sale at this office.

THEOSOPHY AND MEDIUMSHIP.

A Theosophist States His Views, in a Letter to Charles Dawbarn.

Mr. Charles Dawbarn—Dear Sir:—I have read with interest your article in The Progressive Thinker for November 17, 1906, on the subject of Theosophy and Mediumship. I have frequently seen in said paper unreasoning attacks on Theosophy, showing that the writers had assumed a position in which they were in no sense open to conviction, and the idea of attempting to reply to such attacks has always seemed to me to be a foolish waste of energy and time. Your article, however, is framed in an entirely different spirit. You seem to have taken the matter up in a very honest way, and have expressed opinions based upon your own unprejudiced thinking and upon such facts as have come to your notice, and it seems to me that such conclusions as you have reached, and which I cannot agree with, are due not to prejudice and general bias, but rather to the want of possession on your part of some facts touching the subject with which you have dealt. May I, therefore, offer a few suggestions in a very matter of fact way, without attempting to reason or dilate thereupon, with the hope of disclosing some points, which it would seem had not been brought to your attention?

I think the discouragement on the part of theosophical writers on mediumship, arose from the fact that at the time this character of admonition was insisted upon, Spiritualism was in its infancy, and those participating therein, were specially open to some of its dangers more fully than now, and so a note of warning was thought to be needed. There is the higher mediumship and the lower mediumship, and I think that all of the theosophic warning toward mediumship referred to its lower phases. The Theosophic ideal is to develop the latent powers of one's own soul so that the higher self may adequately become expressed in the world of men, rather than to acquire certain negative psychic capabilities, which would enable all kinds of entities to manifest on the physical plane unconsciously to the medium himself. In the one case, we have a conscious, highly organized and developed being, reaching into the inner world with one hand and grasping its treasures and handing the same consciously down with the other into the outer world. In the other case, we have a blind, inert channel entirely at the mercy of the manifesting entity. So I think the condemnation was not of mediumship as a whole, but only one phase of it, for surely the higher phase is still mediumship, since the instrument stands as a medium between that which is unseen and that which is seen.

Theosophy in no sense rests upon the phenomena produced in the early years of its inception, but embraces a broad philosophy or system of facts, which upon close investigation seem to lie at the foundation of all the great world religions and sciences. The few trifling phenomena that were produced during the life of H. P. Blavatsky were simply to show to the world by some startling, though simple facts, the reality of the truth that there are unseen powers which could be utilized to produce results in the known world. At that time, there was a strong tendency toward the belief that there was no conscious existence that could not be apprehended by one of the five senses, and these phenomena, together with the phenomena of Spiritualism did much to reverse the entire current of that thought.

One who desires to know the real H. P. Blavatsky and not merely the "Madame" who produced phenomena, should read her monumental work, "The Secret Doctrine," and I think he will get a very impressive view of the bigness and mystery of this strange personality. I am not sure that her most eager admirers understand the scope of her being, and I feel that many years will yet pass before the real depths of her greatest work will be understood.

As to reincarnation and karma, I do not think there is any proof of either which ought to be acceptable to any man, except such as may come as the result of his own personal investigations. To many, these twin doctrines furnish a reasonable hypothesis, and as such they are accepted as a working basis, since many more problems may be solved through them than without them. To others, these truths are definite facts. They have proved them time and again through investigations made into the Akashic Records, or Memory of Nature. Until each one of us can by the evolvment of his own powers learn to look back into the past through the medium of the living pictures existing in the mind of the Logos, and trace out the life history of any living Ego, showing the various bodies it has taken unto itself from time to time, for the purpose of its evolution, we shall not be able to obtain first-hand proofs of the truth of reincarnation and the great law which accompanies the same, karma, and until then, we must either reject the doctrine, or accept it as a reasonable working hypothesis. The doctrine of reincarnation affords a very noble inspiration to those who have the intuition to see it in its true light, and I do not think that a wise man would forsake any of his assumed duties of life and go into seclusion merely "to prepare for his next visit to earth," any more than he would do this to prepare for a life in some invisible sphere. This sort of action is no part of the teachings on the subject of reincarnation, but would rather be an action conceived in ignorance and carried out to the prejudice of the very object sought to be attained. The teaching is, that the highest results in future lives are attained through the perfect performance of duties in the present life, and any one violating this proposal, totally misunderstands the true spirit of the teaching.

You speak of one's sacrificing every responsibility in life for the sake of one's own karma. Has it not occurred to you that by doing this he would incur bad karma? Has it not occurred to you also that if you should see some person suffering, it would be far more logical for you to conclude that it might be your karma to relieve the burden of the sufferer, than to conclude that you must keep hands off, upon the assumption that the other is merely meeting his just deserts at the hands of nature? Who are you, or who am I, to decide when that man's karma ceases? It may be that you, or I, were the chosen instrument of nature to put an end to the sufferings which had befallen such a man. Your reasoning therefore; seems to stop just short of the truth in this matter of karma.

It is not quite accurate to speak of Colonel Olcott's "Old Diary Leaves" as the "gospel of Theosophy." This work is merely a chronicle of events which took place during the history of the society from the standpoint of one of its members, and does not in any sense pretend to show forth the philosophy of the theosophical movement. For this, one would need to turn to the "Secret Doctrine" of H. P. Blavatsky, "Ancient Wisdom," and numerous other works of Annie Besant, "The Growth of the Soul," and other writings by A. P. Sinnett, and the various writings of C. W. Leadbeater, not to mention the more scholastic works of G. R. S. Mead. I think if you would read these through thoroughly, you would get such a wide and deep view of the subject as would prove impressive to a mind as apparently open and genuine as your own.

SPIRIT RETURN IN A CHURCH.

Spirit Return Comes to the Whole World, Regardless of any Sect, Cult, Club or Religious Organization—A Lady Is Controlled in a Revival Meeting, and Talks the Language of the Kalmucks.

The following comes from Lincoln, Nev.:

For to one is given, by the Spirit, the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge, by the same Spirit;

To another faith, by the same Spirit; to another the gifts of healing, by the same Spirit;

To another the working of miracles; to another prophecy; to another discerning of spirits; to another divers kinds of tongues; to another the interpretation of tongues.

Claiming that after long prayer she has received the "gift of tongues" promised to believers in the twelfth chapter of I. Corinthians, Mrs. G. C. Shumate of 825 North Sixteenth street, was shaken with a strange power at a revival meeting and began to speak rapidly in a language that no one could understand.

The services, under the leadership of Evangelist C. F. Ladd of Mendota, Ill., had been going on for two weeks at the little meeting house of the First Advent church. The church seats hardly 100 people, but prayers had been offered for the gift of tongues with unflagging hope.

Mrs. Shumate is unable to explain her wonderful gift. She firmly believes that it comes from God.

"That evening I could hardly wait until the evangelist had finished," said Mrs. Shumate. "A strange feeling came over me, and I rushed to the altar and fell in a swoon while something seemed to be grasping my throat. Then came the rush of words. I don't attempt to explain it. I only know that it is an answer to my prayers for weeks."

Only two words could Mrs. Shumate translate. "Efien," she says, means "amen," and "Lasea" means "Jesus."

It was not until Lazarus A. Mallek, a Persian who had been a missionary to south Russia, heard the strange language, that it was identified. Mallek speaks ten languages.

"It is the language of the Kalmucks, a nomadic tribe of Caucasia," he said. "The tribe lives in the government of Stravropol, east of the sea of Azof. The word 'efen' does mean 'amen,' and 'Lasea' means 'God' or 'God as revealed to man.'"

The gift of tongues has also come upon Mr. Reeder at the meeting. He speaks a strange language very slowly. Up to this time it has not been identified.

NATIONAL THANKSGIVING HYMN.

O, Thou to whom a nation brings
The gift of grateful prayer and praise,
The source whence every blessing springs.
Who guidest all our earthly ways—
Enlarge the scope of our desires,
Make firmer our fraternal ties;
May all souls seek our council fires,
The world partake our charities.

Grant, Mighty One, to us the skill
To conquer every giant wrong;
The power to do thy gracious will,
The soul of love, the breath of song;
The peace that moveth side by side
With honor, mercy, justice, faith!
With human hopes and rights to bide;
In league with life in face of death.

As free to think as birds to soar;
And grateful as the streams that run
To carry to the toiler's door
The meed his honest hands have won;
Thanksgiving for the right to hold
Opinions and their just defense;
Allied to nature and the bold,
Sweet souls who kept their innocence.

Who dared the evil powers of hate,
The happy ignorance that drew
The rich, warm blood of hearts, elate
With gentle instincts firm and true,
Oh, bid our lives repeat the strain
They learned of freedom in its morn,
As shells that murmur of the main
Forever to the ocean-born.

From man to Thee, from star to star,
From where white daisies kiss the sod,
We hail the golden links afar
That binds us to our Father, God!
Give us more light the Truth to sing,
From chill Alaska to the sands
Where cacti scarlet banners fling
To all the dark and stricken lands.

How oft the sight of means to do ill deeds make ill deeds done.—King John

When the People Are Intelligent, the People Will Rule.

An Essay by Henry Morrison Tefft, of Norwich, N. Y.

God always finds an instrument to do His work. He commands men for His purposes, the most unlikely, from human reasoning to bring about the desired end. To demonstrate His power He goes into the ranks of the enemy, takes Naaman, the leper, and the commander-in-chief of the Syrian army, and cleanses him of his leprosy and converts him from a worshiper of Rimmon to a believer in the true God. He stopped Saul on his way to Damascus, breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the followers of Christ, and changed him from Saul the persecutor to Paul the apostle and defender of the faith. He takes a moral coward like Jonah, and not only compels him to do His work, but for trying to evade it, he is held up for all time as a type of disobedience and moral cowardice. He finds David, a boy tending the sheep, and moulds him into one of the world's greatest characters. The son of a carpenter becomes the religious leader, prophet and teacher of the people for all time and all ages.

One man shapes the thought of a nation for ages and gives it a rule of life, in a philosophy, or a religion, as Confucius in China, Zoroaster in Persia, Buddha in India, Mohammed in Arabia, Christ in all Christendom.

One man, sometimes on certain lines, gathers up, concentrates, or precipitates in his writings and teachings the whole thought or tendency of his time,—as Voltaire did in France.

A great genius often, by word, or speech, or deed, can only give the people hints, suggestions and outlines of his meanings. He merely shadows forth the truths that are in his heart to utter because the deepest thoughts can only be represented by types, figures, illustrations, and symbols. But what does it avail a person to read of the great events and conditions of the world,—of its battles and wars, of the rise and fall of kingdoms,—of its revolutions,—of its religions,—of its light and darkness,—unless one can read the meaning and purpose of all these monster movements of society, of state, nations and races.

The Crusades, the Reformation, the French Revolution, were necessary facts in history, the same as Peter the Hermit, Cromwell, Luther, Napoleon Bonaparte were necessary men in their time and age and for the work that was in hand to be done. Neither the epoch makes man or the man the epoch; each is dependent upon the other; they are born out of the same reasons, elements and conditions. There never was an age of more strenuous life than now, nor an occasion when the forces of society were more adverse to each other. There seems to be a breaking up of all the old landmarks of society that heretofore guided and directed the minds and consciences of men.

In times of great unrest and turmoil of the world a man has always appeared upon the scene equal to the time and the occasion; but to-day no prophet walks the earth. The signs indicate that we were again nearing a time when the advent of such a character was inevitable. "He will be conceived in the passion of contemporaneous events and born of the sorrow and tragedy that walk the earth. His genius will be in the cosmic movement that has produced this tumultuous hour."

A deadly disease has to be treated with strong medicines. No great evil was ever wiped out without heroic treatment. Evils accumulate, corruption flourishes, oppression rules, until some mighty upheaval of society clears the political and moral atmosphere. Luther's reformation comes along and tears up the religious soil; the French Revolution comes along and breaks up the political and social ground. The world at times needs a Cromwell; a Luther; a French Revolution to overturn the existing orders of things.

It needs a Hercules to clear out the Augean stables of vice, corruption, immorality and injustice that fill the land. It takes the struggle of all the elements to add the rich flavor to the fruit, to make the sweet fragrance of the flower, to clothe and adorn the world with foliage and life, and to fashion, sculpture and form the hills and the dales, the cascades and fountains which nature produces.

If the sun had been always shining the geography of the heavens would not have been mapped out. It is only in the darkest night that the beauties of the skies can be seen. The sweetest song, the most inspiring oratory, and all that is great in sculpture, in painting, in literature, has been inspired by suffering.

No people ever won their liberty until thousands had been slain. No nation was ever purged of its crimes without the shedding of blood. Worlds are produced from nature's unrest. If there are eruptions and pimples upon the skin, it shows the system is out of order and the blood is impure. Murders and assassinations are only symptoms and indications that beneath the surface of society there lies deeply imbedded some diseased condition of the body politic, some disturbance of the social organism that must be removed before these unusual and unnatural conditions will disappear. The common people never destroy constitutions, nullify laws, or override the constituted authorities; these things are always brought about by those in authority and power.

It makes a difference whether it is a millionaire that breaks the laws or a pauper; whether it is an anarchist or the head of a trust, syndicate or corporation. The former can be easily punished but the latter never.

The scales of justice seldom balance. Law is administered according to circumstances. It is wrong for laboring men to organize into unions, but it is perfectly right and proper for wealth to organize into trusts, combines and syndicates.

It is impossible to tell when a nation has reached the zenith of its glory. The multiplication of laws, the enactments of innumerable statutes, instead of being an indication of the reign of order, and of peace and prosperity to the great mass of mankind, are sure signs of the rising tide of discontent among the people. The rights of property stand, to-day, above the rights of man; more consideration is due to the dollar than to the individual. Money covers a multitude of evils. Every offense against society, law and order can be forgiven; moral, mental and physical delinquency and deformity can be overlooked and set aside, but poverty will forever remain a blot upon the page of family history.

The legislation of the country for the last forty years has been in favor of the rich and against the poor. Every bond issued is a mortgage upon industry and thrift. The horse, the ox, the elephant could not be controlled if they knew their strength. So it is with the great body of the people; they are broken, driven, controlled, fleeced, stripped, degraded and enslaved with much less trouble than the dumb animals;—but this would be impossible if the working men and wage earners of the country could be made to half realize their power and importance in the world.

"These are startling times; times in which the ear of patriotism inclined to the earth hears the heart beats of humanity; times in which the cohorts of organized greed and the sons of liberty are arrayed for the final conflict. On the one side is the despotism of moneyed aristocracy; on the other the knighthood of the masses. * * * As God chastised the last generation to the redemption of the slave, I believe he rivets on this the emancipation of labor."

There are plenty of men who simply represent money,—nothing more. They stand for no principle, no philosophy, no science, no religion, no power but money. The time will come, when in this country, there will be an aristocracy as strong, as arrogant, and as useless as ever cursed a kingdom, an empire or a monarchy, and they are to be fed, clothed and sumptuously provided by the working men and women of the land.

What is it that corrupts society, destroys governments, buys up the courts, rots out civilization? Wealth. It is at the top and not at the bottom that society commences to decay. There is no difference between a band of robbers holding up the officials of a bank and robbing the contents of the vault, than a trust or combination of capital holding up the people and compelling them to pay whatever price they may demand for the productions of the earth. From a moral standpoint, one is as legitimate as the other. Does it make any difference whether the popular will is controlled, set aside or thwarted with money or with the army? With patronage or coercion?

Because a man occupies some official, social, political or religious position in the world, it is no sign that he has the moral or mental endowment to fill the same. Because a man is elected to a judgeship, or sent to congress, or even elevated as the chief magistrate of a nation, it is not necessarily on account of his fitness for these positions.

Mankind learn wisdom slowly. It is a pitiable spectacle when the rulers, or the chief men of a nation, have to pass through the country so strongly guarded by soldiers or detectives as actually to prohibit enjoyment or gaining any knowledge of the people or country through which they pass. Does the fault of this condition lie at the door of the populace or at the door of the civilization that breeds these conditions?

Who moulds public sentiment? Who guides and directs the ship of state? Are not the morals, the sentiments, and the feelings of a nation the outgrowth of its laws, institutions and government? And are not the laws, institutions and government made by the rulers, lawmakers and the public men of the country? These are questions which the people are to-day pondering in their minds. The powers that bring about these conditions always ask, "What are you going to do about it?" Time answers all questions, solves all problems. The great events that most seriously affect mankind move noiselessly and "without sensation."

"Still giant Wrong stands boastful and elate
But omniously laughs the book of Fate;
And history, breathless, hears it polishing
Five pebbles for some epoch-making sling."

Norwich, N. Y. HENRY MORRISON TEFFT.

A NEW PARABLE.

Illustrating the Absurdity of Orthodox Teaching.

Chris Gottlieb, a hoary old giant, who enjoys the reputation of being a just and holy man among his friends, and has beside a large but ill-behaved family of children, a big and vicious dog that is forever running loose without a muzzle or license, the which he seems to keep just for the pleasure it affords him when menacing everybody, including his own family.

This man saw fit the other day to crown his impious piety by an act of heartless brutality which would be a credit only to a low savage cannibal.

It appears that some of his family were about to kill the dog as the only means to get rid of him, for biting the youngest one among them, but on seeing his pet dog in danger, it so enraged the old man that he grabbed a big club and was about to knock the offenders down with it, when Joshua, the eldest boy, who by the way, is the best in the whole family, sprang forward pleading to spare his little brothers, and rather to strike him instead; and swinging around, the now infuriated man felled the boy with a single blow and left him there lying in a pool of blood, unmoved by his outrageous act.

* * * * * * *

Jesus spake in parables as the best method to express the truth most forcibly in but few words, and thus, by setting his hearers thinking helped to unfold their understanding.

* * * * * * *

Chris Gottlieb is none other than the imagined God of "Love" of the misnamed Christians, fully as savage as themselves and ever ready for a fray, revenge or carnage.

This pet dog they call Devil. The children hate him and would destroy him, but for their father, who seems to love the dog more than them, hence he forever keeps and protects him.

The elder boy is their savior from punishment, they claim to love him, or at least pretend to, and so would any coward or dead-beat, because he paid with his blood all their debts, which they owe, and are promised a receipt in full in the end.

* * * * * * *

What a stupendous fallacy, ignorance and blasphemy! What a slander on a being of which our highest conception as to his love, justice and perfection is but a faint shadow of his real, infinite sublimity.

Those alleged faithful, but foolish servants seem lacking in common sense as to love and justice, which should be expected as requisite attributes of a God, and while they would clamor for severe punishment if Chris. Gottlieb were a poor mortal; they make all kinds of excuses for him since they choose him for their God.

Our society was fortunate in securing the services for three Sundays, of Helen Stuart Richings, to open our lecture season, last month.

It is with pleasure that this little tribute of appreciation is given to this gifted woman. Her work is characterized by intellectual brilliancy and a spiritual clearness and force which give her a three-fold power over her audience. Her appeals to the heart and soul, as well as to the reasoning faculties, are inimitable. She also gives accurate psychic readings, and her talent as a writer and as a dramatic artist is well know.

Her platform work is greatly assisted by a charming personality and the magnetic aura by which she is surrounded.

Her many friends are prophesying good results to the cause of truth by her re-appearance upon the Spiritual rostrum.

The services of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. W. Kates have been secured for the winter months, and we are anticipating a harmonious and helpful season under the ministrations of these true and faithful workers, who always uplift and stimulate, and arouse what is best in their hearers, as they go about doing good and scattering seeds of truth for their "reaping by and by."

Slowly, but surely the glorious truths of the harmonial philosophy are finding their way to the brains and hearts of many thoughtful people in our beautiful little city, and the influence of our society is felt as never before.

THE VISION OF THE IDEAL.

There Is No Religion Higher Than Truth.

There is nothing higher, grander and more potent than truth. There is nothing more essential to human life than truth. Truth is immortal; truth is God. "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

Now if this be a fact, we can readily see how essential it is for us to make our search for this immortal uppermost in our minds and life work. We should be willing and ready at all times to make any sacrifice in the world to obtain the truth, however small it may be. As Burns has said, "No man is worthy of the truth who is not willing to die for it."

The question that will naturally arise in the mind of the average man is, how shall one proceed to obtain the truth; in what direction shall he go? in whose footsteps must he follow? to what sects out of the numerous sects shall he subscribe his name. Such questions have come from the human heart ever since man began to heave his first sigh and shed his first tear over the remains of his first dead.

There is but one rule to follow in our search for truth, and that is to follow the dictates of our own conscience, and to be broad and far reaching in our investigations. Follow in no one's footsteps, adhere to no particular church creed or religion, as no human soul gives expression to all truth, and all religious institutions, so-called, contain but a small fraction of truth. Therefore, our search must be an individual one. We cannot organize an association, however powerful it might be, intellectually or financially, that can do the work for us. We must do it ourselves. Some one has said that you might as well capitalize a syndicate for making love, as to organize a concern for praising God. You must do the praising yourself.

In the first place we must free ourselves from any and all objective institutions which claim to have the only plan or scheme by which we can escape the penalty of violating nature's laws, and be ushered into a located heaven, no one knows where. We must look out for the soul's freedom at all times. We should declare an individual declaration of independence with as much earnestness and power as that immortal declaration that peals forth from the flaming Sinai of old Independence Hall. We should forever keep the flag of freedom floating over the fortress of our souls.

The great trouble has been in the past, and is to-day, that we are not free to respond in harmony and unison to the dictation of our souls. We have not been following the spirits' leading, hence the truth has not come to us first hand, and unless it does come to us through our own souls, it is not a truth to us; hence, of no value. In other words, truth is not the truth unless we are conscious of it, and we cannot be spiritually conscious of anything unless it comes from our soul's awakening.

We complain and prate wisely about idol worship. We perhaps travel thousands of miles to convince other nations, who have a history much older than ours, that they are idol worshipers, and must accept our particular religion, etc., in order to be saved, when at the same time we, as a people, a nation, are just as much idol worshipers, and perhaps more. Just so long as we worship some God outside of ourselves, or some individual however exalted he may be, we are idol worshipers; and just so long we are living an imperfect life instead of the Christ life, just so long are we minus the truth that comes only through a spiritually conscious life.

Now there is a method by which we can arrive at the truth first hand, and that is by going into the holy and eternal silence and communing with the God within. As I said before, we must become conscious of truth before it is the truth to us, and this spiritual consciousness only comes through soul growth and soul awakening. The above method of going into the silence will sooner or later bring about the desired results, and this makes our progress more rapid and definite towards a more perfect civilization which means in time the universal brotherhood of man.

How well Jesus the Christ understood the significance of going into the silence when he said "When thou prayest enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut the door pray to thy Father which is in secret, and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly." (Matthew 4-6).

In this solitary communion with the spirit of life and truth, we come into the sublime vision of beauty and good. In society and the everyday affairs of life, we are compelled to mingle more or less with degrading conditions that tend to destroy the vision of the ideal. But when we enter this solitary communion, with the eyes closed and the objective world shut out, then the soul can look with open vision upon Reality and realize the vesper songs of truth and beauty.

I care not how busy a man may be with the affairs of life, he can, by a little practice, go into this silence, even in the very midst of the tumult of the world and hear the lofty music of the soul. When we learn this great truth, then life will be easier. The sounding of the hammers and the whirling of the wheels will be music to us. As someone has said, "Man is gifted with a divine insight, which if he would follow it, would lead him into paths of perfect peace and happiness.

"THOU SHALT NOT SUFFER A WITCH TO LIVE."

No God has ever made such law;
'Twas blind and savage man.
Eternal justice has no flaw—
No God pronounced that ban.

'Tis man's conceit that ever tries
To build himself a shrine;
He flings his errors to the skies,
And calls it "Law Divine."

And thoughtless man will cheer and hail
And to the idols bow,
And fight for error, tooth and nail,
While truth is trampled low.

Who made the witch a thing to kill?
A demon or a God?
Was it a kind creator's will
To steep his hand in blood?

O, blasphemy! O, shameful lie!
To hide your crime-stained hand,
You are accusing the most High
Of giving foul command.

Hail to the witch! if wise and true.
Oblivion to the fake!

LETTER FROM MATTIE E. HULL.

She Writes of Various Topics of Interest to Her Friends.

To the Editor:—After so long a silence—but not absence, for I have visited your sanctum in spirit, many times during the silence—I ask for a little space in your columns, that I may reach those friends who read your paper—and they are many—and assure them of recovery from the accident which befell me last September, has come to that extent that I am again on the wing, and doing my usual amount of work in the field.

To the many friends who wrote to Mr. Hull and myself, during my days of almost physical helplessness, expressing sympathy and positive hopes for my complete recovery, I would say, I am sure they were all helpful.

Not a day passed during my most intense suffering that I was not enabled to turn within myself and hold, as has been my custom for many years, a season of communion with my arisen friends.

I passed through it all without being compelled to resort to opiates to induce sleep, or to find relief from pain; ministering spirits in and out of the flesh imparted strong, healthful influences to me daily, and as I am now on the up grade to the condition of perfect health, I feel strong in courage and re-enter the active field with renewed energy and hope on behalf of the work before us.

As the readers of The Progressive Thinker know that I am in company with Mr. Hull, on a long trip, sometime since outlined in this paper, I am sure they will not consider themselves neglected if no word reaches them from my pen for some time to come. We are truly "birds of passage" at the present time, and are crowding as much work as possible into the present month, enroute to California. At present we are in Billings, Montana.

We left home on November 12. We met with teachers and students at the opening of the school session that morning, then exchanged good-byes and in less than an hour after the handclasps and loving parting words, we were on the train, speeding westward to meet appointments made enroute to the "land of the setting sun." Mr. Hull or myself will soon write in reference to our work at those points.

I would have been glad to remain in our home this winter, and to carry on my appointed work in connection with the school, but circumstances ordered otherwise, and I accepted the decree.

Mrs. Niner, although more busy than ever in her legitimate work connected with the M. P. I., in the department of Oratory, kindly consented to take charge of my work under promise to send a lesson every week for the consideration of the Psychic class. The lessons are prepared under the influence of invisible teachers during my regular sittings. Thus I keep in close touch with the members of the class wherever I am.

In addition to the lesson work there are stated periods for the class sittings, and as there are several fine sensitives connected with the class, the work is profitable and interesting. I write all this relative to the phychic class, as many who have written me they desired I should do so.

I will not ask for more space, Brother Francis, only to say, I send kindly greeting to all in the field. We can assist one another by planting ourselves upon principle and striving to perform our work through the noblest exercise of reason, love and Will. Let us stand together for Spiritualism and all it means to the world.

DREAMWOOD.

A Trip to That Favorite Locality.

To Dreamwood, to Dreamwood I wandered on a day,
And there I saw a fairy a-sitting on a spray.
"Why came you here, I prithee? What came you for to see?
Do you know not this region belongeth unto me"
And ere I could him answer he waved his little wand,
"You idle, idle singer, this place is fairyland.
And whoso cometh hither, a year he shall remain,
And he shall labor daily, ere he depart again."

In Dreamwood, in Dreamwood I tarried as I said,
A slave unto the fairy, where'er the fairy led.
I opened out his roses, I sprinkled them with dew,
And many a path I made him the many mosses through;
I robed him all in shimmer, I buckled on his shoon,
I watched him in his dances beneath the rounded moon;
And I forgot the passing of all the busy hours;
My food it was of nectar, my couch among the flowers.

In Dreamwood, in Dreamwood—alas, that dreams do end;
I thought him first a tyrant, I found him soon a friend,
For when the year departed, he woke me where I lay;
"Come up, my merry singer, here is your freedom day."
But I, I only pleaded, "Oh, wave your wand again, Forever in your kingdom would I with you remain."
He only laughed: "'Tis over; you me shall serve no more,
But I, your fairy, nightly, will dance about your door.

PSYCHIC PROOFS IMPORTANT.

It Is These That Convince People of the Truth of Spiritualism.

Unity of purpose, unity of action and loyalty to leaders is good.

Jealousies, friction and selfish ambitions, are certainly detrimental to individual or society.

However it would seem to me, from what Mr. William John Ward gives as his ideal of the advancing of the cause of Spiritualism, in The Progressive Thinker, No. 886, that he has embodied the entire combination in his article.

It would seem that he has set an ideal, to which all should bend the knee, or blush for shame, in being a participant in any other way, or following any other teaching, save that given forth by some installed official of a Spiritualist church.

No! Let us not blush for shame, but shout for joy, that individuals may be free from the bonds of monks and priests, preachers and teachers; free to think for themselves and work out their own salvation.

To the papal church, the ignorance of their people as regards that of which they profess, is of indispensable necessity to keep them in subjection to their teachers, pope and priest.

Of course this seems good teaching to the pope and priest, for if their people were given freedom of thought and action it would not be possible to keep them in subjection to their sweet will, and the pomp and power of papal rule would vanish into everlasting oblivion.

The infallible priest and the immortal pope have been the stumbling block for millions of souls all down through the ages, who have been robbed of their right to reason and think for themselves, but have been taught that the priest should do their thinking for them, so far as their soul was concerned; of course they could hustle for the penance money.

The Protestant confessions of faith and catechism have been the stumbling block for millions of another sect, who have also been taught to feed their teachers on chicken, house them in fine parsonages, pay them rich salaries, and pamper them to every fancy and whim, all for the purpose of having someone to pray for them and draw imaginary pictures of heaven, and tell them how to be good.

It goes without saying that all faiths teach good teachings, have good principles and do good; although they may be adverse to the teachings of other faiths than their own, and claim to have reserved seats to the highest places of heaven, and even going so far as to damn those of other beliefs than their own, into the place of everlasting torment; make war on them, confiscate their property, take their men for slaves and their women for concubines. Such has been the result of authorized teachers, anointed priests and installed ministers, all down through the ages of time; here is the true embodiment of jealousies, friction and selfish ambition, which have resulted in the bloodiest of wars and persecutions, the world has known.

Church and state alike rely on the training of youth as standard bearers of their respective causes, and whatever that youth is taught, that he is, unless by some chance he is liberated from the bonds in which he has been held, and reaches out into the universe of knowledge—reads, thinks, compares and considers views; then he becomes an individuality. Previously he was a part of a body of ideas and rituals; now he is an individualized being, living, breathing, thinking and forming his own views of matters; awakened to the responsibilities and opportunities of life.

Who can set up a teacher or formulate a set of rules to meet the requirements of a body of individuals, who when developed are a universe of thought in themselves, and each must find out for himself what is best, and must be convinced of the future state by his own experiences and convictions; whether it is by the whoop of an ugly Indian or the flitting of an angel enshrouded in its robe of electric azure, or in whatever manner it comes, the individual must see and hear for himself to be convinced.

I wish to cite this particular paragraph from Mr. Ward's article.

"There are those who having some faint development of psychic faculty aroused, pose as teachers, give a wrong impression of Spiritualism, to the serious detriment of the cause; that class of people should be severely discouraged; they are vagrants."

Someone may say, if the coat fits, put it on; and that is just what I am doing. There may be those who presume to know and understand the philosophy of Spiritualism from A to Z; while I honestly admit that I have not as yet mastered the letter A in this beautiful theme.

Notwithstanding this, I do know that the most eloquent language used by the ablest and most versed person in the philosophy of Spiritualism, would fall far short of convincing a single man or woman of a future state of life; while a message from heaven, from a friend or relative given them by a poor washerwoman would be the most positive proof.

The great volume of proof of the future life, aside from secular ideas, has come through the organism of persons as ignorant of the philosophy of Spiritualism as an American child would be of the Chinese language. I think one may safely add, that as little has been given by those setting themselves up as able teachers, as could possibly be imagined.

This being the undeniable fact, I cannot see how any one can take the stand that those having a faint development of psychic faculty should be discouraged and labeled vagrants. The very foundation of our belief rests on the facts proven us from this source, and not on fluent oratory heralded forth from a rostrum.

An association with teachers to further the cause of Spiritualism, to awaken the dormant spiritual senses of the people, to aid in the development of good, true and honest mediums, and bring them before the general public, every one will acknowledge is good, and lend their moral and financial support.

Mr. Ward says Spiritualism is to start on a new era; hitherto we have paid much attention to the mere fact of communion with spirits, with all its attendant phenomena.

Now if paying attention to this particular thing hasn't proven future existence, and isn't of use to instruct us, to impress us and to guide us in this life, and is of minor importance, then we had better revert back to pagan and Protestant teachings, which have been presented to us by the most able and eloquent orators from all time.

What have we that is more important than our brothers who have been preaching future life these thousands of years, if our communion with spirits and its attendant phenomena are of minor importance?

We have hundreds of millions of dollars in fine edifices, with millions of dollars paid annually in salaries to ablest of orators to talk to the people, and room for more than four times the people that go to hear them, except on Easter Sunday when everybody has new togs. Now if our communion with spirits and its attendant phenomena is of secondary importance let's go where the rest of the crowd goes and make it larger.

We as Spiritualists claim to prove future life, by our being able to commune with our friends and others who are near to us by relative ties, and by the attendant phenomena; certainly if we leave out the proof or make it of secondary importance, we have no more than our other brothers preaching future life.

But we have got the proof, volumes of it; we have the truth, piles of it; what people want is proof, positive proof, truth that is beyond reproach.

Let societies build places of meeting, that we may gather in our own hall and listen to lectures on our philosophy, inspirational speaking, tests, or whatever the committees see fit to treat us with; all this is needful, helpful, good, and no one would object to it. But think ye not, that we have had quite enough of ordained ministers and anointed priests, wearing the soft clothing, sheep sent amongst wolves? Think you not that they rather turn out to be wolves among sheep?

Spiritualists cannot consider that communion with spirits and its attendant phenomena are of secondary importance; it is all-important, and all that there is, that is important. The thing for every Spiritualist to do, is to put every barrier in the path of fraud and deception, and insist upon the development of mediums along the line and subject to a condition of test, impregnable to fraud.

Let down the curtain on the dark seance; watch for the ventriloquist; look out to detect the sleight-of-hand, legerdemain performer.

Societies, appoint your committees to investigate the seances of every medium in the land. If deception is practiced, lay it bare; the world will think something of you then; people will have confidence in you; they will at least believe you are honest in your investigations, and not either duped or harboring and assisting frauds.

THERE IS NOT A SOUL IN THE LAND, BUT WHAT WOULD LOVE TO BELIEVE IN A FUTURE EXISTENCE, BUT WHEN THEY SEE YOU TAKEN IN BY TRICKSTERS, AND HEAR YOU SWEAR THAT IT IS GENUINE, IS IT ANY WONDER THAT THEY TURN AWAY IN DISGUST?

Societies, appoint your committees to wait on those who have a faint development of their psychic faculty, point out to them the great good they can do humanity by developing their gift and using it honorably; assist them in every possible way to develop for the phenomena under conditions which will bar all chance of deception. This would give that feeling of confidence, and security, which could not be otherwise but productive of harmony, when there is no doubt that what one sees and hears are genuine manifestations, phenomena under these conditions will make Spiritualists thick and fast, and make them for keeps.

If mediums can develop to give us phenomena in the dark, they can develop to give it to us in the light, from the reasonable fact that phenomena come spontaneous IN THE LIGHTEST OF DAY, and in the darkest of night. If it can be demonstrated once in the light, it can be demonstrated again.

Here are the two irrevocable facts, that phenomena coming in the light, where all objects are discernible, are convincing and harmonizing, and into which the most delicate woman or child might enter. Where, on the other hand, the dark seance gives every possible opportunity for the perpetrating of fraud; nothing you can see or hear can be absolutely convincing to a rational thinking person. No harmony can possibly exist under such conditions, and it is a nerve-wrecking entertainment to even those of strong nerves. It is true there are a lot of those whose seances are so adverse to reason, as to be overjoyed at embracing some foul-breathed, liquor-soaked, vulgar form; togged up in rubber mask, whiskers, wigs and cheesecloth drapes; but these procedures cannot be considered by sensible people.

Every effort of organization to purify, elevate and advance the phenomena and advocate the philosophy of Spiritualism, cannot but be heralded with joy; but to assert that the communion with spirits and the phenomena are of secondary importance, and that the source from which the convincing facts of spiritual belief have been established, shall be throttled and discouraged, by appointed or aspiring so-styled teachers, is a step right into the jaws of tyrannical self-aggrandizement for the few, who would set themselves up on soft cushions as teachers of philosophy, no matter how deeply their psychic faculties are veiled in obscurity of the life beyond.

The trouble with the axle just now is that there is too much rotten stuff in it; get a good axle, good, clean, pure phenomena—insist on it, examine it well, give it the test; if it doesn't stand it, throw it out.

A little sixty-cent electric pocket lamp is a good thing to take into the dark seance. By simply pushing the button, you can take in the situation; by letting go of the button you are in darkness again before anyone knows what's doing; the spirit will not hurt you, and the lamp will not hurt the spirit, but it will reveal whether it is the medium in artificial togs, or the spirit of your friend. It will detect how the trumpet gets batted around the room and against the walls and ceilings; it will show you who is making the music, in fact it comes in right handy in the dark seance room.

If you don't happen to have a lamp, when the white-robed spirit flits around, take a good hold of a portion of the ethereal fabric; if it is ethereal it will fade away; but if it isn't, you can hold it, providing you are stronger than the medium.

Modern Popery Is Ancient Paganism

In the first issue of the now well known magazine, "The Forum," in March, 1886, there was an article by Rev. R. Heber Newton, D. D., the famous minister. The article supposes a certain group of persons to be visiting Rome—the group consisting of "Ecclesiastic," a papal priest; a Broad Church Episcopalian minister; a disciple of Ingersoll, called "Philistine;" and an Egyptian resurrected from his sleep of many centuries, and called "Pagan." The article is headed: "Is Romanism Baptized Paganism?"

A little assemblage at the baptistry attracted our friend's notice, and we wandered thither; Ecclesiastic duly discoursing of the supernatural origin and mystic powers of this sacred rite. Pagan watched the ceremony with great interest, and when it was over, remarked: "Baptism is one of the oldest rites of religion, and was observed in ancient times by most nations in their mysteries. From the very earliest period known to history, water was used as the outward and visible form of a religious sacrament, the symbol of a spiritual regeneration. Candidates for initiation into the higher life were plunged in consecrated water at the hands of the officiating priests. In India, under certain forms of Brahmanism, there was such an initiatory rite. An oath was made by the would-be initiate, pledging him amongst other things to purity of body. Water was then sprinkled over him; he was invested in a white robe; a cross was marked on his forehead and he was given the mystic word A U M. Sometimes this Brahmanistic baptism was performed by the bank of a sacred river, into which the priest plunged the candidate three times; praying over him, 'O, Supreme Lord, this man is impure like the mud of this stream, but as water cleanses him from this dirt, do Thou free him from his sin.' Buddhism, in some of its forms, had a similar ceremony. The new-born babe was dipped in sacred water three times and a name given to it. The ancient Persian carried his babe to the temple shortly after its birth, and presented it to the priest, who baptized it after a similar fashion; the father then giving the child its name. The Mithraic Mysteries had such a service for adults, in which the foreheads of the initiates were signed with the sacred sign—the cross. Our own Egyptians had the same rite of baptism, and the Mysteries of Isis thus received the initiate. This rite was known as the 'water of ablution,' and the person mystically purified was said to be "regenerated." Our devout churchmen, in ancient times, developed the same sacramentarianism which I recognize in the words of my friend Ecclesistic. This holy rite was held to have a mystic power independent of the state of mind of the initiate; a superstitious opinion which a certain Greek historian sneeringly rebuked thus: 'Poor wretch, do you not see that, since these sprinklings can not repair your grammatical errors, they cannot repair the faults of your life."

To all which Broad Churchman responded: "What you say is confirmed by so sound an ecclesiastical authority as our own Dr. Lunday, who, in his great work on Monumental Christianity, remarks, 'John the Baptist simply adopted and practiced the universal custom of sacred bathing for the remission of sins. Christ sanctioned it; the church inherited it from his example.'"

Turning away from the baptistry, Pagan proceeded to descant upon the sacred sign of the cross, which he had observed in use in the baptismal office and which he had noticed everywhere in the sacred building. "If you have learned archaeologists and numismatists, they must have told you that the cross was a universal and world-old religious symbol, and that it was used in most, if not all, of the ancient sacred mysteries. Hindus, Assyrians, Egyptians and Romans alike employed this sacred sign. A cross hung upon the breast of Tiglath Pileser in a colossal tablet from Nimroud that was in the Museum of Alexandria.

"The cross was the symbol of the Hindu god Agni, 'the Light of the World.' It was found in our Egyptian temples, and was worn from necklaces around the throats of our pious ladies, just as I have observed your good women wearing it here to-day. One of its common forms which I observed here, the cross and orb, is an exact reproduction of a familiar Egyptian symbol, the mystic Tau. The origin and significance of this singular symbol was much discussed in our times. By many it was held to have been originally a Phallic sign, which in the gradual spiritualizing of religion came to stand for the mystery of life spiritual rather than life physical, for regeneration rather than generation.

"Our occultists and mystics had various subtle and ingenious explanations of the higher significances of the sacred cross, which I dare say your learned men still reproduce." Whereupon Broad Churchman interposed again: "This fact of the antiquity of the cross as a religious symbol is clearly recognized by our modern scholars. Bishop Colenso, in the 'Pentateuch Examined,' writes thus: 'From the dawn of organized Paganism in the eastern world to the final establishment of Christianity in the West, the cross was undoubtedly one of the commonest and most sacred of symbolical monuments. * * * Of the several varieties of the cross still in vogue * * there is not one amongst them the existence of which may not be traced to the remotest antiquity. They were the common property of the eastern nations.' And if his opinion be that of a theological 'suspect,' it is amply buttressed by more orthodox authorities. 'Chambers' Encyclopedia declares: 'It appears that the sign of the cross was in use as an emblem, having certain religious and mystic meanings attached to it, long before the Christian era;' and the Encyclopedia Britannica observes: 'It is curious, on the other hand, that a cruciform device having diverse significations should have occupied a prominent position among the many sacred and mystic figures and symbols connected with the mythologies of heathen antiquity. Such certainty was the case in Egypt, Assyria, Persia and India, and also among the Scandinavian races of the North.' Our own most orthodox presbyter, Dr. Lundy, confesses: 'We actually find among all the ancient nations that had astronomical systems * * * the cross as one of their most cherished and precious symbols.'"

What more Broad Churchman might have proceeded to say was cut short at this point by the entrance of the ecclesiastical procession, the hour for high mass on this great day of the year having arrived. Pagan was quite impressed by the scenic beauty of the pageant, and complimented Ecclesiastic greatly on the artistic perfection which had been reached by the "floor-manager"—his terms became a little mixed at this point—and on the admirableness of the "properties" generally. The pageant was so much like his familiar ecclesiastic mis en scene that he almost felt himself transported back to some great Isis day at Thebes. Turning to Broad Churchman, he asked him if he did not remember the eloquent description of the priestly procession on an Isis day given by Apuleius; or Juvenal's description of the sacred image, "escorted by the tonsured, surpliced train." Broad Churchman, nodding assent, went on to give the Ancient a free rendering of Dean Stanley's account of the historic origin of the ecclesiastical vestments which appeared in the priestly parade, tracing surplice and alb and chasuble and cope and all their kindred regalia to the one-time common dress of the Roman citizen, which, as it became antiquated, grew sacred. Pagan smiled in quiet approval, remarking: "The good Dean was doubtless right; but much of this ecclesiastical regalia has a far more ancient origin. Your bishop's mitre and crosier were once the high cap and hooked staff of one of our gods. The tiara of your pope—who, by the way, bears himself superbly in this sacred pageant—is a perfect copy of that of the Dalai-Lama of Thibet. Your pope himself," he observed, turning to Ecclesiastic, "is our old Pontifex Maximus, who, in his turn, was a western production, greatly modified of the Grand Lama, the infallible head of the true church."

WHAT IS LOVE?

The Subject Analyzed by Dr. Juliet H. Severance.

We hear a great deal about love, but very little understanding is expressed of what love really is. Like God, it seems to be in the minds of most people an "unknown quantity."

To my understanding, love is simply attraction, and there are as many kinds and degrees of love as there are kinds and qualities of matter. It is the attraction of particle to particle that forms the rock, a love corresponding to the matter manifesting.

There are two forces everywhere manifesting, called centripetal and centrifugal forces, push and pull, attraction and repulsion, love and hate.

In the human being who has embodied within him some of the elements of all nature below him, "an epitome of the Universe," we find a great variety of characters, which are called faculties. It is a law of nature that like attracts its like, hence we have as many kinds of love as there are human faculties.

The emotional faculties love emotional things; intellectual faculties intellectual things; the spiritual faculties things spiritual.

To limit love to the emotions alone is a sad mistake. Every faculty of the brain has a love peculiar to itself.

The social faculties, Amativeness, Philoprogenitiveness, Imitativeness, love family and home. The faculties of Time and Tune love rhythm and harmony. Acquisitiveness loves to gather to itself, to hoard up. Benevolence loves to dispense to others, to do good. Ideality loves the beautiful. Conscientiousness loves right because it is right. Reverence makes us worship whatever we deem worthy. The reasoning faculties, Causality, and Comparison, love logic and analytical reasoning in things cognized by the senses, or perceptive faculties.

The emotional and perceptive faculties are the first developed in the child or the race, the reasoning the very last.

When an individual or race has these well developed they reject all authority and become a law unto themselves.

A man is a thief simply because his love of acquiring is stronger than his love of right doing. The stronger faculty in any conflict controlling the weaker, as surely as the stronger man the weaker in physical combat. As love is simply attraction, so hate is repulsion; and as every faculty attracts to its own kind, so every faculty is repelled from its opposite. Doesn't a finely developed musician hate discordant sounds, or a logical reasoner hate sophistry as strongly as he loves logic?

There is only one faculty that attracts the sexes to each other and that is the amative. We can love our own sex musically, logically, or ideally, but when attracted sexually it is under the magnetic law of opposites and this is what is usually meant by love, and the lack of understanding of the necessity of being adapted in the other parts of our being—intellectually and spiritually—is the cause of so many marital wrecks all about us.

Let me illustrate by a case I had to deal with in practice: A man and woman, both musicians, often met in a musical way and became very much attracted to each other. After a time they married, and learned, to their sorrow, that musically they were adapted, but in no other part of their natures. There was more of their nature repelled than attracted. They struggled along, as many do in similar conditions, until the man's reason gave way, he being the more sensitive and spiritual of the two. They finally separated, and under more favorable environments he regained his mental balance.

Unless a couple are united or attracted in the greater part of their faculties the repulsion will be stronger than the attraction, so soon as the magnetic sex-forces become equalized, and sad results are sure to follow.

Ignorance is the cause of all the sorrow of the world. Let us try to learn the laws of right living.

JULIET H. SEVERANCE, M. D.

OUT OF DARKNESS INTO LIGHT.

Some Facts Succinctly Stated by One Who Has Made the Journey.

In 1905, when spirit voices (God's messengers) in my own house, informed me that my religion was largely myth, I decided to divest myself of previous teaching and search for truth, guided by my own reason. I studied not to brace up preconceived opinions, or to find popular belief, or to find what any religion had done for the world, but what is the truth about religion?

I found the following had been taught B. C.: Immaculate conceptions, births heralded by stars and angels, together with wise men, ruler killing infants, the trinity, resurrections and ascensions, miracles, atonement, confessions and remissions of sins, baptism, the sacrament, Christmas and Easter, and the flood, had been taught prior to the time of Moses.

The immaculate conception, physical resurrection and miracles of Christ, were not recorded for over 100 years, A. D. Apparently Paul never heard of said doctrines or of the four gospels.

Twenty-six Christian writers from A. D. 120 to A. D. 170, failed to mention either the gospel of Matthew, Mark, Luke or John. (See a history of the Christian Religion to the year 200 by Waite.)

Older and more reliable gospels that said Christ was a good man, were eliminated in order to substitute the four gospels with a view of establishing churchianity instead of the truth, though the reason given was "because there are four universal winds, and four quarters of the earth.'

The early writers seemed to think it necessary then to scare people, and that was done more in the interest of priestcraft, than to extend truth.

Are not all men sons of God and never lost?

Paul was right: "Whatsoever a man sows, that shall he also reap," has always been true and always will be,—an unchanging natural law. Conditions of remorse are reformatory, and the transcendental delights of people working in harmony with God and his billions of celestial, intelligences—extending love, brotherhood and substituting justice for injustice, no mortal pen can describe.

For 40 years I was a mental slave wandering in the wilderness of superstition and tradition, and like millions of honest souls, did not know it. Once I was blind, but now I can see the light of the world is knowledge sweetened with the Christ spirit of love.

Myths are falling from religion's tree, and aided by legions of angels, man begins to know his need—mental freedom.

HEAVENLY TREASURES.

How Earthly Treasures May Be Transferred to Heaven.

Jesus, our elder brother, is reported to have said, lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven where moth and rust doth not currupt or thieves break through and steal.

Who is more capable of giving good counsel to earth children than he who spent his life force in healing the sick, lame, halt, blind and doing good generally by teaching people to be forgiving, charitable even to giving vast fortunes to benefit the poor, that the earthly possessor might enjoy heavenly happiness?

Earth life would be the ante-room to paradise, if the golden rule was honestly put into practice. Heaven a vast storehouse of earthly treasures.

We all need a sufficient amount of this world's goods to satisfy our natural demands for food, clothing, homes, reading matter, art and means to travel to inform the mind by object lessons, associations, and make our lives more progressively useful to each other.

Heavenly treasures are laid up by doing good to benefit the needy.

Gold is transferred to heaven by using it to help those who need assistance.

Rich people on earth are poor in the spirit world, unless they have thought and transferred their surplus values to spirit life by helping others to be more comfortable, useful and happy.

Wise ones say our soul life is eternal, with an infinite variety of progressive changes. We know our earth existence is brief and that the enjoyment of earthly treasures is like a fleeting moment of passing time, as compared with a vast eternity of pleasurable thankfulness for having done our duty on earth, by aiding the sick, lame, halt and blind, with our hopeful counsel, strength, and interest-bearing bonds and surplus valuables.

Earth life is too short to lay up gold treasures by miserly depriving the laboring man, woman or child, of what they honestly earn and ought to have to make them comfortable and happy.

Some people seem to have enough means for all earthly necessities, and much more, but still grasping for a greater abundance to satisfy an insane love for earthly treasures. Report says that such people are too poor in heaven or spirit life where it is desirable to be rich, have a good home with all modern improvements. To be in heaven or soul life with our treasures on earth would seem to make one feel poor indeed when they can be so easily transferred to heavenly life by using them to educate others, by distributing literature, or lifting a mortgage from a struggling family. If one desires to think and act, there is almost an infinite variety of ways to do good and dispose of millions of earthly treasures to heavenly courts where we will need them in our business enterprises in soul life.

Earth life ought mainly to be a pleasure trip from the cradle to the grave, and would be if our unwise selfishness would slough off, and wise helpful usefulness to each other take its place in the economy of our social life.

Our aim should be to do good for the benefit of mankind, that a higher civilization may be unfolded, that all may enjoy a greater degree of happiness in this world, and be better prepared to take an active part in progressive usefulness in the spirit world.

LETTER FROM JOHN WARD.

In Which He Wisely Pours Oil on the Troubled Waters, and Smoothes the Rough Places.

To the Editor:—"Let justice be done though the heavens fall."

I not only allow my good brother McArthur's criticism but I am thankful to him, and esteem him for it. In my zeal for order and progress, I was severe in my criticism—made a mistake in part, and I cheerfully acknowledge it, and as cheerfully apologize to my sincere comrades in St. Louis.

I would not consciously hurt an insect. Indeed, many a time have I rescued a straying fly, and restored it to the outstretched arms of its anxious parents! How, then, could I wilfully hurt a co-worker? No! I want their esteem and good will, and I feel that I shall hereafter have it.

Our brother doubts the utility of large central temples; but I gently insinuate that the erection and use of such temples are inevitable as a logical outcome of growth, and the present crude methods will as inevitably be outgrown and discarded as a youngster outgrows and discards his small shoes.

One is reminded of the early reformers meeting in makeshift places; and it is not for want of money that we do not have beautiful, commodious temples; it is for want of courage and ability.

Is the "Holy office of the Inquisition" still in force, or is it a case of the tail wagging the dog, to the glorification of the tail, but to the serious detriment of the brains?

Hudson Tuttle says in The Progressive Thinker, No. 887, that all that is true in Christian Science has been "pilfered from Spiritualism." If it is true, I should be ashamed to say so, for they have certainly put us in a back street with the courageous and wise speculations of their pilferings from our Bank; and the magnificence of one of their latest temples in Boston leaves nothing to be desired; but, nevertheless, there is plenty of room for opinion. We shall make the port somewhat tattered, but all the more glory; and when that time arrives, we shall have refined that which we are now pleased to call our "independence." We shall have learned the value of intellect, knowledge, and we shall appreciate those who, by patient research and toil, through calumny and hostility have enough to serve us; in a word, we shall have reached a state of culture compared with which we are now Barbarians.

In conclusion, let me say that Clinton has its troubles, but I am in honor bound to defend the local society, of which Mrs. Alice C. Barry is the able pastor. The criticism of "self-elected officers" cannot apply there. That lady is too well known for her sincerity and justice, and together with the officers, and members, are above reproach. But the brother didn't mean it. I take it back. He takes it back. We shake hands all around in mutual and brotherly forgiveness, and go ahead with the work in hand with a more hearty determination to succeed.

THE PSYCHOGRAPH

OR

Dial Planchette.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than twelve years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the

FORMATION OF CIRCLES AND CULTIVATION OF MEDIUMSHIP

with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

ROBERT BROWNING.

Spiritualism the Heart of the Teachings of the Great Poets.

"Browning, (as set forth by the Harbinger of Light,) was the greatest spiritual force in English poetry of all the centuries, and thus from the position of English poetry, the greatest spiritual force in the literature of the modern world.—Mr. H. B. Higgins, M. H. R., in his lecture on Browning."

Before the lecture on "Browning—His Mind and Art," by Mr. H. B. Higgins, M. H. R., barrister, and newly elected president of the Australian Literature Society, was announced, the following article by a close student of Browning in Perth, W. A., was sent to the editor of the Harbinger of Light. This gentleman is a Spiritualist, and as it is the aim of this journal to show the universality of the truths put forward in the new Gospel of Spiritualism, it is proposed from time to time to show how all illuminated minds RECEIVE THEIR LIGHT FROM THAT GRAND RESERVOIR OF TRUTH FROM WHICH WE DRAW OUR SPIRITUAL SUSTENANCE. Those who have not studied the life of Browning will point, possibly, to "Sludge the Medium" as irrefragible proof of his disapproval of Modern Spiritualism. It is, however, the experience of many besides Browning for their first introduction to a Spiritualistic circle to cause a feeling of revulsion, and if the medium is a public one, to be certain that they are being deceived, so strange are these potent unseen forces now being investigated by thoughtful people all over the world. D. D. Home was the medium against whom Browning's wrath was directed. But F. W. H. Myers in his "Human Personality" and papers contributed to the proceedings of the S. P. R., says he was convinced after careful and exhaustive investigation of the absence of trickery in Home's manifestations, and quotes the testimony of Sir W. Crookes and the Master of Lindsay (now Earl of Crawford and Balcaires) in support of his conclusions. That Robert Browning and his gifted wife, Elizabeth Barrett Browning, differed in their estimation of Home's mediumship is matter of history. Mrs. Sutherland Orr, in her admirable biography of Browning, says about these sittings with Home at Florence, that Browning "absolutely denied the good faith of all concerned. Mrs. Browning as absolutely believed it and no compromise between them was attainable." But Mrs. Orr tells us that this experience scon passed out of the foreground of his conjugal life and that Mr. Browning "never denied the abstract possibility of spiritual communication with either living or dead. The tremendous potentialities of hypnotism and thought reading, now passing into the region of science, were not then so remote," Mrs. Orr adds, "But that an imagination like his must have foreshadowed them. The 'natural' basis of the seemingly supernatural had not yet entered into the discussion." It is safe to say that if Browning had been living now he would have been among those who are studying the laws that lie at THE BACK OF SPIRITUAL PHENOMENA—now almost unknown—and would hail the dawn of the New Psychology whose mission it is to waken people to the fact of the psychic powers latent in the soul of every person born upon this earth. There is no scaling the depth and height of Browning's spiritual philosophy until the inner vision is opened, and excellent as was the address of Mr. Higgins and the added criticisms of Professor Laurie, Mr. Murdoch and Mr. Strong, they lacked the illumination that transcends all merely intellectual acquirements and did not furnish, as in the subjoined article, the full ethical and spiritual meaning to be found in Browning's poems.

Spiritual Intimations From Browning.

Browning's Religion and Philosophy of Life was pure Theism, combined with a loving tolerance and a great compassion for human weakness. He believed in a God of love and power and in everything working together for good by orderly, unhurried processes.

The particular poems and writings in which his true spiritual views are embodied are, among others, "Pippa Passes," "Paracelsus," "La Saisiaz," "Rabbi Ben Ezra," "Christmas Eve and Easter Day," "Reverie," and "Epilogue" (his swan song). Others might enlarge the list and include such as that little piece "Pisgah Sights," "Evelyn Hope," with its hint of reincarnation, or "The Guardian Angel at Fano," each enshrining a valuable thought.

If any weak ones desire to lean on a stronger brother, let them turn to Browning with confidence, for in him they will meet with a strengthening help and encouragement to "PROJECT THEIR SOUL ON ITS LONE WAY," as he says in Rabbi Ben Ezra. "Pippa Passes," written as far back as 1841, when the poet was only twenty-nine, shows how a word or action spoken or done at the psychological moment may unknowingly reverse the whole course of action in another. The simple, pure little Italian factory girl does this four times in the course of her one day annual holiday.

Browning strikes the keynote of his philosophy—his unconquerable optimism—in this play, and takes up the stand which he maintained all his life. On her awakening he makes Pippa sing—

"Mornings at seven
The hill-sides dew pearled,
God's in His heaven,
All's right with the world."

Later, she sings—

"All service ranks the same with God,
God's puppets best and worst
Are we; there is no last or first."

Therefore, no act is greater or less than another, as God orders each one.

"Say not a 'small event!' Why small?
Costs it more pain than this ye call
A 'great event' should come to pass
Than that?"

The action of the piece then unfolds and Pippa passes by certain places where men and women are at crises of their lives and about to commit some terrible crime. By her careless singing some snatch of song apt for the ear of the hearer, an evil deed is arrested and remorse and right action substituted.

The monumental "Paracelsus," written even earlier than "Pippa," 1835, when Browning was only twenty-three, contains much to digest, the central fact being—as Paracelsus the ambitious discovers only as he dies—that neither knowledge nor love singly is sufficient, but that both must be combined with humility of mind to be perfect. Paracelsus cries when he attains in part V.—which should be specially studied—"God, thou art love, I build my faith on that." Looking at the inconsistencies and apparent contradictions in life, he asserts—

"Truly there needs another world to come!
If this be all—(I must tell Festus that)
Another life awaits us not—for one
I say 'tis a poor cheat, a stupid bungle,
A wretched failure. I, for one, protest Against it and I hurl it back with scorn."

Here are to be found many pregnant thought-compelling passages as he sums up life before he dies. His experiences, he says,

"Taught me the worth of love in man's estate,
And what proportion love should hold with power
In his right constitution; love preceding Power, and with much power, always much more love."

Paracelsus closes with these fine dying words, full of Browning's certitude as to the future—

"If I stoop into a dark tremendous sea of cloud
It is but for a time; I press God's lamp
Close to my breast; its splendor soon or late
Will pierce the gloom; I shall emerge one day."

"La Saisiaz," a beautiful poem throughout, contains the most argumentative and didactic statement of Browning's views of religion—the disclosing of his ripened conclusions. A large part of it is cast as an argument, pro and con, between Fancy and Reason as to the existence of God, a future life, and consequently how man should order his probationary period on earth. The poem opens with a beautiful little introductory lyric,

"Good to forgive;
Best to forget!
Living, we fret;
Dying, we live.
Fretless and free
Soul, clap thy pinion!
Earth have dominion
Body, o'er thee!"

Browning says he will probe the mystery of life to the bottom without fear of hoodwinking himself.

"I will ask and have an answer—with no favor, with no fear."
He sees two things—
"Call this God, then; call that soul, and both the only facts for me."

When we turn to "Rabbi Ben Ezra" we find the noblest psalm of life in the English language. From every point of view one of the highest and finest of Browning's achievements, either for form, subject or handling. It is based on an historical Rabbi, who lived at the close of the 11th century in Southern Europe, one of the most distinguished philosophers of the time. The poem breathes the old Hebrew patriarchal spirit—tinguished philosophers of the time.

The poem breathes the old Hebrew patriarchal spirit—calm, elevated, full of serene trust in God, life, and man's place and mission in the plans of God. It contains and condenses all that may be found amplified elsewhere in his works. Throughout the thought of life—its lessons and objects—is lofty, sustained and strong. Our trials are for a purpose, and he bids us

"Grow old along with me!
The best is yet to be,
The last of life, for which the first was made;
Our times are in His hand
Who saith, 'A whole I planned,
Youth shows but half; trust God; see all nor be afraid.'"

With regard to life's trials, he exhorts us—

"Then welcome each rebuff
Which turns earth's smoothness rough,
Each sting that bids nor sits, not stand, but Go!
Be our joys three parts pain!
Strive, and hold cheap the strain;
Learn, nor account the pang; dare, never grudge the throe."

He beautifully calls our body a "rose-mesh" enclosing the soul. Learning from these experiences of life, he says,

"And I shall thereupon
Take rest, ere I begone
Once more on my adventure brave and new;
Fearless and unperplexed
When I wage battle next,
What weapons to select, what armour to indue.
The Future I may face now I have proved the Past."

"For more is not reserved
To man, with soul just nerved
To act to-morrow what he learns to-day;
Here, work enough to watch
The Master, work and catch
Hints of the proper craft, tricks of the tools true play."

He declares that we cannot judge others for we cannot know all surroundings and influences and weigh all the subtle points which count with the only Judge in "making up the main amount." Among them

"All instincts immature, all purposes unsure,
Thoughts hardly to be packed
Into a narrow act,
Fancies that broke through language and escaped;
All I could never be,
All men ignored in me,
This I was worth to God, whose wheel the pitcher shaped."

Browning never uses loosely the terms soul, body or spirit as interchangeable terms like so many writers and poets, but in their proper limited and exact meanings as Spiritualists or Theosophists would apply them. Thus, in "Rabbi Ben Ezra," he likens the individuals to a cup designed for the purpose of slaking the Master's thirst, and works out a beautiful metaphor thereon. He closes with a grand apostrophe to the Master who has made him—

"So take and use Thy work;
Amend what flaws may lurk,
What strain o' the stuff, what warpings past the aim!
My times be in Thy hand!
Perfect the cup as planned!
Let age approve of youth, and death complete the same!"

"Christmas Eve" and "Easter Day," two long poems, the one pendant to the other, as their titles suggest, are generally religious reflective poems having little in particular bearing on their titles. There is much of helpful import in them. The plot of each is original. In the first mentioned, Stanzas V. and VIII. deserve particular notice. Here again power and love are united in God,

"In youth I looked to these very skies,
And probing their immensities
I found God there, His visible power;
Yet felt in my heart, amid all its sense
Of the power, an equal evidence
That His love there, too, was the nobler dower."

And further on

"So gazing up in my youth at love
As seen through power, ever above
All modes which make it manifest
My soul brought all to a single test—
That He, the Eternal First and Last,
Who in His power had so surpassed
All man conceives of what is might,
Whose wisdom, too, showed infinite,
Would prove as infinitely good.

Then he sums up and says—

"Take all in a word; the truth in God's breast Lies trace for trace upon ours impressed."

In "Easter Day" he opens with the exclamation,

"How very hard it is to be a Christian!"

That is, to really realize all that the word means. He crosses a lonely heath and meets a mysterious form, who offers him certain gifts. In his ambition he desires mental qualities and at each request the form reproves him and disapproves his own choice in scathing words. At last in humility he asks for "leave to love only," and the spirit approves, saying at last he has chosen rightly, and departs.

Towards the end of his life Browning returns to these ideas, in his little volume "Asolando," published on the day he died. It was as though to reiterate his statement of life. In this little volume we find the echoing call in "Rephan" and "Reverie," and closing with his swan song, "Epilogue," wherein the old battle cry of "Prospice" rings out again. The first-mentioned piece is a fanciful idea. It is narrated by a former inhabitant of the star Rephan, who comes to earth to obtain a development he cannot obtain on his own planet: a beautiful imaginative thought. In Rephan all's perfection—a place of evenness where nothing more is to be learned. There things pall on the narrator, who grows discontented and is told

"So wouldst thou strive not rest?
Burn and not smoulder, win by worth,
Not rest content with a wealth that's dearth?
Thou art past Rephan, thy place is earth!"

He comes to earth and learns the old lessons sung by Browning earlier in "Rabbi Ben Ezra," the meaning of life, its struggles both good and evil. It is, however, nowhere or nowise a repetition of "Ben Ezra." Again he reiterates

"I know there shall dawn a day
Is it here on homely earth?
Is it yonder world's away,
Where the strange and new have birth
That Power comes full in play?"

He is sure that if he can decipher one page of life's law he can unravel that of the cosmos. He therefore starts on himself—

"So; my annals thus begin;
With body to life awoke
Soul, the immortal twin
Of body which bore soul's
Since mortal and not akin."

Mind soars gathering in the treasures "from the ranged expanse—to-wit, Nature," and learning "all is effect of Cause," and goes passing laws each one,

"To Omnipotence lord of laws."

But he feels there must be something to match and balance power if he could see deep enough. Limitless love unbeset by hindrance. And so it is; power is love seen rightly, it "transforms, transports all who aspired from worst to best." He breaks out with the old cry—

"Then life is—to wake not sleep,
Rise and not rest, but press
To the heaven's height far and steep."

He knew from the first that Power was; Life has made clear to him that "Strive but for closer view,

Love were as plain to see."

Then in the Epilogue he draws himself up to full height again and cries to the world-worn and weary one to fight on and keep heart. He reiterates—

"What had I on earth to do
With the slothful, with the mawkish, the unmanly
Being who?
One who never turned his back but marched breast forward,
Never doubted clouds would break,
Never dreamed, though right were worsted wrong would triumph,
Held we fall to rise, are baffled to fight better,
Sleep to wake."

So he held that banner aloft from first to last with "Work!" enwoven on it. This is the proving ground to be made the utmost of. Browning was the poet apostle of work, as Carlyle was the prose apostle of manly effort, of self-conquest and trust.

It must not be assumed that this brief comment on a few of Browning's poems adequately treats the subject—it only just skirts it. It is meant only to incite the reader to go for himself to the source and drink therefrom and stimulate his interest. Nothing has been said of those grand music poems, "Abt Vogler" or "Master Hugues of Sax-Gotha," with their reflections on life and many another one from which inspiring and helpful thoughts may be drawn.

Perth, W. A.

A Critical Examination.

The Wicked and Blasphemous Doctrine of Vicarious Atonement.

Some ignorant, superstitious pagan writer of Genesis wrote as follows:

"And in process of time it came to pass that Cain brought of the first fruit of the ground an offering unto the Lord.

"And Abel, he also brought of the firstlings of the flock and of the fat thereof. And the Lord had respect unto Abel and his offering:

"But unto Cain and his offering he had not respect (Genesis 4:3, 4, 5).

If the ignorant pagan writer had reversed that, what an immense amount of human sacrifice and suffering would have been avoided.

"And Noah builded an altar unto the Lord, and took of every clean beast, and of every clean fowl, and offered burnt offerings on the altar." (Genesis 8:20).

"And they came to the place God had told him of, and Abraham built an altar there, and laid the wood in order, and bound Isaac his son, and laid him on the altar upon the wood." (Genesis 22:9).

"An altar of earth thou shalt make unto me, and shalt sacrifice thereon thy peace offerings, thy sheep, and thine oxen." (Exodus 20:24).)

Also the 29th and 30th chapters of Exodus where the atonement is established among the Jews.

Intelligent people must quit believing that what those ancient, ignorant, superstitious pagans wrote in the bible about communicating with God, and saying that God said this and that, and did this and that is true. They lied, and they knew they lied when they wrote it.

If God communicated with those ignorant pagans, why does he not communicate with intelligent people now?

Blood sacrifice as an atonement for sin was a doctrine with which the Jews were familiar. It had prevailed among all nations of antiquity.

The practice had its origin in supposed necessity of placating an angry God and the preference of God to Cain's blood sacrifice instead of Abel's fruit sacrifice.

"Without shedding of blood there is no remission." Hebrews 9:22.

The pagan bishops who wrote the gospels did not say that Jesus himself gave any intimation that he was about to die for the remission of the sins of the world. They overlooked that important point.

If Christ Jesus was a man, and could die, he could not redeem; and if he was a God and could redeem, he could not die; therefore the saying that Christ Jesus died to redeem the sins of the world is false.

The pagan bishop, Ireneus, A. D. 190; Clement of Alexandria, A. D. 200; and Tertulian, A. D. 210, who established the Roman Catholic Hierarchy, adopted the doctrine of vicarious atonement for THE PURPOSE OF OBTAINING REVENGE.

The Catholic Church taught that the church had the power of remitting sins, and when a person had committed a sin the church would, for a money consideration, remit the sins of a sinner.

The doctrine itself is wicked because it tends to increase crime.

An Italian Brigand will rob and steal, believing that he can pay part of his spoils to the church, and have his sins forgiven, while if he knew that he would surely be punished for his sins, he would not commit the robbery or steal from another.

Among many of the ancient nations the sacrifice of human beings was practiced principally slaves and prisoners of war, then their own children, even their most beloved first born. It came to be an idea that every sin must have its prescribed amount of blood punishment, and that the Gods would accept the life of one person as atonement for the sins of others. This idea prevailed even in Greece and Rome, and some persons sacrificed themselves to the Gods to save their country. In Egypt, if the eldest born of the family of Athaneas entered the temple of Laphystan Jupiter at Atlas in Achaia he was crowned with garlands and sacrificed like an animal.

The Sandwich Islanders threw human beings as a sacrifice to the Gods, into the burning crater of Kileau.

Human offerings to the Gods were at one time almost universal. In great calamities or a pressing famine the people sacrificed their king to purchase the divine favor.

The first king of Vermaland was burnt in honor of Odin, the supreme God, to put an end to a great dearth.

Earl Hakon of Norway offered his son as a sacrifice to Odin to obtain a victory over the Jomsberg pirates. Aun, king of Sweden, sacrificed his nine sons to Odin to prolong his life. Some of the kings of Israel offered up their first born sons as a sacrifice to the God of Baal.

The Phenecians offered to the Gods in times of war or drought the fairest of their children, and yearly sacrificed their dearest, and even their only child to Saturn. The Mexicans and Peruvians offered human sacrifice to the Sun.

Little Ben Smith was sacrificed at Los Angeles, Cal., in 1882. His father was converted at a Methodist revival, and for several months he devoted his time to studying the bible, until he was convinced by the wicked bible that he ought to make a human sacrifice, and brought his wife and their only child, a boy of thirteen to acquiesce in his views. The little fellow knelt down and his mother got on her knees by his side; John raised the knife, looked hard into the boy's face, and then drove the knife into his breast.

Suppose some old grey headed sinner should come to you and tell you he had been as wicked as it was possible for a man to be, and should tell you he was about to die and asked you to do something for him; "Here is my little innocent boy. I will burn him at the stake, or hang him on a tree, or crucify him on a cross, and his suffering and death will wash your sins away with his blood, and you will be pure and holy and go to heaven and be an angel."

Do you believe any such wicked, damnable doctrine?

I cannot, neither can you, yet millions of intelligent people believe just such horrid doctrines because the church teaches that the crucifixion of Christ Jesus washes their sins away.

If God wanted to redeem the sins of the people of the world he could do so without crucifying or torturing an innocent person.

GOD MADE ALL MANKIND GOOD. He did not crucify anyone to redeem the sins of the people before the flood; he drowned them, and he did not crucify Lot to redeem the sins of the people of Sodom and Gomorrah; he burnt them, and he ought to have burned lecherous old Lot, too.

The doctrine of salvation through a crucified Savior does not appear in any of the primitive religions before the establishing of the Roman Catholic Church.

But this is enough of such horrid, wicked and cruel sacrifices by religious fanatics who ignorantly supposed they were pleasing an angry God.

WHAT A CURSE TO THE HUMAN RACE IT HAS BEEN.

Let us now examine the foundation of the Roman Catholic Hierarchy upon which which the church claims to have the power of remitting sins:

St. Matthew 16: "And Simon Peter answered and said, thou art the Christ, the son of the living God."

17th Verse: "And Jesus answered and said unto him, blessed art thou Simon Bar-Jona, for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven."

18th verse: "And I say also unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

19th verse: "And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven."

20th verse: Then charged he his disciples that they should tell no man that he was Jesus the Christ."

The above three verses, 17, 18, 19, are interpolated into the text of St. Matthew by the pagan bishops who established the Roman Catholic Church, and probably by Clement of Alexandria.

By comparing St. Luke, 9:20: "He said unto them, but whom say ye that I am? Peter answering said, The Christ of God.'

The 17th, 18th and 19th verses, of the 16th chapter of St. Matthew should also be interpolated here.

21st verse: "And he straightway charged them, and commanded them to tell no man that thing."

St. Mark, 8:29: "And he saith unto them, but whom say ye that I am? And Peter answereth and saith unto him, thou art the Christ."

The 17th, 18th and 19th verses of chapter 16 of St Matthew should also have been interpolated here.

30th verse: "And he charged them that they should tell no man of him.

The pagan bishops overlooked a very important point in not interpolating into St. Luke and St. Mark the 17th, 18th and 19th verses of chapter 16 of St. Matthew, and making the foundation of the Catholic Church more secure.

Clement says when St. Peter was about to die, the brethren being assembled at Rome, St. Peter laid his hands on Clement as the bishop and communicated to him the power of binding and loosing.

The Catholic Church claims that the power has been communicated from Pope to Pope ever since.

It is rather curious that the pagan bishops should give to St. Peter the keys of heaven, when they put into the sayings of their fictitious Christ Jesus these words:

St. Matthew 16:23: "But he turned and said unto Peter, get thee behind me, Satan; thou art an offense unto me, for thou savourest not the things that be of God, but those that be of men."

St. Luke 22:61: "And the Lord turned and looked upon Peter, and Peter remembered the word of the Lord, how he had said unto him, before the cock crow thou shalt deny me thrice."

St. John, 18:25: "And Simon Peter stood and warmed himself. They said, therefore, unto him, art not thou also one of his disciples? He denied it, and said I am not."

St. Mark, 14:71: "But he began to curse and swear, saying, I know not this man of whom ye speak."

In the above quotations the pagan bishops make St. Peter and Christ Jesus almost enemies.

Clement of Alexandria, A. D., 200, was in all probability the author of the gospel of St. Matthew, and Tertullian, A. D. 210, the author of the gospel of St. Mark, and Lucian, A. D. 165, the author of the gospel of St Luke. And it is quite certain that Ireneus, A. D., 190, is the author of the gospel of St. John, because it corresponds in doctrines and phrases found in his other writings. It was not written by the ignorant pagan fisherman of the sea of Galilee, who did not know his A, B, Cs, and could not write his name.

All the gospels, including the apocryphal gospels, are founded upon the gospel of Marcian, A. D., 145, who translated the life of Krishna of India into Greek, which was brought by Apolonius of Tyana on his second journey to India during the first century.

Some of the apocryphal gospels are burlesques, and ridicule the whole story of Christ Jesus.

The pagan bishops destroyed everything that could in any way interfere with, or contradict, their gospels creating a fictitious Christ Jesus.

The Catholic Church claims to have a very large amount of goodness on hand to sell to sinners, and they must pay for having their sins remitted according to the size of their bank account.

Over the entrance of some of the principal churches in Naples, Italy, is the sign, cut in marble: "PLENARY INDULGENCES GOOD IN THIS WORLD AND THE NEXT, FOR SALE HERE."

This whole wicked, damnable and blasphemous doctrine of the vicarious atonement was adopted by the pagan bishops for the purpose of obtaining revenue to support themselves and build costly churches and cathedrals, AND ESTABLISH THE ROMAN CATHOLIC HIERARCHY THAT HAS BEEN THE GREATEST CURSE TO THE HUMAN RACE THE WORLD HAS EVER KNOWN.

Priestly Botch Work.

It is related that during the civil war a controversy arose between General Grant and Secretary Stanton, as to which was superior in command. Stanton had issued orders which the General in command deemed unwise to obey. Finally to settle the dispute it was determined to report the case to the President and get his decision in the premises. Mr. Lincoln was called on and the question was submitted to him, who was supreme in command. He listened to the facts very attentively, then:

"Mr. Stanton, you and I have been running this thing for a long time, and have made a terrible botch of it, now let Mr. Grant try his hand, and see if he can do any better. He can't do any worse."

The result the world knows.

Now priestcraft has been running this world through all the ages. War, violence, crime, and disregard of human rights have characterized every period of the world's history. It has made little difference what form of religion was dominant the same disregard of individual rights has been common to them all. The Jews claim to have been governed by a theocracy, under the immediate supervision of Almighty God, but, letting their pretended history tell the story, they were the most bloodthirsty people who ever lived, absolutely worse than the Christians, and that is saying a great deal.

May we not say in passing, the Buddhists who worshiped no God, seem to have been the most pacific people who ever lived. Until aroused into activity by Christian interference war seems to have been almost unknown to them.

The wars of the Mohammedans, bad enough, never approached in cruelty the wars of the Christians. From one point of view they seem commendable, in that they labored to destroy idolatry, and enforce the worship of only one God; whereas Christians, on the contrary, wished to compel the worship of three Gods, and falsely contended three are one, showing themselves very inferior mathematicians.

As sectarianism has dominated the world from the earliest ages, and has only made "botch work" of governments, how would it do to change front and allow science to try its hand in shaping the affairs of men?

An Agnostic on Prayer.

Hon. D. K. Tenney, in a late issue of the Truth Seeker, in the midst of a long article thus discourses on prayer, as he views it:

"As commonly indulged in, prayer is the veriest nonsense, and is known to be such. Liberal churches ought to say so and have done with it. Pious meditation, humiliation, and high resolve would in no way be disturbed. If the contemplation of truth, to the extent we know it, has no saving or improving tendency, then surely Nature uncontrolled must take its course. Delusion should no longer be cherished. It is neither honest nor useful longer to advocate it. Has not weird and strange fantasy reigned quite long enough? But there is scarcely a liberal clergyman in the world who dares tell his congregation the truth. That is why the congregations are so small.

We know universal law exists, and is unalterable. Should it command our awe and reverence less because we are ignorant of its origin? Do we not know it is eternal, and had no origin? Why suspect there was a remote period when this law had no existence; that some personal and pre-existing divinity enacted it, and that to him, and not to the law, our reverence is due? This is not going too far into the realms of the unknown. Nor is there any point gained by it, save perhaps a sort of deference to ancient error, and to the senseless imaginings of some of our neighbors. It exhibits weakness where strength should appear. Nature is the word to use in dealing with those powers which lie behind all phenomena.

The dependence of liberty shall be lovers; the continuance of equality shall be comrades.—Walt Whitman.

The Basic Errors Were Retained.

At first glance it seems good of Protestant reformers who bolted Catholicism in the 16th century, and set up opposition to the parent church that they did so without calling in question the genuineness of the literary productions of that mother. They controverted the dogmas and practices of the parent church, showed that force and fraud had been the leading instruments for propaganda purposes, but it appears they welcomed their holy books as divine, and never stopped to investigate their authorship, the time they were written, or by whom. They acted, as did the King James' translators; as have all pretended translators from the Geneva Bishops down to the recent revision, as though the first rendering was almost faultless from which they dared not depart.

There was a reason for this. He who examined an original Hebrew manuscript found it without vowels or diacritical marks—consonants were only used, and there was no separation of words from their fellows. The few who attempted a new rendering without being guided by previous translators, made a very different story from that received, indeed so variant it would be scarcely possible to believe it a translation from the same original.

Take up any rendering of the Old Testament into English, whether that of Wickliff, Tyndall, the Geneva clerics, King James' Translators, the Douay, or the production of the recent revisors, and they are substantially the same. A few words are changed, to make them harmonize with the creed of the scholar; but otherwise the old rendering is closely adhered to. No one has the temerity to start out for himself and make an independent translation.

The same is not true to so large an extent with the New Testament; for the Latin Vulgate, which is the base of all the renderings into the modern tongues of Europe, and believed by many scholars to be the parent of what pretends to be the "original Greek," was not so difficult of a correct rendering.

Luther and his coadjutors seemed conscious if they discarded the current church literature they would be in an unknown sea, with neither chart nor compass, so they accepted without question, whatever fell in their way. They did more: Wherever they gained control of civil legislation they repulsed criticism, and punished with imprisonment or death all who questioned the divine authenticity of their holy book.

In a more intellectual age, and the earlier restrictions no longer in force, with reason emancipated, it is found none of the Christian literature is as ancient as formerly supposed. Indeed it seems comparatively modern. It was written to supply links in a broken chain, provided the chain had a prior existence, of which there is good reason to doubt.

Church Farming.

The dear sisters of the Presbyterian church, in Moran, Kansas, have inaugurated a new method of securing the needful, to compensate their preacher for his Sunday labor, and probably buy wine, to be converted into the blood of Jesus for communion service. Says the news report, they rented a farm of 50 acres from J. C. Strong last spring, and planted it with corn. The farmers, with their teams, plows, and harrows, joined the sisters' brigade with their hoes, while the less sturdy became water-carriers, and the Rev. Comes did the praying, putting in his best service at the dinner table.

The growing grain was well cultivated by the sisters, and kindly showers and sunshine produced a splendid crop, proving the correctness of Sam Patch's adage, at the time he jumped the falls at Rochester, N. Y., some two-thirds of a century ago, and lost his life, that "Some things can be done as well as others."

We honor the sisters for their zeal, and deem corn-growing an infinitely superior method of getting money to pay the preacher, to that of displaying the sisters' ankles and selling them to accompany the purchaser to supper, as was practiced in one case certain some two or three years ago.

In Ill Repute.

The order of Jesuits seems to be in general ill repute in all quarters but the United States. The Italian Minister of Justice is reported to have issued quite lately a secret circular to the public prosecutors of Italy, warning them that the laws of that kingdom do not allow members of that order to reside there, and adding, "since the expulsion of the fraternity from France many have settled in Italy." The order of Jesuits was originally founded to combat the Protestant Reformation. From that time down to the present, acting in secret, and not hesitating at any wickedness to advance their faith, and defeat that of their opponents, they have become the enemies of religious freedom everywhere. The assassination of President Lincoln came from their hands, while it seems very probable Presidents Garfield and McKinley met death at the hands of their dupes, for Guiteau and Czolgosz were both Catholics, and are believed to have been under Jesuit influence.

How many more presidents must be slain before the order and their tools shall be expelled from America?

I would rather be poor, with a little sympathy in my heart, than to be rich as all the mines of earth and not have that little flower of pity in my breast.—Ingersoll.

There is work that is work and there is play that is play; there is play that is work and work that is play. And in only one of these lies happiness.—Gelett Burgess.

Church Bells.

One of the most sensible acts which has come under our notice by a Christian church for many a day was that of the trustees of the Methodist church of Wauseon, Ohio, directing the suspension of bell-ringing. They declared all persons knew the time of service, most persons have timepieces, and all can hear the town-clock, hence, by implication at least, the bell is a useless ornament. All churches should adopt this worthy example.

The bell and its clatter may have been well enough in the Middle Ages and even down to the middle of the last century; but there is no apology for it now, with a watch in every meeting-goer's pocket, or a clock in his home.

Jesus Did Not Say It.

If thy right eye offend thee, pluck it out and cast it from thee; for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish and not thy whole body should be cast into hell. —Jesus—Matt. 5:29.

Does the eye offend by seeing, the ear by hearing, or the hand by executing the will of its owner? They are all but servants of the brain, and of themselves can do no act, or take cognizance of no event other than as the master, mind, directs. Plucking out an eye because it has seen something it could not help seeing would denote an insane act. Jesus, if a real character, and in possession of common intelligence, saying nothing of his being a God, as his worshipers claim, never said any such thing. It was a misrepresentation of the monk who wrote the gospel who was the author of that idea.

ITEMS OF EXPERIENCE.

Some Accounts of a Seance With Mrs. Blake, Trumpet Medium in the Light.

My subscription expired some time ago, and through neglect I did not renew, and neglect was the cause of my missing the account of Prof. Hyslop's visit to Mrs. Blake, opposite Huntington, W. Va., on the Ohio side of the Ohio River. And right here allow me to say to all subscribers of The Progressive Thinker, the best paper published in the interest of Spiritualism: Don't fail to renew your subscription, for if you do you will miss something you will be sorry for.

I came to Columbus last Tuesday to locate, and this Sunday I had intended going to the 1st Spiritual Church, to hear Mrs. Marian Carpenter, but not feeling very well, a friend gave me five copies of The Progressive Thinker to read, and I would pass the evening that way. The first paper I picked up gave an account of Prof. Hyslop's visit to Mrs. Blake, which was very interesting to me, for I was to see Mrs. Blake and I wish to add my testimony as to her being genuine and one of the best mediums I have come in contact with in my fifteen years experience.

I went to the church, and what a beautiful temple it is. Thanks to Mr. and Mrs. A., of this city. All Spiritualists of Columbus know the grand work they have done in the past 18 years for the cause. Mr. A. has been very ill all summer, but is now better. We thought at one time he was going to make the change, but he has a new lease on life. We hope to have him with us many years yet. John rarely makes a mistake when engaging talent. I found the church full and I listened to Mrs. Carpenter's lecture, and it was very interesting. Her heart is in the work and she is making many converts. She gave tests for one hour, and they were fine, all acknowledged. She is a fine medium,

Now for my story: Some years ago, I was at Wheeling, W. Va. Several Spiritualists there had told me of Mrs. Blake, that she could produce the trumpet-talking in the light. A few weeks later I passed through Huntington on my way to Bristol, Tenn. On my return I stopped at Huntington, and one hot afternoon I crossed the Ohio river in search of Mrs. Blake. The old Ferryman told me how to find the cottage, and also told me that so many people crossed on his ferry to see her, and they had told him what wonderful manifestations Mrs. Blake produced.

Mr. Blake met me at the door and stated his wife had been ill, but was better. She came in the room and I told her that I had learned that she could produce the trumpet talking in the light, and I wished to witness it. She got the trumpet, not made like those used in the dark circles, small at each end and larger in the center. She handed it to me. I placed the trumpet to my ear away from them in broad day light, and a loud whisper called me by name. I asked who it was, and it said George. I said, "George who?" It said, "Your brother George."

I asked him several questions and all were answered correctly.

Then one of her controls spoke in a loud voice, I think it was her son Abe. Mrs. Blake said that they have made this trumpet under instructions from the controls.

I said to her, "Why do you not go away from home and give this to the people, for your manifestations are wonderful."

She replied that she had been a medium since she was 13 years old, that the people kept her busy at home; that she got the manifestations out in the yard, any place.

"Skeptics have asked me why we did not produce the manifestations in the light."

This visit to Mrs. Blake gave me the opportunity to reply that I had heard trumpet-talking in the light, and that our friends in the spirit world are doing their best to produce it in the light, that it is only a question of a few years when we will be able to commune with them as easy as going to a telephone and talking to our friends on earth. Rapid strides have been made in that direction in the past fifteen years.

Mrs. Blake is a fine medium and I cannot understand how any person can go there and talk to spirit friends in the light, and come away with any doubts whatever. There was no greater skeptic than myself. I investigated in the right. I was looking for facts. I found some frauds but, thank heaven, I found genuine mediums and no amount of money would buy my knowledge of the beautiful philosophy, if I could not regain it.

My experience for the past fifteen years settles the question. I KNOW my relatives and friends who have made the change live. What a blessed thought! The person who believes in Spiritualism is and should be the happiest mortal on earth—should have a kindly feeling for everybody.

Now, Brother Francis, a word for you. You are fighting the frauds. Keep it up. It is the only way to purify the name of Spiritualism. You are a power for good for the cause. May your stay on earth be prolonged many years.

A Question to Be Considered.

Each Number of The Progressive Thinker is thoroughly Educational all along Occult and Spiritual lines. It is the only Spiritualist paper that dares to consider unpleasant subjects that seem to have become an integral part of our Cause, and to allow Spiritualists to remain ignorant thereof, would be criminal on our part. Read carefully what President Barrett has to say.

WHEN SPIRIT RETURN WAS FIRST INAUGURATED, IT WAS SOLELY FOR THE PURPOSE OF ESTABLISHING THE IMPORTANT FACT THAT THERE IS ANOTHER LIFE IN THE SPIRIT REALMS—ANOTHER WORLD OF INEFFABLE BEAUTY AND LOVELINESS WHERE THE SPIRIT SURVIVES THE DEATH OF THE BODY, AND THAT HEAVEN AS PORTRAYED BY THE VARIOUS ORTHODOX CHURCHES WAS A MYTH, HAVING NO EXISTENCE ONLY IN THE FERVID IMAGINATION.

SOON, HOWEVER, A CHANGE TOOK PLACE. THE MEDIUM "FORTUNE TELLER" AROSE; THE MEDIUM LOCATER OF MINES OF "FABULOUS" WEALTH CAME TO THE FRONT; THE MEDIUM PROMOTER OF CERTAIN "STOCK CONCERNS" BECAME KNOWN, AND THE MEDIUM WHO USED ARTIFICIAL TOGGERY AND LEGERDEMAIN TO DECEIVE THE PUBLIC WITH BOGUS MATERIALIZED FORMS, BECAME A PROMINENT FACTOR IN OUR CAUSE, AND THE ORIGINAL INTENTION OF SPIRIT RETURN IN ALL ITS BEAUTY AND LOVELINESS BECAME GROSSLY PERVERTED IN VARIOUS OTHER WAYS, AND AT LAST THE CRY BECAME GENERAL AMONG OUTSIDERS THAT SPIRITUALISM MUST BE "REGULATED." ONE MAN IN THIS CITY LOST $100,000 IN FOLLOWING THE ADVICE OF A MEDIUM, MAKING STOCK INVESTMENTS; ANOTHER LOST $2,000, ANOTHER $1,000, AND MANY OTHERS VARIOUS SUMS, THUS TENDING TO CORRUPT ONE OF THE MOST GLORIOUS TRUTHS THAT EVER WAS PRESENTED TO THE CHILDREN OF EARTH. WILL SPIRITUALISM EVER BE CONFINED EXCLUSIVELY TO THE SPIRITUALIZING PROCESS OF RAISING THE WORLD TO A HIGHER PLANE, AS MANIFESTED IN MANY OF OUR GRAND LECTURERS AND MEDIUMS? THAT IS A QUESTION THAT ONLY THE FUTURE CAN ANSWER.

"USED MEDIUMS TO SELL STOCK."

The Duty of Spiritualists in the Matter, Plainly Indicated.

Under the above caption, an article is going the rounds of the secular press which reflects no credit upon Spiritualism much less upon Spiritualists. A good woman was induced by so-called mediums to invest four thousand dollars in a bogus concern that promised big returns in dividends, and had the mortification of losing all she invested. "The spirits" told her that the venture was a sure one, and that the manager was an honest, reliable man. Her trust has been betrayed, and this "honest, reliable business man," and his confederates, the pretended mediums, are richer by just so much as she is poorer.

There are many people who will say that this woman's cupidity is wholly at fault, and that she has received just what she deserved. There is little sympathy to-day for those who, grasping for wealth and power, are suddenly deprived of both. So far as the latest victim of craft and villainy was moved by a sordid desire to add to her store of wealth by any means obtainable, to that extent she deserves the stinging rebuke she has received, and has paid well for a merited lesson. But there is another side to this question. Her confidence was gained by these pretenders, through her love for her departed dear ones. In their name was she appealed to, and promised large returns on her investment, with which she could do "GREAT GOOD IN THE WORLD." Perhaps she was assured that she could do wonderful things for the cause of Spiritualism, and for its mediums. These base deceivers used tender and noble influences for a most despicable purpose—robbing the innocent living in the name of her arisen dead.

In view of the inducements held out to her in respect to doing good with her augmented capital, it is not strange that she yielded to the unholy influences around her, hence the charge that she is reaping a just reward for her cupidity falls to the ground. She was deceived by a gang of CONSCIENCELESS TRICKSTERS, and exploited out of her money by motives wholly criminal in character.

Those who robbed her will probably never be brought to justice. The "mediums(?)" will escape either through some legal technicality or through the specious argument that they are not responsible for what the spirits did—that they were "unconscious instruments in the hands of excarnate intelligences, hence not at all to blame for what those intelligences might make them do!" Worst of all, there are fool Spiritualists who will support this ridiculous nonsense under oath! The "manager" of the whole business, who employed these mediums(?) to fetch money from unsuspecting people, will quietly drop out of sight, change his name and repeat his rascality in some other city or town. So it will ever be until Spiritualists do their whole duty in all such cases.

What is that duty? To cease defending and apologizing for these robbers, and by refusing to employ them in public or in private as representatives of Spiritualism. When a man recommends a thief as perfectly trustworthy, knowing him to be a thief, the law, moral and civil, holds the endorser as responsible for the evil he may do the one who employs him.

Is Spiritualism so utterly lawless, its followers so cursed by extreme "individualism," as to make the employment of known pretenders and scalawags a matter of private judgment, against which reputable men and women have no right to protest? Is not the employment of a bogus medium, upon the recommendation of a man who knows him to be such, just as reprehensible as the case of the thief above instanced?

"Private judgment," indeed! It ceases to be a case of private judgment the moment the man recommends a suspicious character to an unsuspecting friend, and it is infinitely worse when that friend is a large public audience. The people have put their trust in the leaders of the movement, and those leaders are as guilty as the pretenders themselves, when they stoop, for the sake of door fees, to place known counterfeiters upon the platform.

The defrauding of this woman is an object lesson also to Spiritualists to take a stand that means something on the subject of commercialism that is now operating against every honest medium in our ranks. The world should be made to know that Spiritualism has nothing in common with those who operate in its sacred name for "business purposes only." The full column advertisements in the secular papers constitute no part of Spiritualism, and those who resort to them are neither Spiritualists nor mediums. Those whose cards indicate that they can locate oil and gas wells, find lost husbands, discover buried treasure, and other equally ridiculous and impossible things are just as reprehensible as the "loud" advertisers to whom reference has just been made. It behooves all Spiritualists to be on their guard against all such pretenders, and to warn their friends and acquaintances to do likewise. Duping the credulous, robbing the unsuspecting, and mocking the heart-broken people of earth in the name of Spiritualism and mediumship will go when Spiritualists rise as one man and demand that they shall go.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Having been directed to carry on the work of Editor-at-Large in connection with the N. S. A., I am desirous of obtaining all press notices for or against Spiritualism, and reliable information with regard to attacks upon our movement that may be made by preachers. I respectfully request all Spiritualists to forward the same to me at their earliest convenience.

A BOOK FOR THE NEW YEAR, AND THE NEW TIME.

NOW READY!

The Evolution of the God and Christ-Ideas.

The idea of God, beginning with savage man, is traced through its endless phases upward from primeval savagery through Assyria, Greece and Rome; the speculations of philosophers; the Hebrew seers, the Alexandrian school; to its final interpretation by scientific investigation as the Cosmic Mind.

The Christ-Idea, of a mediator between God and Man, is traced through all the great World Religions, to its ultimate in the ideal of a perfect man. Redemption is by growth. It the teachings of individual spirits may be taken as representing Spiritualism, this book must be regarded as the message that Cause presents to the world on the disputed questions of God and the Savior.

The application of the Darwinian theory of Evolution to man's conception of God and a Savior, may be presented as at least one new idea Spiritualism has given to the world. The work has more than spirit-authority, for it holds fast to authentic history, and aside from its inferences and conclusions, is a compend of what has been thought and taught of God and the Savior, through the ages, by the lowest and highest of mankind.

So many years have passed since I began writing this book by inspiration and automatically; so severe and prolonged attention has been given to its revision, that it was with almost a feeling of regret that I received the message that it was finished.

Beautifully bound in muslin, 280 octavo pages. Price $1.25, with 10 cents added for postage. Address Something Startling!

Two Leading Minds to Start a New Vibration Among Spiritualists and Thinkers Generally.

The Erudite Col. Olcott, the great Theosophist, and Miss Elizabeth Harlow, one of our leading inspirational speakers, will both entertain our readers on the "Dangers of Psychism," from diametrically different standpoints. The lecture by the distinguished Colonel will be answered by Miss Harlow in her own inimitable way, both constituting something of great value to Spiritualists. Now is the time to send in your subscriptions, with an additional subscriber, and thus keep up with the advancing procession instead of following in the rear.

The Progressive Thinker is a THOUGHT-PROMOTER. It leads its readers constantly into new fields and ENRICHES THEIR MINDS with something they never thought about before. In fact, those who do not peruse THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER week after week are not posted in regard to the general trend of our Cause in SPIRITUAL AND OCCULT MATTERS, hence so far as accurate information is concerned, they must take a rear seat.

In order to illustrate more fully Occult Matters, we had a lecture by COL. OLCOTT, on "THE DANGERS OF PSYCHISM," reported in full expressly for The Progressive Thinker, and also a reply thereto by the versatile and eloquent ELIZABETH HARLOW.

Col. Olcott is the one great man among Theosophists, India and Its Occultism are an open book to him, he having lived there for many years and become familiar with the Mahatmas, and his address on the "DANGERS OF PSYCHISM" will excite very great interest among Spiritualists everywhere, and particularly will the comprehensive and exhaustive reply thereto by ELIZABETH HARLOW AWAKEN A PLEASANT VIBRATION ALL ALONG THE LINE!

The interest in The Progressive Thinker is becoming more intense all the time, and all the prominent speakers and mediums in the land have apparently selected it for their official organ, ignoring almost without exception the Organ of the Fakes in Chicago—an organ that exploits all the dishonest mediums, whose notices are carefully excluded from our columns. Honest mediums and speakers know full well that their names would be soiled if used in connection with Elsie Reynolds, the materializing medium, and the creator of bogus spirits, with artificial toggery; if used in connection with Fallis, the exposed spirit artist; with Winans, whose bushel of trick-spirit-paraphernalia was captured at Hot Springs, Ark.; with the Nichols Sisters, with their bogus spirits, and many others of like ilk, who are exploited in their special organ, the Light of Truth. Are not honest mediums and speakers defiled by having their names mentioned in a paper that exploits such a class? Are not the meetings in this city and elsewhere condoning fraud to a certain extent when they seek the columns of that paper, for their reports, thus aiding in its support? There is not, we repeat, one promient, widely-known lecturer in the land, but what would shrink from having his name mentioned in that paper, feeling it would be defiled thereby. A word to the wise is sufficient.

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER

We Remind you that the SPIRIT OF THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER NEVER SLEEPS! There is need of a WATCHMAN and WE ARE IN THE TOWER and ON DUTY for the best interest of TRUE SPIRITUALISM!

Another Announcement!

In Reference to the Remarkable Works of Andrew Jackson Davis.

A letter from Dr. Davis indicates that a change has been made in the price of a full set of his remarkable works. They will be furnished per set when republished at $20 instead of $30, as heretofore announced. There are thousands who ought to have a set of these books. Their publication at an early day depends on the number of subscribers that can be secured. His books are a fundamental part of Spiritualism; the history of Spiritualism can not be written without them.

Since last week, the following subscribers to a full set of the Doctor's works have come to hand:

Emond F. Buhot, Dennison, Ohio; T. J. Mayer, the honored treasurer of the N. S. A.; Mrs. John Ruopp, Oxnard, Cal.; B. G. Sweet, Empire City, Kansas; Henry Peterson, Seattle, Wash. Mr. Peterson writes: "Please put the undersigned down as one of the two hundred subscribers for one set of Dr. Andrew Jackson Davis's great works. The undersigned is not a praying man, but in this case I do hope and PRAY that there are at least 200 who will subscribe. I have the 'Principles of Nature, Her Divine Revelations,' and 'A Voice to Mankind,' and that book is to me the most valuable treasure, the best Bible ever written. I hope I shall live to see a full set of Dr. Davis's works. I am 63 years old, but am going to try to stick it out in the old physical frame until I see a full set published. It will be greatly to my benefit if the subscribers will hurry up, as I can then, from such valuable writings, get a chance to store my little head with a few more common sense ideas, and also learn something of the country towards which I am on the way; but enough. You know what I would say better than I can say it, so here is my name."

INDIANA STATE ASSOCIATION.

A Five Days' Meeting to Be Held at Richmond, Ind.

The Indiana State Association of Spiritualists will hold a five days' mass-meeting at Richmond, Ind., from December 19 to 23 inclusive.

E. W. Sprague and Will J. Erwood will be the speakers, and we will also have good messages and good music.

Richmond is a thriving city, and there are hundreds of Spiritualists there, but at present they have no organized society, and out of this series of meetings we expect to organize a good strong society.

The Indiana State Association is moving steadily along, and our state missionary, Will J. Erwood, is doing excellent work, all his time being engaged up to the Holidays; in fact, he has more calls than he can fill. Wherever he has been they are asking for return dates, and some places have already arranged for two or three days in each month.

Any society desiring his services after the holidays had better write him or the secretary at once, as his dates are rapidly filling up. Address Mr. Erwood, 216 Main street, Peru, Ind.

Sec'y Indiana State Association.

Sacred are the lips from which has issued only truth. Over all wealth, above all station, above the noble—the robed and crowned—rises the sincere man. Happy is the man who neither paints nor patches, veils nor veneers! Blessed is he who wears no mask!—Ingersoll.

Fame is not got by seeking it. All such pursuit is vain. It may very well come about that a man will succeed through tact and various artifices in making for himself some sort of name. But if there is no inner worth, all will prove empty and ephemeral.—Goethe.

The Church of the Spirit.

A Church Divinely Beautiful and Spiritualizing, Evolving a Heaven on Earth by Making a Church of the Deed—Really Expresses One Great Factor in Life, "Be Good and Do Good"—Delivered by Mary Russell Mills in Fellowship.

The Church of the Spirit is the only church that to-day has any reason or excuse for existing. Henry D. Lloyd said that we have long had the Church of the Creed, and we now have the Church of the Deed.

There was a time when the church of the creed was vital and valuable, because it was then what life needed. Looking at it philosophically, I would say that was when men needed to be religious—just as we all and always do need to be religious, because that is the kind of creatures we are,—but when all the energy must go into the practice,—there was none to spare for original thinking,—and thus a few had to do the thinking for the many, and the test was made rigid adherence to creed and dogma and no hair's breadth of deviation therefrom. This was of a certain worth, for it meant experience—strenuous effort to be loyal to doctrine, no matter what temptations there might come to the contrary, or what glimmerings of reason might sift in.

But there came a time when the old faiths that comforted and even created nations had to be laid aside, just as swaddling bands and other outgrown garments do, and the great onward-going Spirit of Progress began developing another phase of life. There must be strong, independent, individual thinking now. We could not hire priests and theologians to do it for us any longer. We must personally lay our own bases for action. AND AN IMPORTANT ELEMENT IN THE PROGRESS WAS THE EMPHASIZED PERCEPTION THAT NO THOUGHT, HOWEVER GOOD, IS GOOD AT ALL UNTIL IT IS TRANSLATED INTO GOOD CONDUCT.

"Conduct is nine-tenths of life," became a prominently expressed dictum, and then some of us had the sense to say, We will unite, not to believe something and go to heaven together, but to do something to create heaven here; not asking so much, What will become of us, as WHAT MAY WE BECOME? And more or less definitely and professedly, the CHURCH OF THE DEED has been materializing around us.

The truth of impulse that leads to an effort of this kind can never be outgrown or superseded, and we may well be glad with a grateful joy, that our Fellowship is one of the efforts in this right direction. With us, I hope, it means an attempted practicalization of that beautiful word, "Beloved, let us love—not in word, neither in tongue, but in deed and in truth."

But we find here at hand a subject of the greatest depth and significance, a sword that cuts down deep into the very nature of our minds and our purposes in life, that does fine execution, even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit. What is it to do only the loving deed? What is it to love in truth?

I. It is not merely to set the machinery of love in motion, or even to keep it going very faithfully. We have all tried that, at times, working for days or even years, being practically very kind to some one, that is, kind from our point of view;—trying to help him to be good, that is, good in our way, making sacrifices for him, making our life and his, too, fairly a torture, with all the magnanimous things we have tried to do, and then have been most disappointingly rewarded by his failure to appreciate any of it; and, it may be, confiding in some foolish, warm-hearted person who never would have been half as systematically faithful as we. If this has been, did it never strike you that we cannot really deceive people at all? Always what we are speaks so loud that people cannot hear what we say. It is the real inner disposition, the attitude of the mind, the spirit within us, that effects changes in the character of those around us. If the pervading, prevailing spirit of our life be love, we redeem and save. Nothing can be a substitute for love that is a motive before it is an action.

"'Tis good to smile with the lips
Even when the heart is sad,
But the smile that never fails or slips,
Is born of a soul that is glad.

"'Tis good to speak the kindly word,
And smother the bitterness,
But if no false note shall be heard,
And I truly help and bless.

"Real love must rise and freely flow
From the being's deepest springs—
Must brother see in high and low,
Its own life in all things."

I knew of an institutional church that was finely and generously endowed and equipped for doing good service to humanity. But although there were mean-spirited persons who would accept the material aid given them by this means and never return any heart-appreciation or even attend the church, there seemed practically no real good done, because there was no hospitable brotherly spirit offered. There was only a PERFUNCTORY RUNNING OF A LARGE MODERN MACHINE.

We may drench articles with perfumery, but it evaporates, while the sandal-wood boxes and ornaments from the Orient remain a source of fragrance and delight.

There is said to be a church at Metlakahtla, Alaska, built by the civilized and Christianized Indians, which exhales perpetually a fragrance as if the finest incense was being burned within its walls. This exquisite odor proceeds, not from any one quarter, but from the entire building, which is made throughout from the wood of the giant arbor-vitae, Thuga gigantea. It is continuous, unvarying in quantity and intensity, and will last as long as the sacred edifice stands. A CHURCH ALL REDOLENT OF LOVE AND SYMPATHY, AND THE SPIRIT OF BROTHERLY SERVICE WOULD BE A JOY AND INSPIRATION AS LONG AS THE WORLD SHOULD NEED SUCH SERVICE.

2. The Church of the Spirit is a church composed of people who have given themselves to trust God, to believe in the unity, the identity, the sincerity, the transcendent purpose of life, the goodness of all its processes. If we stand firmly, calmly, confidingly with God, with the universe, as those who know that "against all appearances the nature of things works for truth and right forever," we stand on a rock, and the world will know it, and sooner or later, will come and stand with us. There is something magnetic or powerful about the person who really trusts. Not the sword, but the confidence in one God, one plan, a divine commission, the thought and cry, "God wills it," won thousands for the heart as well as the banner of Mohammed. That most powerful living leader of thought, Tolstoy, gathered up and threw away, as it were, all that birth and effort had brought him in such rich measure, "all weapons of offense and defense," and sat down in his obscure little corner of Russia to write the message that God should give him. What has made him the awakener and beloved prophet he is, if I mistake not, is his confidence in God, Principle, the spiritual nature and purpose of the world.

When we really trust God, when our lives are baptized and filled and serene and shining with the spirit of an unshakeable faith in goodness, in the ideal as the real, in the spiritual as that which is true and abiding, and for which all things exist, then will we be lifted up in such fashion that we will draw all men unto us.

3. The Church of the Spirit will be composed of people who have consecrated themselves to the cultivation of PURITY, OF CLEANLINESS IN THE PERSONAL LIFE, —THE CLEANLINESS OF CHASTITY, TEMPERANCE, GENTLENESS AND OF ECONOMIC JUSTICE, WHICH OF COURSE CANNOT EXIST WITHOUT LOVE. The lover not only refrains from trying to get the most and best for himself, but he does not want it.

I believe in all reforms that look toward the abolition of old customs and institutions that are no longer appropriate to our present apprehension of the great truth of brotherhood, and the creation of truer and more beautiful forms; but more deeply do I believe in the spirit of love that must be the creator of those forms and our identification with that.

"Most of us," as some one has well said, "have learned to pay one hundred cents on the dollar, that we ought to be kind to dumb animals and the like"; what we now need is a great insweeping tide of love that shall help us to really enter the lives of others, AND SHALL BRING THEM INTO OUR LIVES AS PARTS OF OUR OWN SOULS, having equal claim on us as our children, and in fact our own selves.

"What especial phase of the 'New Thought' does your Fellowship represent?" I was asked. I was glad of the opportunity to reply that our one "fad" was the WISH AND EFFORT TO BE GOOD—THAT WE ASPIRED TO BE A "SOCIETY FOR THE PROMOTION OF GOODNESS."

I have sat in a Friends' meeting when the auditors were voluntarily giving themselves to meditation and prayer, and have felt the moral and spiritual impulse of the atmosphere so deeply that I verily believe that if I had been unconsciously placed there, I would have felt the waves of aspiration and high resolve impinge on my soul. If we lived like that all the while, waiting to hear the voice of the Eternal, waiting that the soul within us might speak, we would not merely have but one great prophet among us, but we would speak such words of authority as would bring conviction and health to the souls of men.

A church of people like that would need no temple constructed with hands; it would create such an atmosphere as would cause people to know they were immortal souls and must live with immortal beauty. "Fear God, and where you go, men shall think they walk in hallowed cathedrals."

4. The members of the Church of the Spirit are lovers, and find their reward in the act, not in any appreciation or results.

"It has seemed to me lately more possible than I knew, to carry a friendship greatly on one side, without due correspondence on the other. Why should I cumber myself with the poor fact that the receiver is not capacious? It never troubles the sun that some of his rays fall wide and vain into ungrateful space, and only a small part of the reflecting planet. Let your greatness educate the crude and cold companion. If he is unequal, he will presently pass away; but thou art enlarged by thy own shining; and, no longer a mate for frogs and worms, dost soar and burn with the gods of the empyrean. It is thought a disgrace to live unrequited. But the great will see that true love cannot be unrequited. True love transcends instantly the unworthy object, and dwells and broods on the eternal; and when the poor interposed mask crumbles, it is not sad, but feels rid of so much earth, and feels its independency the surer. Yet these things may hardly be said without treachery to the relation. The essence of love is entireness, a total magnanimity and trust* * * It treats its object as a god, that it may deify both."

The late Hopkins Hadley, one who had risen from the slums of immorality, and then for many years was used in strong and tender service to fellow-souls, became greatly interested in one man who had fallen low in sin. He helped him up, and acted toward him, spiritually and practically in a most brotherly manner. But, after this life had become cleaner externally, this man treated Mr. Hadley with brutal ingratitude. He cast aspersions on Mr. Hadley's character, made unkind and untrue insinuations concerning him, while accepting his aid. But Mr. Hadley was not working for a personal reward and was unswervingly true to him, through good report and ill report. Then the man disappeared. Diligent search was made for him. He was found in the charity ward of a hospital, nearly dying from the effects of a street accident. "And do you know," said the dear apostle of love, in relating the incident afterwards, "I could hardly convince him that I fully forgave him for his ingratitude." But the great, warm-hearted love brought its own conviction finally, and so released that soul from its bonds of low selfishness, that the man became truly repentant and for the several months before he passed away, lived a beautiful and Christ-like life.

Mr. Hadley used to say, "When the men learn that we have down here in Water street a stock of love that cannot be exhausted, they are saved."

The Church of the Spirit has such a stock of love as that.

5. And also it knows, this Church of the Spirit, that heaven is no place of distant attainment, that, in the deeper sense, it is not even something to be built up in this world, but that it is all about and around and within us—that its essential qualities and characteristics are recognition of the divinity of all souls and all things; the faith and hope and joy born of such a recognition are divine sympathy and service and unfailing, selfish love. It is possible to live consciously in this heaven, right here and now, and reveal it to others, also.

Col. Irish of Oakland told a very beautiful incident that happened under his observation when he was officially visiting the state's prison in Iowa some years ago. He was there on Sunday morning, and a man was preaching what would be called the "Old Gospel," and told the men how wicked they were and that they ought to realize their sins. They knew enough about their sins, they had heard enough about them, and their faces hardened, and they looked despondent and angry. He happened to be there a little later when a good old Quaker was preaching. Instead of telling them about their vices, he told them about their virtues, and that none of them realized how helpful they might be to their fellows there and on the outside, and the faces of the men lit up, and if they had not been prevented by the rules, they would have crowded around the preacher to get hold of his hand. He lived some miles away, and a little later there came a message from the warden, who said, "There are two men here who heard you speak in the prison, and they want to know if they may join your church." And he wrote back, "Certainly, I will bring the church over on a certain day and take them in." So he went on a certain day with some of his flock and welcomed those men into the fellowship of their society, and they visited them and watched over them, and when the day came for them to come out, he was there to meet them with suits of new clothes, not the ordinary garb that is given to discharged prisoners, but with garments that were prepared for them and that fitted them and made them look like gentlemen. One had been a carpenter and one a blacksmith. And he drove them back in his carriage to the place where he lived, and drove up to a carpenter shop and he took one inside and there was a new little shop, fitted up properly with an outfit for doing efficient work, and he said, "My brother, this is thy shop." He took the other man to a blacksmith shop, ready for service, and he said, "My brother, this is thy blacksmith shop." Our Quaker preacher had sent even across the sea and to a distant state, and had gathered up their wives and children from whom they had been separated so long, and he had furnished houses and put the wives and children in them, and he took them to their homes and said to one and the other, "This is thy home," and the last my friend heard of them they were living with the respect and esteem of the community.

Was not that a Church of the Spirit, the spirit of brotherhood, of loving service, of faith in God and man,—the Holy Spirit?

Who knoweth but we are "come to the kingdom for such a time as this?" Shall not the Fellowship be a Church of the Spirit?

"'Tis not by creed, or even deed, alone,
We can atone, fully atone.

"All life, power, influence, beauty, merit,
Are in the Spirit, are in the Spirit.

"Spirit of faith, hope, purity,
Spirit of clearest sincerity,
Spirit of loving sympathy
With each son of humanity.

Spirit that neither stays nor turns,
But with high, selfish ardor burns,
Ever new grace and wisdom learns,
Nor lesson from the lowliest spurns.
Spirit unquenchable, that soars
To where God's sunlight ever pours,
And in the soul its radiance stores,
Spirit that knows not bars nor doors.

"All life, power, influence, beauty, merit,
Are in such Spirit, such Holy Spirit.

"For the Church of the Spirit the world doth wait,
Before Life opens now the gate.
To meet such majestic, joyful fate,
Ah! Church of the Spirit, be thou not late!

"Church of the Spirit, God calls to thee,
Anoints thine eyes. Look up and see.

"Church of the Spirit, thy call is come,
Be thou no longer dead and dumb!

"Church of the Spirit, this call is thine, Arise and shine! arise and shine!"

A GRAND AND NOBLE WORK.

The Home for Tiny Waifs, at La Crescenta, Cal, Commenced by Mrs. M. Longley, Secretary of the N. S. A.

To the readers of The Progressive Thinker:

It gives me much pleasure to commend to your careful consideration a noble work that is being carried on by Mr. and Mrs. Sullivan, and one good friend—all hard working people who have no means but what they earn by their daily toil. This work is the maintenance of a pretty and comfortable home for little waifs who are gathered in from the byways and dusty places of poverty and want, and provided with the love and blessings that only sympathetic and tender souls can give. The little home is in La Crescenta, California, near Los Angeles; it is a pretty cottage surrounded by Nature's handiwork, where simple but wholesome food and the beauties of "The Simple Life" are the daily fare. All share alike—caretakers and children—they eat no meat, but are nourished by the products of the earth which are so abundantly yielded in that sunny clime. There are now five little darlings in the home, rescued from the streets, children bright and active, giving promise of good and beautiful manhood and womanhood. The angels bless them.

Mr. and Mrs. Sullivan have mortgaged their share of the little home to provide food and raiment for these little ones; they are in great need of funds to carry on the work. They do not receive one penny for their work, but they put into the labor of love every dollar that they and an unselfish friend can.

Mrs. Sullivan in earlier days was associated with Dr. Newbrough, who founded the home of waifs in Mexico. Many old-time Spiritualists remember what a grand medium Dr. Newbrough was when he lived in New York City, and how he received the matter for "Oahspe," from the spirit world. Mrs. S. is carrying out in practical work the teachings of those good spirits, and of the Nazarene in obeying the divine injunction, "Feed my lambs."

I am writing this, to ask the readers of the dear old Progressive Thinker, who will aid practically in feeding these little ones? Mrs. Sullivan tells me in eloquent writings that she receives many letters and speeches praising her for her work, telling her what a noble reward she will gain hereafter and full of expressions of sympathy, but scarcely ever a penny to aid in feeding the children.

This is all wrong. LET US DO SOMETHING!

I will this day send Mrs. Sullivan two dollars to aid in her work, and pledge her the same sum annually. WHO WILL DO WHAT THEY CAN in the same line? DO NOT WRITE ME, but SEND YOUR AID; words of sympathy and MONEY TO MRS. NELLIE F. SULLIVAN, La Crescenta, Cal.

With loving greetings to all readers of this paper, in whom I have sufficient confidence to believe they will aid this noble work of the Sullivans.

What Happens Some Nights With the Babies at "Cuddle Doon."

I try to lull the babies by reciting "Cuddle Doon,"
But I find unless its 9 o'clock I'm trying it too soon.
They want a drink of water, or another "bite" to eat,
Or else I just remember—I forgot—to wash their feet.

Now such a break in discipline just sets them up in glee;
I sometimes feel before we're through, I'll take them 'cross my knee,
But their mirth is just so innocent, temptation passes soon,
And mamma snugs them back to bed and whispers "Cuddle Doon."

Now the dialect of Cuddle Doon is Scotch, and—ours—by turns,
And I always speak it humbly, with apologies to Burns.
But it's easy to say "Bairnies" and "I try to gie a froon,"
And it's all the same to babies if it ends with "Cuddle Doon."

Soon the baby eyes grow sleepy, but the boys refuse to yield,
And the sandman has to struggle hard or seek another field.
I tell them "fever's comin' in," and he'll settle them right soon;
But they only laugh as "wee Rab" did, and shout for "Cuddle Doon."

They even shriek with laughter at "Tam's kittl'n' wi' his taes,"
And I finally must give it up and try more soothing ways.
I resort to things less foreign; sing the old song, "Baby Mine,"—
Some home-like thing is better than to thwart my own design.

At last the sandman conquers, peaceful rest four towsel'd heads.
Little prayers are softly uttered, from four little tows'ls beds;
And the watcher knows to them has come tired nature's sweetest boon,
And is thankful that her treasures can so safely Cuddle Doon.

NEED OF EDUCATED SPEAKER.

And the Equal Need of Educated Societies.

We notice that some of the recent writers in The Progressive Thinker bemoan the lack of educated speakers in the spiritual ranks.

Is there not a lack of societies to give employment at a fair remuneration to those speakers already in the work? Where is there a speaker, even of the highest ability, that does not have to do quite an amount of planning and corresponding to fill their dates for a year ahead? Of course, there are some who have more applications than they can fill, but not many.

Would it not be a grand idea to try and educate societies to the point that they can appreciate an intelligent, educated speaker? As long as societies will pay more for an uneducated, undeveloped medium (with perhaps a still more ignorant control) than they will for a man or woman who can teach them something, what is there to call young men and women of ability into the work?

We believe that Massachusetts is as well supplied with societies employing speakers, as any part of the country, but there is not enough even here, to keep all our good speakers at work. Boston, the largest city in New England, with its thousands of Spiritualists, has but two regularly organized societies, the one presided over by the Rev. F. A. Wiggin, and the Spiritual Temple society. Haverhill has two the old Helping Hand society, and one conducted by Mr. S. S. Ham. The Lowell society have made quite a beginning on a fund towards building a church, and have recently had a bequest of five thousand dollars, conditional on the raising of a certain sum. Methuen is also working for a church with a fair degree of success. Lawrence has a German society occupying their own building, and a meeting conducted by Mrs. Nellie E. Abbott, which deserves special mention.

Mrs. Abbott, who is a good medium, and a conscientious Spiritualist, feeling the need of a meeting place in Lawrence for the English-speaking Spiritualists, hired a hall and has conducted meetings on her own responsibility for two years or more, and has made herself and the work so respected that she was given a table at the annual May Breakfast of the Associated Charities, and she made as fair a showing as any of the churches When the state of the finances permits, she hires speakers, at other times she does the work herself, assisted by her daughters, one of whom is an accomplished elocutionist and the other a fine pianist. Mrs. Abbott stands ready to turn the hall and meeting over to an organized society at any time when she can see a prospect of such society being conducted along proper lines and by proper persons.

Newburyport has two societies employing speakers, and one in the adjoining city of Amesbury; the Cadet Hall society of Lynn holds meetings every Sunday in the year and try to have the best talent possible. There are prosperous societies in Springfield, Fall River, Waltham, Cambridge, Brockton, Malden, New Bedford, Worcester and other places, besides several holding meetings week-nights only, but with all these there are ten times as many Spiritualists outside of the societies as inside.

Would it not be a good idea for the N. S. A. to send missionaries to the large cities to try and convert the Spiritualists over again? Suppose they hire a good smart organizer (what orders and lodges call working deputy) to work in New York, Chicago and other large centers to try and arouse the avowed Spiritualists to a sense of the responsibility they owe the cause and their spirit friends. Get a list of all known to be Spiritualists, and visit them in their homes and have a heart-to-heart talk with them. It would need a good persuasive talker, a man of good address and pleasing personality as well as a whole lot of tact in approaching people. He need not necessarily be a medium or a lecturer; if Spiritualists could be enthused, made to feel their duty and to do it, there would soon be occupation for the most talented speakers in the world.

In the city of Lynn, the churches take a church census about every five years; it is being taken at the present time. Young lady volunteers from all the churches, each having their own district, go from door to door asking, "what church do you attend?" with the object that every family may be brought under the influence of some church. At the time the last census was taken, the young lady who called at the door of the writer, exclaimed, when told that the whole family were Spiritualists, "My, what a lot of Spiritualists I do find!" It would be interesting to get a glimpse of the figures when the present count is completed, to ascertain how much gain there has been in the past five years.

We believe that efficient work could be accomplished, both for the N. S. A. and for the cause in general, by sending out energetic workers along this line, trying to bring those already believers in Spiritualism, into the organized work.

Let us educate Spiritualists to do their duty by organizing and supporting societies, and educate societies to the point that they will demand and are willing to pay for an educated ministry; we believe the supply will meet the demand.

THIS BEAUTIFUL EARTH.

Why We Should Be Thankful for the Privilege of Life.

What a delightful world is this in which we have the glorious privilege to live. It is the grand handiwork of Infinite Power, and it is advancing along the difficult pathway of progress as rapidly as it well can. How very fortunate we are to have been born into this earthly heritage. The progress of the world very often seems to be extremely slow, but we must remember that Nature never hurries; nor does it need to, for eternity is endless. In the vernacular of creation there is no beginning nor end; all is an eternal now.

In our journey through life we are compelled to encounter a severe struggle for existence, and none have been able to escape it. But it has been a necessary struggle in order to prepare us for that higher and wider life which awaits us over there. Our earthly trials and tribulations fit our individualized souls as molecules of Infinite Power.

God's green earth, as well as the limitless universe through which it swings in its orbit, is a thing of matchless beauty. Behold the grandeur of the starry-decked heavens, contemplate the blue canopy above us and the green carpet of the earth's surface; look out upon the variegated landscape of the continent and the solemn magnificence of the briny ocean; feast upon the numberless beauties of Nature which surround you on every side, and be thankful that you have been permitted to become an individual soul. Not only are we permitted to enjoy the pleasures of earthly life, but we are allowed to drink the heavenly dew of the Hereafter. Dr. Holland has most sweetly sung:

"If thou hast apprehended well
The tender glory of a flower,
Which moved thee, by some subtle power
Whose source and sway thou couldst not tell;

If thou hast kindled to the sweep
Of stormy clouds across the sky,
Or gazed with tranced and tearful eye,
And swelling breast upon the deep;

If thou hast felt the throb and thrill
Of early day and happy birds,
While peace, that drowned thy chosen words,
Has flowed from thee in glad good will,

Then thou hast drunk the heavenly dew;
Then have thy feet in rapture trod
The pathway of a thought of God;
And death can show thee nothing new."

Let us rejoice that we have been the favored recipients of eternal life, let us make the most we can of the opportunities given us during our incarnate existence, so that when the glad summons comes to pass the glorious portals of death, we will be fully prepared to enter upon the more important duties which invitingly await us

"In the kingdom of Ponemah
In the land of the hereafter."

CARL C. POPE.

LOVE CALLED YOU HOME.

Love called you home, and though I mourn,
I am not selfish in my grief
Enough to wish you back again,
Within this life, so cold and brief.

Love called you home. He knew how worn
You were with journeying to and fro
In desert places. From your hands,
How many treasures you'd let go.

Love called you home, to meet once more.
The faces you in sorrow kissed;
Then laid to rest. To find somewhere
What here your heart so sadly missed.

Love called you home, and some glad day,
Perhaps you know, dear, when 'twill be;
Across the winding stream of death,
I'll hear him softly call for me.

Sinful Natures.

I see that some persons still cling to the old belief that man was started on a high moral plane, but that he at once began to degenerate.

Every person lives his or her nature, and Adam and Eve—if there were such persons—were no exception. If they sinned at the outset, it was because they were created with a sinful nature, for they were no more the creator of their desires than they were of their bodies. If they had been perfect beings they would not have eaten of the forbidden fruit, as alleged.

There are to-day men and women too good to feel tempted to do wrong, yet the church says they are sinners because Adam and Eve were.

Theologians seem to overlook the fact that Christ also would have inherited a sinful nature from his mother, even if his father was immaculate. Then it is said that Christ was sorely tempted in all respects like ourselves—that is, like the whole human race. There is something wrong here, for if he was a perfect being he would not have had any wrong desire, and consequently would not feel temptation as alleged. Christ said that if a man looked lustfully on a woman he had already in his heart committed adultery. So the statements that he was a perfect man, but was sorely tempted in every direction are not at all consistent. These inconsistencies are left for theologians and the church to struggle with.

Remarkable Invention.

AN INSTRUMENT THAT RESTORES EYESIGHT.

Spectacles Can Be Abandoned.

This instrument, which the inventors have patented, is called "Actina"—a trade-mark word.

In the treatment of eye diseases the inventors of "Actina" claim there is no need for cutting or drugging the eye for most forms of disease. Cataracts, pterygi, and other abnormal growths can be removed and weakened vision improved or restored by the new and more humane method. If this is a fact there will be no need to go blind or to wear spectacles.

"Actina has been tested in hundreds of cases and has affected marvelous cures. So confident are the inventors that this device is an article of great merit that they give absolutely a free trial. They want everyone interested to make a thorough investigation and a personal test of "Actina." One will be sent on trial postpaid:

They issue a book of 100 pages—a complete dictionary of disease—which tells all about "Actina," the diseases it will cure, what others think of it, what marvelous cures it has affected, and all about the responsibility of its owners—all is sent absolutely free upon request. This book should be in the library of every family. Address New york and London Electric Association, Dept, 342R, 929 Walnut Street Kansas City, Mo.

TWO IN ONE

A COMBINATION OF

"The Question Settled" and "The Contrast" Into one Volume.

BY MOSES HULL.

This highly instructive and interesting work is a combination into one volume of two of Mr. Hull's splendid works. By this arrangement the cost is such that the reader is enabled to secure the two books combined at the same price as was formerly asked for them separately. This volume contains 463 pages and is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains an excellent portrait of the author.

THE QUESTION SETTLED

is a careful comparison of Biblical and Modern Spiritualism. No book of the century has made so many converts to Modern Spiritualism as this. The author's aim, faithfully to compare the Bible with modern phenomena and philosophy, has been accomplished. The adaptation of Spiritualism to the wants of humanity; its moral tendency; the Bible Doctrine of angel ministry; the spiritual nature of man, and the objections offered to Spiritualism, are all considered in the light of the Bible, nature, history, reason and common sense, and exposed clearly and forcibly.

THE CONTRAST

consists of a critical comparison of Evangelicalism and Spiritualism. It is a most able production, and is a perfect storehouse of facts for those who wish to defend Spiritualism, or find arguments against the assumptions of Orthodoxy.

General Survey.

The Spiritualistic Field—Its Workers, Its Work, and General Progress, the World Over.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper. Please bear this in mind.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

THIS GENERAL SURVEY DEPARTMENT IS ONLY INTENDED TO CHRONICLE THE ENGAGEMENTS AND WORK OF SPEAKERS AND MEDIUMS. A REPORT OF WHAT THE VARIOUS SPEAKERS SAY WILL NOT BE PUBLISHED, AS WE HAVE NOT SPACE SUFFICIENT FOR THAT PURPOSE.

The Song Cards for sale at this office at $4 per hundred, are the help you need in society work.

J. C. Craig, formerly a prominent lawyer and Spiritualist of Clyde, Ohio, and a medium of rare powers, has removed to Los Angeles, Cal., and has taken up his residence at No. 203 W. 50th street. He will practice law, and and lecture on subjects connected with the Harmonial Philosophy.

Eva L. Stewart writes: "The Hyde Park Occult society was entertained on the 2nd by a fine address by H. L. Fraser. He was complimented by many after the services. After his talk he answered folded questions to the satisfaction of all. He conducted the circle on Tuesday evening, and all who came got a reading. Our next dance will be on December 20. Mr. Robert Gilray, formerly of this city, but now from the mining district of the west, will speak for us on December 16. All his old friends will be glad to hear him."

Wallace H. Moore writes: "Mrs. Marian Carpenter of Detroit, Mich., has just completed a month's work at the State Street Temple, Columbus, O. She has had splendid audiences from the start, and her farewell meeting was an ovation. The large Temple was well filled, notwithstanding the fact there were four other societies holding services in the city at the same time. At the close of the meeting a demonstration took place that must have been very gratifying to the lady. A great throng of her admirers rushed to the front of the platform and there in the midst of a wilderness of extended hands, she returned to each a friendly clasp and kind farewell. In looking back over her month's work, I wondered wherein lay her power to secure the sympathy of all. Soon the reason became apparent. I found it to be in her constitutional make up. It lies in her character; her heart beats in tender sympathy for all humanity. She possesses in a large degree the spirit of the Nazarene. She has great charity for the sinner, but rarely condemns the sin. The cause here has been wonderfully helped by her ministrations. She has filled many sorrowing hearts with hope and courage through her messages from the dear ones gone before. Should she ever visit Columbus again, she will be welcomed by an audience that will fill the Temple to overflowing."

Dr. R. T. Hedricks writes from Greensboro, N. C.: "The dear and very highly esteemed sister, Carrie C. Van Duzee, although only seventy-seven years young, delivered some of the most soul-uplifting lectures that ever mortal ear has listened to, and her tests are always recognized. We have parlor seances every Thursday and Sunday night at 7:30, and would be glad if any Spiritualist might be passing this way to call at 219 Lindsay street, or if there are any liberally-inclined readers of The Progressive Thinker living in the Gate City, we kindly invite them to attend these seances at the same number."

G. H. Brooks writes from Pittsburg, Pa.: "I began this month's work the first Sunday in December, for the First Spiritual Church of Pittsburg, Pa., Mr. C. L. Stevens, president of the society, with fine audiences both morning and evening. I met many of the old friends, and was well received by all. My address while in Pittsburg will be 205 Bouquet street. I am right near the Church, and will respond to calls for funerals. Send all mail and telegrams to the above number. I expect to resume my labors in Wisconsin in January. The State Society is to hold another mass meeting in Milwaukee sometime in February. Please keep watch for dates and talent. The work here in Pittsburg is progressing finely."

Mrs. Arris, the medium, writes: "I wish to thank the many friends who aided me by their kindly thoughts and in a financial way during my illness in the hospital, and would say that I often felt the incoming wave of health, both from earth and spirit friends. I also realized the spirit friends with me sustaining me as I went on the operating table, so that I cast myself fearlessly into their care."

AS A GENERAL RULE, IN THIS OFFICE WE PAY NO ATTENTION TO ANONYMOUS COMMUNICATIONS. THE NAME AND ADDRESS OF THE WRITER SHOULD ACCOMPANY ALL MATTER, OF WHATEVER KIND, SENT TO THIS OFFICE.

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

ALWAYS GIVE YOUR FULL NAME AND ADDRESS WHEN SENDING NOTICES AND COMMUNICATIONS FOR PUBLICATION, OTHERWISE THEY WILL FIND THEIR WAY TO THE WASTE BASKET.

Dr. R. McL. Angus writes: "If there are mediums who think themselves able to take charge of a club, I would like to hear from them. We want one who can lecture and give tests in public. Here is a chance for a young medium to come to the front. Address all mail to Dr. R. McL. Angus, 313 Huron street, Port Huron, Mich."

George Bush writes: "The Manchester Society of Progressive Spiritualists, yesterday, had the pleasure of the services of Dr. Edgar W. Emerson, of this city, who is one of their favorite speakers. His morning address was excellent. After the address forty minutes were used in messages, in which his spirit controls exhibited more knowledge of relatives of individuals present than they knew themselves. The descriptions of spirits, their names, the relation to the parties designated, ages and spirits' relation to each other, were clearly given, and recognized by parties given to. Truly Mr. Emerson is a convincing medium to the most skeptical."

T. A. Thompson writes: "Mrs. Margarite Vestal closed her trumpet work here last evening for the present. This is the seventh winter she has been here, one month each time. She has held eighteen seances, and given many private readings during this visit, which have given perfect satisfaction, enabling mortals to commune with spirit friends and know they live in the beyond, and can commune with mortals. The manifestations have been more distinct and satisfactory than formerly, showing improvement. She leaves here to-day to be absent till after the holidays, when she expects to return for considerable time in this city and surrounding towns. Anyone desiring to communicate with her can address her at 812 N. Lawrence avenue, Wichita, Kan., care of T. A. Thompson."

D. A. Herrick commenced a two-months' engagement with the East Side Church in Columbus, Ohio, Sunday, Dec. 2. He will make engagements for lectures or seances during the week within a reasonable distance; also answer calls for funerals. Address in care of General Delivery.

Corresponding Secretary, E. J. Trott, writes from Everett, Mass.: "The American Psychical Research Society, Harvey Redding, president. Meetings opened October 1, in Legion of Honor Hall, 200 Huntington ave. These meetings are replete with interest, harmony and good will. The attendance has been large and thorough satisfaction given by Mr. Redding with his powerful addresses, his subjects being taken from the Book of Luke, 'Truth, Benevolence,' etc., being among the topics. His delineations are satisfactory. Mr. Redding is assisted by the following talent: Mr. and Mrs. Osgood F. Stiles, Mrs. Abbie Burnham, Mrs. Pye, Mrs. Williams, Mrs. Mary Lovering, Mrs. Alfred Pierce and Mrs. Frank Vickery; Mrs. Marie Bora, pianist, and Miss Lottie Abramson, soloist. Thursday evening meetings are held at the home of the president, 202 Main street, Everett. They are well attended, Mr. Redding giving delineations."

Mrs. J. Lindsey, the medium, writes from Grand Rapids, Mich. She is in the hospital there, and while improving, she can not as yet walk. The great truths of Spiritualism give her much joy. She watches each week for the coming of The Progressive Thinker, and greatly enjoys reading it. Let us all hope and pray that she may regain her health soon.

M. Lizzie Beals, secretary, writes of the Worcester Association of Spiritualists, G. A. R. Hall, 35 Pearl street: "For the first two Sundays in November Miss Blanche H. Brainard of Lowell ocupied our platform. Her lectures were well received by the large audience present. Each contains something we can take home with us and apply in our daily lives. Her communications were accurate and all readily recognized. Dr. Geo. A. Fuller of New York, served our society the last two Sundays in November. His lectures have given us food for thought for some time to come. The lessons of the hour were ably presented and defined. The Woman's Auxiliary held their regular meeting Wednesday, Nov. 21. Supper was served at the usual hour. At 8 p. m., Dr. Fuller delivered a lecture upon 'Mediumship,' which was full of interest and instruction to all who were privileged to attend."

Frank T. Ripley is now serving the First Society of Spiritualists at Battle Creek, Mich., for the Sundays of December. He would like to lecture and give messages on week evenings in the state. Terms reasonable. Address all letters to him in care of General Delivery, Battle Creek, Mich.

A lady asks the following question: "Is it possible that one becomes more positive in nature by eating a large amount of meat every day?" According to the opinion of those high in spirit life, the eating of meat, especially rare roast beef, has a tendency to increase the positiveness of an individual, and will sometimes assist greatly in curing obsession, or destroying that sensitiveness so conducive to mediumship.

An Appeal for Names of Spiritualists in the State of Washington.

J. R. Burton, engaged in the defense of mediums in Washington, would like the names and address of all the Spiritualists in the state, with whom to communicate. Address him at No. 1613 Fourth avenue, Seattle, Wash.

T. H. Anderson, in renewing his subscription writes: "I am an elderly person, in my 87th year, but young in Spiritualism. I have, however, seen enough to say, 'I am a dyed-in-the-wool believer.' I wonder why the N. S. A. and leading members in the truth of Spiritualism, do not take some DIRECT STEP to weed out the frauds who are running the country over, gulling the people, and doing great damage to the cause. If good mediums, who are clairvoyant, and clairaudient, together with a wise spirit, should visit the advertised seances, they could at once tell a fake from a genuine medium, and take steps to drive him (or her) out of his nefarious business. Spiritualism is a truth, and here to stay, and the sooner impostors are weeded out the better. He or she who would take advantage of a little mediumship to fleece the public with false appliances and seances, ought to be driven to the wall at once."

Chester Clark writes from Passadena, Cal.: "I do not want The Progressive Thinker to stop sending its vast amount of valuable reading matter. I have taken it a long time, and I want it to continue. We want the truth; no faking. We have a good many mediums here in California. We are trying to keep the ball rolling by holding meetings and circles. Trying to set good examples for others to follow."

G. L. Willms writes: "A large audience greeted the North Star Spiritual Union at its hall, 1546 Milwaukee avenue, Sunday evening, Nov. 25. Mr. Max Hoffmann gave a fine lecture on the progress of Modern Spiritualism and the Brotherhood of Man. It was applauded repeatedly. He gave some fine messages also. Sister Mueller also gave some fine messages and reading of articles. On Sunday, Dec. 2, Sister Mueller opened the meeting with a short lecture, followed by Brother Vanderhoogt, after which Sister Mueller gave some excellent messages and reading of articles."

The Chronicle of Charlotte, N. C., has the following in reference to that remarkable medium, Mr. Letford: "It is always a jolly day when Mr. George Letford, Bucklen's advertising man, drops in, which he does regularly once a year. The Chronicle was pleased to have a call from him today. Letford is perhaps the most popular advertising man in the South, and this is because he is not a knocker, but just the opposite. He is one of the men with whom it is always a pleasure to do business and there are a good many papers in North Caroline that will back up the Chronicle's estimate of him."

Dr. Sarah M. Dudley writes from Covington, Ky.: "Wanted, by January 1, a position with some Spiritualist society, as inspirational speaker and platform test medium. Reference given. Address Sarah M. Dudley, 145 East 17th street, Covington, Ky."

Peter L. Loeb writes frm Brooklyn, N. Y.: " Church of the Divine Light hold services every Sunday evening at Hart's Hall, Gates avenue. A Building Fund has been created so that in some future time we will be able to worship in our own home. Any friends and co-workers wishing to help us in our grand work for the good of all mankind, will kindly correspond with me at No. 708 Hancock street, Brooklyn, N. Y."

Rev. Alice Baker writes: "I closed my work in Lauton, Sunday, November 25, by helping to organize a society with Mr. Rankin, proprietor of the Rankin Hotel, as president, and M. Parmenter, secretary. I commenced work here November 26, with a full house. The president, secretary and one of the trustees were here to meet me and assist in the work, each one of them traveling long distances to be here. This is a small town and strictly orthodox, but the outlook is very promising. I wish to hear from all the Spiritualists in Oklahoma, to complete future routes of work. Direct all communications to home address, 449 Live Oak street, Dallas, Texas."

A lady, a medium, wants board and room; vegetarian family preferred. Address "M.," care of The Progressive Thinker.

Carelessness is common, no doubt to human nature, and the following illustrates the fact, the writer omitting name: "I wish to thank you for sending me your valuable paper during our illness and recovery, hoping before long to be able to do my part—perhaps by the first of the year. I have been working in the eastern part of Colorado during the summer, and came here to be treated by Dr. C. H. Carson, and feel I am coming out all right very soon. I will be pleased to receive short engagements from societies. We are prepared to teach every branch of the philosophy or phenomena of Spiritualism. Engagements in the state of Kansas preferred. All mail will be received at Dr. C. H. Carson Institute, 12th and Washington streets, Kansas City, Mo."

Scientific Spiritual Church holds regular services every Sunday at 2:30 and 7:30 p. m., in Star Lodge Hall, 378 S. Western avenue, corner Lexington street, conducted by M. L. Schaeffer, president, assisted by others. The elevation of Spiritualism is our aim. Residence 41 S. Sangamon street.

S. A. Huntington writes from Malden, Mass.: "Malden Progressive Spiritual Society, 138 Pleasant street, Louise Hall Mrs. F. S. Sheriff, president. At the Sunday services, Dec. 2, the president presided at both sessions with Miss Mabel Carter at the piano. At the afternoon circle, Mr. Richard L. Bishop of Lynn, made a very interesting address on the subject, "Is Spiritualism a Religion?" maintaining that it is, drawing much of his proof from the Bible. He with Mrs. Smith, of Everett, and Mrs. Morton of Malden, devoted nearly an hour to messages. At the evening meeting Mrs. M. A. Bonney of Roxbury occupied the platform, prefacing her work by reading a beautiful poem, entieled, 'Will My Friends Know Me?' She then chose as her theme, 'Experiences and the Unseen,' delivering a very interesting address. The speaker then devoted three-quarters of an hour to giving many beautiful messages. Mr. Geo. L. Baker of Boston will occupy the platform Sunday evening, December 9. Circle every Thursday evening at 7:30."

C. L. H. writes from Boston, Mass.: "Appleton Hall, 9 Appleton street, Boston, Mass. The First Spiritualist Ladies' Aid Society met as usual; the weather, though extremely cold, did not keep a great many away. After a bountiful supper an Experience Meeting was held, and many were the ways and devices by which the money was earned for this meeting. A good meeting was held afterward. Next Friday this society holds its Christmas Apron sale and everyone is invited to come here to purchase for Christmas. This is a charitable society, and all who patronize the sale will also help to assist some needy person."

D. G. Hill writes: "The Golden Rule Spiritualist Society held the usual interesting service the afternoon of December 2, with the pastor, Mrs. Nora E. Hill, speaker, and Bro Schmidt and Mrs. Nora E. Hill, message bearers. In the evening our commodious hall was filled to hear the last of a series of three lectures delivered by Mrs. Nora E. Hill, the subject being, 'Past, Present and Future.' The audience was held spellbound by the masterly way the subjects have been handled. Our speakers for Sunday evening, Dec. 16, will be that interesting and bright Mrs. J. L. Fravel, of Austin, for whom we hold much esteem and appreciation. O'Donnell College Hall, South Paulina street, between Washington boulevard and Park avenue. Remember bazaar and dance, Saturday afternoon and evening, Dec. 15, 1906."

J. A. Toren writes: "Dr. R. Greer, one of Chicago's prominent Spiritualists, will lecture for the Society of the Psychic Forces, Sunday evening, Dec. 16, at Wilcox Hall, corner of 43rd street and Champlain avenue. All are invited to come and hear him. Dr. J. H. Randall has during the past two Sundays given us his mental efforts, and will again lecture for us as frequently as his services can be obtained. The meetings of this society continue to be as interesting as ever, and no pains are spared in keeping the work of the cause of Spiritualism at the top notch. Special effort is made at all meetings to give the hungry food for thought. Let those who are still in the dark regarding the communion of saints come and learn a few facts. Mrs. Isa Cleveland gives clairvoyant and clairaudient messages at all meetings, and her work for the cause has never been better."

The following clipping from the Boston Transcript of Dec. 4, will be interesting to readers of The Progressive Thinker. The First Society of Universal Religion made a great financial success of the fair: "With Mrs. Emma Kendall of Malden, in charge, the annual fair in aid of the work of the First Society of Universal Religion was opened in Faelten Hall this morning. The green and white decorations were exceedingly effective and the place had a real holiday aspect with its many tables bountifully filled with attractive wares to tempt the purchaser. Mrs. Kendall, assisted by Mrs. M. B. Tibbetts of Natick, presided at the domestic table. Mrs. Davis of Newtonville, the vice-president, and Mrs. Bennett of Boston, the secretary, helped in various ways. Mrs. Helen G. Grumbine, Mrs. Bearse and Mrs. C. H. Webber had the fancy table and the candy booth, in the center of the hall, was in charge of Miss Alice Bigelow, Miss Elizabeth Grumbine, Miss Beatrice Grumbine and Miss Gueth. The book table also carried calendars and puzzles of many kinds. This booth was in charge of W. I. Burke of Malden. A generous friend of this movement contributed a beautiful print of Gounod and many of Frederick Remington's spirited sketches. This evening there is to be an entertainment in charge of C. H. Webber, music by a quartet, revelations of character by psycho-graphology by Mrs. Sears, fortunes by cards and the latest thing in the way of study of mind conditions, which is known as crystal aura. Rev. J. C. F. Grumbine, the minister of this society, was an active worker in the arrangements for the sale which will be brought to a close at ten o'clock this evening."

Mrs. Sexsmith writes: "The meeting of the Christian Spiritualists' society conducted by Mrs. Sarah Thomas, on Sunday, December 2, both afternoon and evening, was a time of rejoicing. We had with us Prof. Gilray, who has been absent from the city for some time. He gave a short talk of his experiences in the West, were he has been; Brother Smith following, with messages by Mrs. Nellie Kusserow. The evening meeting was the crowning one of the day, to listen to Dr. Geo. B. Warne, who never fails to win the hearts of the people. He spoke with a force that left the impression for good on all present. He will be with us again on Sunday evening, December 28. Messages were given by Miss Susie Thompson, Mr. Gustav Temple, Mrs. Ella J. Bloom. These meetings will continue every Sunday afternoon and evening at 3 and 8, p. m. Good speakers and mediums always present. At Conway Hall, Western avenue and Lake street."

Mrs. A. Birdsall writes from Jackson, Mich.: "Our society is thriving better than ever We have had the pleasure of having with us our notional President, H. D. Barrett, who gave while here, two lectures to large audiences. We are looking forward to his returning again in the near future. The following two Sundays Mrs. Belle Fuller, of Grand Rapids was with us. She is regarded by all as being the best test medium that has occupied our rostrum. Last Sunday Dr. P. T. Johnson, of Battle Creek, delivered lectures which were highly appreciated. He is worthy of all praise. He gave spirit tests, all of which were recognized. Our speaker next Sunday will be Dr. A. B. Spinney, of Belding, Mich."

Helen Stewart Richings is being kept busy in Ohio, New York and Pennsylvania, but would prefer engagements from three to six months at least, believing that only in this way can the greatest amount of work be done, and the best results realized. For such engagements, after this season Madam Stewart Richings would consider propositions, and give most reasonable terms. 1319 E. High street, New Philadelphia, O.

James H. Porter writes from Lafayette, Ind.: "I have been a Spiritualist for some time. I am a traveling man. I became acquainted with a party who was a great talker on nearly all subjects, and as he was something of a clairvoyant, was asked about the phase and I never knew him to get in conversation of any length along these lines but he got an admission from his hearers that they accepted the truth of his argument. This friend (J. Frank Lewis) is a small man of quiet manner, good principle, and gifted with a force of argument that brings results without bluster of bombast. I have seen missionaries who gave messages, mediums who gave manifestations, but Lewis meets the people on their own objections, explains the fraud question, etc, and usually wins out and secures another convert to the ranks of Spiritualism and a friend as well. It is a pity we have not more such as he in the field. An honest medium would do well here."

ANCIENT PAGAN AND MODERN CHRISTIAN SYMBOLISM.

By Thomas Inman, M. D. Revised and enlarged, with an Essay on Baal Worship, on "The Assyrian Sacred Grove," and other allied symbols. Third edition, with two hundred illustrations. Cloth, $1.

News From Galveston, Texas.

In May our speaker, Mr. Ring, left us; for over six months, our Temple remained closed, and we all missed the services, but our members did not become discouraged, and all labored together, and with Mr. Fries for a president, always ready and willing to do everything he could for the betterment of our society. I am glad to say, we are in a prosperous condition. On the 16th of the month Mrs. Henrietta Lichtig came from Chicago to assume the pastorate of the Temple, and already we have learned to love her, and feel that under her helpful ministrations the society will have more courage, and spring forth to greater activities. We hope, too, that she will be satisfied, and contented, for we will all do all in our power to render her stay with us a pleasing one.

Before I close I cannot refrain from saying a few words of Mr. Ring. For ten years he was with us, and to say we all loved him, scarcely expresses the feeling we had for him. In fact, we felt as if he belonged to us, but strange things happen in this "old world," and the time came that we had to give him up, for he severed the tie, not us; for a long time the Temple seemed lonely, for he was closely associated with it; but time heals everything, and we are in a measure reconciled, and hope most sincerely, that in his new home, he will be successful, and live many years, to preach Spiritualism, and carry the glad tidings that it brings, and never depart from it. MRS. J. E. MUNGER.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

James Brown passed to the higher life, Nov. 21, 1906, aged 67 years. He was a kind and affectionate husband, and loved by all who knew him. He was a patient sufferer but had the knowledge of a life beyond, having been a life-long Spiritualist. He leaves a wife and four sons, and will be missed by a large circle of friends, especially the society of Flint.

COR.

Mrs. Sarah Marlow passed to spirit life at Crystal Lake, Nov. 20, 1906, at the ripe age of 86 years and 6 months. She was united in marriage to James Marlow who preceded her to spirit life twenty years. This union had been one of love and unbroken by any discord or inharmony, and the thread broken here through the change called death will be taken up again by these dear ones. A very large concourse of friends assembled at the home where this good woman had spent fifty years of her life, to listen to the funeral discourse which was delivered by the writer. The floral offerings were beautiful and numerous, representing tokens of love from friends who loved her well.

GEORGIA GLADYS COOLEY.

At the home of his daughter, Mrs. Ida Fyler, in Shell Rock, Iowa, Nov. 21, Evi Sherman, aged 81 years, passed from earth life to enter into the fuller expression in the spirit world. He was an old-time Spiritualist, staunch in the faith. The funeral services took place at the home, Nov. 25, conducted by the writer. Interment at Poplar Grove, Ill.

CLARA STEWART KING.

Passed to spirit life, from San Antonio, Texas, Nov. 30, 1906, Mrs. Mary Smith, aged 69 years. Mrs. Smith was formerly from Boston, Mass., and was a sister of Mrs. Lincoln of Boston, who recently crossed over.

SIX HISTORIC AMERICANS.

A Book That Every American Freethinker Will Delight to Own.

By John E. Remsburg.

The work consists of two parts, "The Fathers of Our Republic," and "The Saviors of Our Republic." In regard to Paine's religious views, Mr. Remsburg establishes the negative of the following (1) Was Paine an Atheist? (2) Was he a Christian? (3) Did he recant? Page after page of the most radical freethought sentiments are culled from the correspondence and other writings of Franklin and Jefferson, which show that these men were as pronounced in the rejection of Christianity as Paine and Ingersoll. That Washington was not a Christian nor a believer in Christianity. In support of Lincoln's infidelity he has collected the testimony of more than one hundred witnesses.

The book is handsomely bound in cloth, giving fine portraits of George Washington, Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Paine, Thomas Jefferson, Abraham Lincoln and U. S. Grant; also portrait of the author.

This book contains 365 pages, printed on heavy paper, well bound in cloth. Price, $1.25. For sale at this office.

ETERNITY OF THE EARTH.

Electricity the Universal Force. By Daniel K. Tenney. A valuable book of 105 pages. Cloth, 75 cents.

LIFE'S PROGRESSION.

"There is no death; there are no dead."

These words stand out on the cover of Edward C. Randall's new book. They are a challenge to the orthodox world, and through all of its pages runs this challenge to those whose ideas of God, of heaven, of hell, of a future life are based strictly upon the Bible. Yet Mr. Randall believes in life hereafter, based on positive knowledge given him from the living friends passed to the life beyond. Price $1.50. For sale at this office.

CEDAR RAPIDS, IOWA.

A Letter From a Worker in the Cause.

Lest you forget that I am still in the material tenement, I deemed it best to greet my friends and patrons once more from my present headquarters.

I am still doing a good work in Cedar Rapids, in a very quiet way as yet. I find the majority of the better and thinking class of people, even members and elders of the churches here, are decidedly liberal and earnestly seeking for light and knowledge relative to the future life. I am informed also by the above-mentioned class, that Cedar Rapids was at one time a very earnest and sincere Spiritual town, and while they have not wholly denounced spirit return, they are very slow now to listen to our philosophy, our account of the many bogus workers who invade the ranks in our field, but I tell them Spiritualism is forward in the knowledge; that we Spiritualists have all there is on this material plane in the way of truth concerning the future life.

One of the pronounced society ladies here, and a devoted church member, lost her only son, about sixteen years of age, not long since, and she is inconsolable, finds no comfort in any of her past teachings or beliefs. A friend of this lady, and one who frequently visits me, has through my mentality received several messages from that dear young soul. My friend called upon the mother of the boy and said, "I wish you would go with me to my friend, Mrs. Jaquet, and I am sure will be comforted."

That poor, broken-hearted mother, replied, "Oh, I would love to, but oh, if I could only see him, and if I could not keep my darling boy, then I would indeed go mad."

But the loving angels, father and son are laboring with this dear mother and sister left in the material, for my friend said the other day, "I am sure Mrs. L. feels better, and will soon come with me to see you, for she sent for me to come over and talk with her."

My work here is not near finished. Thanking you for the many past favors, Brother and Sister Francis, and wishing my many friends and co-workers success the coming New year, I am in truth, yours, ELIZABETH J. JAQUET.

Psychic Light.

BY MRS. DRAKE.

Important Addition to Our Literature.

Mrs. Maud Lord Drake has a national reputation as a medium. The manifestations given through her mediumship have been most marvelous. She has written a book with this title: "PSYCHIC LIGHT—THE CONTINUITY OF LAW AND LIFE." It is a ponderous volume of 600 pages. It will hold your attention from the beginning to the end. It is chockful of stirring incidents. Price of this large volume, only $1.50 postpaid.

STARTLING FACTS, OR Deeds of Darkness Disclosed

This work devotes special attention to Auricular Confession and its relations to sacerdotal celibacy, convents, monasteries, morality and civil and religious liberty. It is intended to be an embodiment of facts and documentary evidence of the pernicious influence of the confessional; a trenchant showing up of Romanism, based upon standard Catholic authorities; an eye-opener concerning the methods and spirit, the moral turpitude and evil works of Romanism. Cloth, 75 cents.

THE BIBLE New and Revised Edition.

Authenticity, Credibility, Morality.

JOHN E. REMSBURG'S GREAT WORK

Ingersoll's desire that somebody should at last tell the whole truth about the Bible has been brilliantly fulfilled. No Freethinker worthy of the name can afford to pass over Remsburg's book in silence. Like Thomas Paine's "Age of Reason," may it, let us hope, find admirers and translators in other languages. And again, like Paine's book, may this brilliant work bring to its author the praise of posterity.—Der Freidenker (Milwaukee).

This great work on the Bible by Mr. Remsburg is most valuable—it is an encyclopedia of information in regard to the Bible, and surpasses in importance all other works of the kind now published. It is up-to-date in every particular. Price, $1.25.

MAHOMET His Birth, Character and Doctrine. By Edward Gibbon. This is No. 6 of the Library of Liberal Classics. It is conceded to be historically correct, and so exact and perfect in every detail as to be practically beyond the reach of adverse criticism. This work will be found intensely interesting. Price, 25 cents.

Taffeyrand's Letter to the Pope. This work will be found especially interesting to all who would desire to make a study of Romanism and the Bible. The historic facts stated, and the keen, scathing review of Romish ideas and practices should be read by all. Price 25 cents.

A. P. A. MANUAL A complete expose of the principles and objects of the American Protective Association. A book for all patriotic American citizens. Price, 15 cents or two for 25 cents.

The Religion of Science. By Dr. Paul Carus. Ver thoughtful and interesting. Price, 25 cents.

THE WIDOW'S MITE, AND OTHER PSYCHIC PHENOMENA

BY ISAAC K. FUNK.

A remarkable book, of intense interest to all, whether Spiritualists or Materialists, investigators or believers.

The author has embodied in this book an account of his wonderful personal experience, and has culled from other sources the experiences of others, including scientists of world-wide repute, making a volume of great value, 338 octavo pages. Price, cloth, $2.

The Nemesis of Chautauqua Lake This fascinating Book by the well-known Author and Scholar,

HON. A. B. RICHMOND,

Should be in the hands of every Spiritualist in the land. It is based on a historical fact, but through the narrative is woven a psychic line of thought in the style so natural to the great criminal lawyer that one can feel the author's very presence during its perusal. It is certainly interesting. Price, cloth, 75 cents.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Southerner: Q. The explanation of the following story I think will be of interest to many. During the Great War, a fierce engagement was fought with cavalry, in the wooded fields near a stream bordered by cane swamps, with patches of herbage on which cattle fed. Now this battlefield was not known by the younger generation, and had passed out of the memory of the older. It had, like many abandoned fields, become dense with trees and bushes, with openings and paths, where cows wandered away to the marshes. Two boys were sent after them, and having started them home they leisurely followed. The shadows began to rapidly lengthen as they hurried on. Then they were suddenly appalled by the rush of horsemen through the forest, the crackling of branches, and the tread of feet. The sound came round as though to cut off their retreat. Then for a moment silence reigned, and then the rushing of a horseman came sweeping by, turned and came on the other side retreating, growing fainter and fainter until lost in the distance. The boys did not wait for a third coming of the invisible host but ran for dear life homeward. When they told their story, many laughed as at a joke, but there were those who remembered that the engagement was fought by successive charges, and these thought that by some mysterious process the boys were influenced by the battle scene. How can the appearance be clearly explained?

A. Of the countless stories like this that have been recorded, a solution to be tenable must cover the whole ground and where there is such similarity, the source must be the same. It is all the fancy of credulity, or there is a cause by which the mystery is solved, and the knowledge of which brings the facts under the realm of law.

The easiest way is to say that the appearances are real. That the soldiers as spirits return to re-enact the deeds which engaged them in this life. The painter with weird art has fixed this idea on canvas, when above the battle-field he has pictured the ascending warriors, recommencing the fight out of which death has released them. But this idea cannot be entertained. That there should be even a desire for spiritual beings to preserve their military organization and go through the sham of battle, is not believable.

There is this statement which lies at the foundation of all this class of phenomena: Everything is impressed with everything with which it comes in contact. These impressions are retained for an indefinite time. There is a state of mind, called sensitiveness or impressibility, which is able to take up these influences and translate them into thought. A person having this ability, has the gates opened to a new world—that of spirit forces. This ability may not be permanent. It usually is, on the contrary, occasional, as a break in a cloud-covered sky. It may come only once in a life-time, and at present the causes and conditions which produce it are unknown. This much we are sure of, that intense thought, or concentration of the mind by expectation are conducive, and on the other hand the extreme of passivity.

To apply these principles to the story in hand. The boys had passed the woodland with their cows, almost daily for years, and heard nothing unusual. They were expecting nothing. The mysterious impress of the battle was retained and pulsated in the landscape. There was no instrument to detect these vibrations. The boys that afternoon, for some cause had become impressible. Before, they were unable to feel the vibrations; now for a time they could do so. If they had always passed the woodland blindfolded, they would not have seen a shrub or tree. For once the bandage removed they would be able to see. In similar manner they had been spiritually blind and for a brief space of time the curtain was lifted. Only this once, for although for years after they passed through these same paths for their cows and grew to manhood they never had a repetition. The bandage was not removed and they passed along blind to spiritual forces.

We leave the reader to apply this explanation to any or all facts within his observation, and we think it will not fail, in the whole wide realm of phenomena.

That all are capable of receiving such manifestations is proved by the fact that sometimes in the life of every one he has received them. When the essential conditions of this impressible state are known it will be possible to command this state, and thereby avail ourselves of its wonderful resources.

W. P. Brittain: Desires explanation of the following incidents. One evening, probably about midnight, something seemed to awake me. The moon at full, was shining into the room making it almost as day. I raised my eyes, and beheld what seemed to be a marble man, standing by the wall. I arose and approaching, saw that the face was that of my grandfather. I put out my hands and found it was only a shadow. I said to myself, This is a reflection of the "man in the moon," and I can no longer doubt that story. I thought if I should speak of my experience, I would be laughed at as having had a dream, so I awoke my wife and we watched the shadow, talking about it until it disappeared. I have tried time after time to arrange the lights so as to obtain a similar appearance, but have failed.

A. Mr. Brittain is an inventor and mechanician and has a keen power of observation, and his description of the appearance seems to shut out any and all physical causes. This is not a unique instance, but great numbers like or very similar have been recorded. The manifestation exactly accords with "etherealization," which spiritual beings at times find possible. To accomplish this they gather to themselves a sufficiency of matter to reflect light, and thus make themselves visible as shadowy forms.

It has been objected that they have never accomplished anything adequate by what to them must be a great effort. To this it may be replied, warnings of great value have thus been given, and it must be borne in mind that with the dense ignorance of spirit life which has prevailed, those who have witnessed such phenomena have given no aid nor taken advantage of the opportunity. The manifestations have come unexpectedly as a flash of lightning and been almost as brief.

In a well organized circle such manifestations may be obtained and studied at leisure.

DIVINITY DISPUTED.

Trenchant Facts in Relation to the Condition of the Religious World.

De Sertis has said, "There is not, and never can be, any pivotal individual on whom turns the salvation of man, or through whom final revelation can be made."

The frequent and vain repetition of the name of Christ has become a veritable mania with many theologians. Their exaggerated and extravagant assertions regarding the personality and power of Jesus tend to drive thinking men out of the fold, faster than more temperate statements bring them in. To believe in the divinity of Jesus is to believe in the doctrine of the Trinity. This is one of the most absurd and incomprehensible doctrines ever presented to men. Why should the Hindu believe in this dogma, when he has Buddha with his miraculous birth, his miracles, his noble teachings?

The Mohammedan, the Persian, the Brahmin, the Confucian, the Japanese do not believe it.

Heathen, do you say? Bishop Thoburn asserted in Columbus a year ago, that in Oriental countries Christianity is the synonym for licentiousness, robbery, brutality and violence. The Jew does not believe in a God-made man, nor in a man-made God. The dogma of the divinity of Jesus has caused the Christian to put upon the Jew every ostracism, every persecution, every outrage, every insult, every indignity that can be heaped upon a human being.

Dr. Rexford and the Universalist church do not believe it. The Unitarian church does not. Haeckel does not. Spiritualism doubts it. Philosophy denies it. Natural philosophy and physiology contradict it. Kersey Graves wrote a book, "The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors," showing similar traditions in about 35 instances. Surely, with so many saviors, the world cannot be lost.

Lombroso says that the line of David had been extinct for several generations and that Jesus made unfounded and irrational claims to divine authority. Lombroso says that Jesus exhibited a moral defect in his lack of natural affection, in his indifference in leaving his father and mother on certain occasions. Why did a certain Christian minister write a book entitled, "The Shortcomings of Jesus?"

The orthodox churches are full of hypocrites who do not believe in this dogma. The dictum of Jesus, "Sell all thou hast and give to the poor," is more honored in the breach than in the observance thereof. It has been amended so as to read, "Buy all thou canst and give nothing to the poor."

Why are so many of the theologians turning heretic? Rev. Dr. Samuel Carter has asserted that the God of the Westminster confession is a monster of iniquity. Rev. Dr. Carter has recently said that the assertion of the dogma of the divinity of Christ was one of the greatest misfortunes which ever befell the human race. J. P. Mitchell says that the teachings of Jesus can only prevail according to their ethical value.

The theologians of old refused to look through Galileo's telescope. The theologians of the present refuse to look through the telescope of physical research. The theologians by their dogmatism have placed themselves in a hole from which escape is impossible. They will die like rats in a trap, biting themselves. A new religion will soon arise based upon science and reason and law. It will not place a man in an unearned paradise nor an undeserved hell. The new theology will be in keeping with facts we already know regarding life and evolution. No man will dread to be wronged, but every man will fear to wrong another.

From Her Point of View.

Mrs. Clara Watson Gives Expression in a Courteous Way to Various Matters Pertaining to Spiritualism.

To the Readers of The Progressive Thinker:—O my! O my!! After all my protest The Progressive Thinker says I have "got religion and cannot get away from it." I have thought for some time that religion was contagious, for so many Spiritualists are catching it, but I was sure I had fortified myself so strongly that I was immune against the dread disease. But if Editor Francis has diagnosed my case and declares that I am a victim to the plague, I suppose I shall have to abide by his decision; but I give warning here and now that I will never, no NEVER, submit to religious treatment. I will be a rebellious spirit. I will not be "christened," not even with pretty posies; I will not be "baptized" in the name of any ghost, holy or unholy; I will not be "confirmed" by any priest; I will not be sanctified" by any bishop; and I will "break" the holy Sabbath by buying a Sunday paper. I will not go to a football game, but I will "desecrate the Lord's day" by reading The Progressive Thinker and other heresy publications.

If I have got the malady fastened upon me for "keeps" I will make the best of it by trying to keep it covered up; I will tuck it away in my subconscious self, where it will do the least harm.

But seriously, kind reader, Editor Francis tells us he has discovered that "a sense of obligation—conscientiousness—sense of duty," constitutes religion. But whoever would have thought these noble traits of character had any relationship to religion? But this is a great age; new discoveries are facing us, and we have to take the inevitable whether it be religion or the toothache.

But while on the subject of religion I may say that the N. S. A. seems to be having a hard job to establish Spiritualism as a religion, for every year, in convention assembled, the same question comes to the front as to what constitutes the religion of Spiritualism.

The president in his last annual report says: "If we hold that the discovery of gold mines, the finding of hidden treasures, the giving of tips on stock markets, etc., constitute the religion of Spiritualism, let us say so, and tell all self-respecting people their presence with us is no longer desired." But we have not been informed whether the convention adopted this as religion or not.

For one, I am sorry the above clause occurred in the report at all, for people—outsiders—are commenting upon it, and I have already been asked, "What is your Spiritualism, anyway, that called out such an expression from the president of your National Association?"

We are told the last convention did not accomplish very much, but it is hoped the delegates settled this question of religion as applied to Spiritualism so it will not have to be gone over again. The effort to make a religion of Spiritualism, and in so doing to divorce it from the practical needs of humanity, is to be deplored. It may be "irreligious" to locate mines and to find lost or hidden treasures, but such work is humanitarian.

Recently the writer officiated at the funeral of Abram James, one of the late worthy pensioners of the N. S. A. Mr. James was a true man in every sense of the word, and in his earlier years was a remarkable medium in various phases of mediumship; a part of his work was locating mines, oil wells, springs, etc. If I mistake not the artesian wells of Chicago, the home of The Progressive Thinker, were located by this good man. And what greater boon to humanity than pure water to drink? It is worth more than all the "invocations" ever uttered to some imaginary god in any church. The benefits to humanity from mines and oil wells are far greater than that of church sermons. Dr. James was very successful in this line of work, as also in healing; he had fine inspirational powers as well, and all this practical work transcends religion by far.

Giving tips on the stock market to aid in gambling, is reprehensible in anyone, spirit or mortal. There may be mediums who do this; I do not know, but I repeat it is to be regretted that it found mention in the report as it did, in connection with self-respecting people keeping away from us, etc. The Chicago papers gave prominence to just that paragraph of the president's report in which this utterance occurred, and it was given wide circulation. It reached my own city and gave rise to adverse criticism.

And then, there seems to be the same cry at every yearly convention about ignorance on our rostrum. The Morris Pratt Institute that has now run long enough to produce graduates, seems not to help the situation in the least; and if, as is stated, the good talent in our ranks is idle or unemployed; if, as stated, societies prefer ignoramuses because they get them cheap, what chance do the graduates stand of getting employment?

I read with interest the letter from Frederick A. Wiggin in issue Nov. 24, in which, with President Barrett he deplores the meager salaries paid our speakers, and this is given as a reason why so few young men and women enter the Spiritualist field. We all know our speakers are not paid as liberally as is desired, or as some of the Christian clergy are, but we must remember Christianity has had nearly 2,000 years in which to reach its present financial condition, as against Spiritualism's 58 years. But small remuneration may not be the only reason why new recruits do not enlist in our cause; the constant disparagement on the part of some holding the more lucrative positions, of those less fortunate, or of those not so highly gifted as themselves, and of the Spiritualists at large, too, must militate against new ones making the venture to unite with us.

I have heard Mr. Wiggin speak on two occasions at Lily Dale, different years, and on both occasions he lashed the Spiritualists in general for not living spiritual lives. He characterized them, or many of them, as living "down in the valley in the miasmatic swamps, instead of upon the mountain tops" (where he was, of course). Both years this same figure of speech was used, and some who listened wondered who constituted Pastor Wiggin judge over us. Spiritualists are human, it is true; they have their faults and failings as other people do, but these public flings at the lives of Spiritualists, by Spiritualists, are getting tiresome. This pharisaical "better than you" spirit may be religious, but is no part of Spiritualism.

Mr. Wiggin thinks Spiritualism has a very weak foundation on which to claim a "ministry." Has this good brother worker no higher idea of ministry than attaching a Rev. to our name and acting as pastor to a church? So it appears. It seems to me we should take a higher and broader view of the subject.

Mr. Wiggin says: "Spiritualism may justly claim many public workers, but how few are engaged in the ministry."

Are not all of our workers engaged in ministering to the people? Are they not carrying the "bread of life" to hungry souls? What matters it if they do not dispense it from or in a costly church? The masses of people do not attend church. The writer would scorn to have Rev. prefixed to her name, nor does she desire to be a "pastor." But why should not the ministry of Spiritualism be wide enough to include my work? I have officiated at very nearly forty funerals and several weddings this year. I have written a few "communications" and a goodly number of articles for the press, mostly the secular press, and did a little rostrum work, and in all this work the high and exalted principles of Spiritualism have been inwoven. And the same may be said of other workers, in their various lines of effort.

Surely all our noble, tried and true workers are a part of the ministry of Spiritualism, even those disassociated with the effete practices of a church. Some of us do not think that church building with its multitudinous services and forms, and drain upon our time and means to keep up the church, with its stereotyped usages and rituals, to be the ultimatum or highest achievement of a spiritual life.

Another point in Pastor Wiggin's letter attracted my attention. It could hardly be otherwise, for the editor gave it big type. Here it is: "The pulpit or platform of Spiritualism is now in a less promising condition than it was twenty-five years ago." And now I ask the intelligent reader if this statement does not seem to carry a weight of argument against narrowing this great, progressive, humanitarian movement down to a religious cult? It is within twenty-five years that such effort had a beginning. It may be that the honest, earnest, well-educated young men and women, who it is said, are not coming into the Spiritualist ministry, do not care to take upon themselves the responsibilities, work and effort connected with a church. There are many bright intellects that would shine with resplendent luster in the lecture field, or on the rostrum, that would make poor business at pastoral work. There are many bright, well-educated young men and women that could teach the soul-uplifting principles of Spiritualism from the platform, that would be as much out of place in a pulpit as the late Col. Robert Ingersoll would have been. Those leaders in our ranks who are pushing the church movement to the front as a necessity to the life of Spiritualism had best be cautious lest they drive good talent from us.

Mr. Wiggin says: "It is not a question of what can be done, but what will you do." Yes, what will you do about it, and who will do it, and how will you do it? Will not Mr. Wiggin enlighten us readers of The Progressive Thinker upon this important matter so we will know who's who, and what's what?

I wish still to add a word. I note in President Barrett's report on the "Federation of Liberal Religions," that the American Secular Union and Free Thought Federation were included. I am glad of this. I suppose I was one of the three speakers who, Mr. Barrett says, opposed the movement, and I opposed it on just the ground that the Freethinkers, who have done so much for the enlightenment of humanity, and who do not come under the name or meaning of religion, were to be excluded. In the letter to me there was no hint that the freethought people were to be recognized. I thought it was narrow and bigoted for Spiritualists to ignore the brave freethinkers, and I so stated in my reply. I am glad to be set right upon the matter, and am in hearty accord with the idea of the Federation of all Liberal Bodies religious and irreligious.

SIX HISTORIC AMERICANS.

Paine, Jefferson, Washington, Franklin, Lincoln, Grant.—The Fathers and Saviors of Our Republic. Freethinkers.—By John E. Remsburg.

The intelligent reader of this book, who is conversant with the usual religious literature pertaining to the religious or irreligious belief of these six historic Americans, can hardly help wishing Mr. Remsburg's books were placed in the hands of every orthodox preacher and writer in the land. Honest, progressive readers would shrink with dismay and disgust from the misstatements and false charges indulged in by orthodox clergy, etc. Others, of course, would continue to repeat the old, stale and slanderous assertions that have long passed current among orthodox people. Of these it may be said: "Ephraim is joined to his idols, let him alone." There is no hope for such, at least during mortal life.

The book will answer a good purpose with liberal people; as it is a veritable magazine of facts that will arm the reader against the oft reiterated misstatements and slanders put forth by ignorant and conscienceless religious bigots who would serve their God and their religion by traducing the memory of the patriotic dead.

The book is for sale at this office. Price, $1.25.

From Dream to Vision of Life. By Lilian Whiting.

As stated by the publisher, this book finds its keynote in the question asked by the Archbishop of Canterbury: "The Life Beyond—What Is It? What Is Its Bearing on These Present Working Years?"

Miss Whiting's answer is well wrought out in these pages, which teem with rich spiritual significance in fine alliance with the conclusions of the most modern researches of able and earnest scientists in the domain of physics in its finer relations to spirit.

The author's mind shines brilliantly in this, her chosen field of spiritual thought, and her clear spiritual insight is manifest in every page.

"It is certainly possible," she writes, "to achieve a certain transformation of life, now and here, that enables one to live in the rose and flame of radiance and beauty. One may as easily live in the ethereal as in the ordinary atmosphere. The ethereal atmosphere is an ever-present environment, as is that of the air. The ether and the air are interpenetrated, and science itself has thus opened the gateway of actual knowledge of the conditions of the next higher phase of life. We are surrounded by beauty, which one has only to open his eyes and see." pp. 20.

The book is beautifully printed and bound, in cloth, with gilt top. It is for sale at the office of The Progressive Thinker. Price, $1.10.

Evolution or Revolution, Which.

Elizabeth Cady Stanton has been the subject of many programs in clubs of women recently. Her birth month is November. Mrs. Stanton, from her early girlhood, was a student of conditions as well as of books. Her father, Judge Cady, was a man of great ability and learning. When a little girl Elizabeth spent much of her time in his office, where she heard the pitiful tales of women clients, and often implored her father to do something to relieve their sufferings. She always received the same answer, namely, that the law was against them. One day in desperation she asked her father to show her in his books where the cruel laws were. This he did. Later, as her indignation and sympathy increased, she took her scissors and cut all these Statutes from his New York Reports, thinking she had thus destroyed the law. This spirit went with her throughout her life. She married happily, and raised a large family of children, both boys and girls, yet she found time to use her splendid talents in helping to abolish these objectionable laws for women. In her early married life, when she was closely confined at home with her children, she wrote arguments which for logic and force have seldom been equaled. Armed with these, Susan B. Anthony would appear before the State Legislature. Thus, together these two women, at first alone, and later with the help of friends, reconstructed property laws for married women; enabling the women of New York State to own their own clothes, their own wages, to become co-guardians with their husbands over their children, etc. Because the New York Code is largely followed by other states, Mrs. Stanton and Miss Anthony are really responsible for the improved laws existing all over the United States. No wonder women do them honor.

The Unchurched, Unorganized and Unlabeled.

The Subject Thoughtfully Considered by B. F. Underwood.

There is an element, too large to be ignored or left unconsidered, that is outside all ecclesiastical organizations—an element that embraces a great variety of character and belief and represents widely different attitudes in regard to the churches and their forms of worship. It includes multitudes who, though reared in the current theological dogmas, are indifferent to doctrinal religion. Among them is every degree of faith and skepticism, from those who still adhere nominally to the religion of their fathers and who expect to die in it and to avail themselves of the offer it holds out to the repentant, to those who have outgrown, as they say, their early faith and regard it as they do the swaddling clothes of their infancy. Among the "unbelievers" are those who left the churches or abandoned their creeds in a spirit of revolt and who, Voltarian in attitude, are scornful of the "old superstition" and impatient with those who defend it, and those of a more scientific and reconciliative spirit, who, in the light of evolution, see in past and in present religious beliefs and forms expressions of necessary conditions which have been factors in human progress, and who are, therefore, friendly to all sects and considerate of all creeds. The thinker of this type says: "I belong to the great church that holds the world within its starlit aisles; that claims the great good of every race and clime; that finds with joy the grain of gold in every creed and floods with light and love the germs of good in every soul."

Outside the churches are the same degrees and contrasts, morally and spiritually, that are in the churches. While outside are many of higher character and better lives than the average in the churches, there is a portion of the former that is inferior to the average of church membership, and that would be much benefited by connection with the social life of the church. Outside there is a larger number of "common sinners" who live in open disregard of those conventional proprieties on the importance of which the churches generally place emphasis, and of the aimless, drifting or stranded people, the "submerged tenth" the flotsam and jetsam of humanity.

Yet in the churches probably are many of the worst enemies of mankind, the smooth, polished, conscienceless men of predatory instincts, who use the churches as they do other organizations, to cloak their villainy and to carry out their nefarious schemes of spoliation. Unfortunately in recent years, with the growing worship of the golden calf, this type of men in the churches has increased to such an extent that it has attracted popular attention, and, while it has helped the churches materially, it has tended to lessen their moral influence and to paralyze them spiritually.

While inside the churches are large numbers with whom the creed counts for nothing, the motives for whose membership are of a mixed business and social nature, there are people outside in much larger numbers that, while in sympathy with the moral teachings and practical work of the churches, are unable to accept their creeds and are too conscientious to subscribe to what, in mind and heart, they reject. Such persons have convictions as strong as those of church members, and it is because they attach moral importance to these convictions that they will not assume a relationship which is inconsistent with them and which would involve for them self-stultification.

This was the attitude, only the reasons were different, of Garrison, Emerson, Higginson, Phillips and thousands of anti-slavery men and women who, years ago, would not connect themselves with churches which were more or less in sympathy with slavery, and that would not permit its denunciation in their pulpits.

In the outside class, among those who reject church creeds, there is, there can be no complete unity of thought. If such unity is absent in the Protestant Christian world, where a book revelation is accepted as authoritative, how can it be expected among those who do not recognize as authority any book revelation, but whose views have been reached by the exercise of individual judgment?

Yet, this class, though it has no formulated creed, has pretty positive religious beliefs. All men have beliefs even though, like the constitution of England, they are unwritten and are unformulated in a series of propositions. What men believe is much greater in extent than what they know, and beliefs enter largely into the guiding influences of men's lives. Men's highest ideals form the substance of their religions. Man does not live by bread alone and something beyond the mere every day affairs of life is demanded by the heart.

The Roman poet Lucretius, amidst the tumult of civil war and the crumbling of old beliefs, turned to the system of the Greek philosopher, Epicurus, and found in it—but not as it has been popularly represented by its Stoic opponents—a stay and comfort for his heart and inspiration for that great philosophical treatise, the finest didactic poem of pagan antiquity, "The Nature of Things."

The great mass of "unbelievers," so-called, it is often said, have only negative beliefs, but this could be said with just as much truth of believers if attention were directed only to the negative aspects of their thought, to what they disbelieve and reject of other systems than their own. With their points of difference omitted, the views of the "unbelievers" held in common among them on religious and cognate subjects, may be summarized as follows:

Enlightened human reason is our highest standard and best guide, by which, in the last analysis, all books and authorities must be tested. All truth is sacred, all falsehood profane. Sacred books, so-called, are valuable as records of past thought and as expressions of religious life. Their teachings are to be accepted only so far as they accord with reason and truth. All religious systems are outgrowths of the human mind, natural in origin and development.

All particular religions are special forms, modified by race, climate and character, out of man's nature and environment.

The conception of evolution, of law and continuity in the world, should and must replace the unscientific idea of miraculous creation and supernatural interposition. Man has ascended, not fallen, and by wise and united effort men can accelerate human progress. Evil is non-adjustment and can be continually lessened. Although at birth no person is a sinner, the effects of experience of ancestors are inherited and exist in the form of aptitudes or tendencies. The good tendencies can be strengthened and the bad ones weakened by education.

Men's well-being is the highest object of human effort, intellectual, moral and physical culture, the prime condition of such well-being, and observation, experience and reflection the means of improving this condition. Morality is the science of human relations; rational faith is conviction based upon evidence. The untrammeled exercise of reason is a right and a duty. Beliefs can not be changed at will and are neither moral nor immoral in themselves, but they influence us helpfully or harmfully and we should therefore strive for the truth, without condemning those who have it not.

Doubt, the beginning of wisdom, leads to inquiry, inquiry to knowledge, and knowledge gives confidence, wisdom and satisfaction. The principle of self-sacrifice admired in Jesus should be glorified in humanity. Reliance upon ourselves, and the inviolableness of natural laws and belief in the improvability of human conditions, are all-important. Performance of the duties of life here and now is the best possible preparation for any future life which may be ours. We are all creatures of that infinite and eternal power whose nature we may not comprehend, but whose laws it is our duty to learn and obey.

Such in brief is the religious position of a very large number, including many eminent thinkers, scientists, scholars and authors of Europe and America, the influence of whose thought, percolating down through the various intellectual strata, is modifying continually general religious beliefs in the churches as well as outside of them, making necessary revisions of creeds and readjustments of positions. These views find expression, to a considerable extent, from the pulpits of many churches as well as from the platforms of many bodies like the Free Religious Association, the Society for Ethical Culture, independent liberal associations, etc. They are presented attractively in books found in our libraries, now widely read in all enlightened lands. Their diffusion and influence in shaping thought are increasing. The most conservative religious bodies, like the Presbyterians and Southern Methodists, have not escaped the modifying effects, the interpenetrating influence of this growing philosophical and religious thought.

Who can compute, not to go further back, the aggregate influence of historians like Buckle, Grote and Lecky, of philosophers like Mill, Comte and Spencer, of naturalists like Darwin, Wallace, Huxley and Haeckel, of novelists like George Eliot, Balzac and Hugo, of psychologists like Bain, Ribot and James, of psychiatrists and medical experts like Maudsley and Lombroso, of the Strauss and Renan class of writers, of Baur and the later Tubingen school of German theologians, of Colenso, Stanley, Farrar, Arnold Smyth and the higher critics, of Emerson and the New England Transcendentalists, of Buechner, Bradlaugh and Ingersoll, of Felix Adler and the Ethical Culturists, and of the multitude of other writers of equal or less fame who have helped to produce present intellectual conditions.

Their teachings are certainly no finalities, but their widespread prevalence, their steady progress and their undeniable influence in modifying old conceptions, force them to the front inevitably in all intelligent surveys of the present religious situation and in all attempts to forecast religious conditions in the future.

Through what elimination, revision and supplementary addition these views will have to pass to make them acceptable to the free thinking minds of the next century we will not attempt to predict, but of this we are sure that the same time-spirit and the same process of evolution which are working changes in the creeds of the churches are modifying theories and ideas among those who are outside of the churches; for "the thoughts of men are widening with the process of the suns."

IN MEMORIAM.

[Original lines recited at the Memorial Service held by the Boston Ladies' Aid Society, in honor of Mrs. Sarah A. Byrnes, November 16, 1906, by Marietta F. Willis.]

As one who comes to some fair shrine
With simple offering,
Where many wreaths of laurel twine,
My little mite I bring.

With silent feet, the aisle I tread;
With reverent heart I bow
To one, not numbered 'mong the dead,
Who, bending o'er us now,

Her benediction breathes, as when,
So oft she spake before
Your listening forms. Yet not, as then,
With the weary form she bore;

But, radiant with the heavenly light
Of her new spirit home,
She would assure you all, to-night,
As yet, she does not roam

Far off upon some glittering star,
Where wiser ones may bide;
Nearer her new-found duties are,
As often by the side

Of sorrowing, suffering ones of earth
As those she held most dear.
Not all the joys of her new birth
Keep her from coming here,

Responding to the tributes, sweet,
Of loving, grateful hearts,
Whose privilege it is to meet
And take their varied parts

In honor of the sainted guest
To whom our love is paid,
Who joyed to grant each fond request
To meet the Ladies' Aid.

You know the story, often told,
Of her brave, active life.
Though cherished in the angels' fold,
Surrounded by the strife

Of prejudice and bitterness,
E'en in her childhood hours,
She strove to minister and bless
With her most wondrous powers.

How well she labored for our cause,
Ere sweet fruition came,
You know full well. Did not applause
Greet even her dear name?

At our dear gatherings some will miss
The seeing of her face.
She will be seen as, now, on this,
Her night, in her old place.

Her interest is as keenly ours
As when on earth she stayed
And still she will exert her powers
To bless our Ladies' Aid.

Oh, know you all a sacred task
This hour on us devolves!
A benediction sweet, I ask,
And prayer, as each resolves,

With strong, sweet faith, and earnest thought,
To hold as sacred, here,
Those whose brave lives our ransom bought,
Each valiant pioneer.

For they are passing swiftly on
To their well-earned reward.
Till they shall hear the sweet "well done"
'Tis ours their lives to guard.

Sweet sainted sister, hovering still
O'er friends you knew of yore,
Receive our love; by your sweet will,
Our friend forevermore.

THE PATHWAY OF THE HUMAN SPIRIT.

Or, the Pathway of the Spirit Traced.

By J. M. Peebles, M. D., M. A.

Did it pre-exist and does it reincarnate again into mortal life? When did it enter the body? What is its form—how does it relate to the soul body? Can it leave the human body and return again? Can it live in and control another mortal body? These questions and many others are asked and answered by the Doctor in this, his latest book, of two hundred pages. Price 75 cents; postage, 12 cents.

"Science and the Future Life." By James H. Hyslop, is one of the most valuable acquisition to the literature of Modern Spiritualism that has appeared of late years. It is scientific in its method, profound in its logic, and above all sympathetic to the truth whatever it may be and wherever it may be found. Price, cloth, $1.50. 10 cents postage extra.

"Handy Electrical Dictionary." A practical handbook of reference, containing definitions of every used electrical term or phrase. Price 25cts.

"Cosmian Hymn Book." A collection of original and selected hymns, for liberal and ethical societies for schools and the home; compiled by L. K. Washburn. This volume meets a public want. It comprises 256 choice selections of poetry and music, embodying the highest moral sentiment, and free from all sectarianism. Price, 50 cents.

"The Spiritual Significance, or, Death as an Event in Life." By Lilian Whiting. One of Miss Whiting's most suggestive, intensely interesting, spiritual books. It is laden with rich, thought-ful spirituality. Price $1.

"Materialization." By Mme. Emma Hardinge-Esperance and Rev. B. F. Austin. Excellent. Price 10 cents.

"Religious and Theological Works of Thomas Paine," contains his celebrated "Age of Reason," and a number of letters and discourses on religious and theological subjects. Cloth binding, 420 pages. Price $1.

"Right Living." By Susan H. Wixon. The author shows a wise practicality in her method of teaching the principle of ethics. She illustrates her subject with many brief narratives and anecdotes, which render the book more interesting and more easily comprehended. It is especially adapted for use in Children's Lyceum. In the hands of mothers and teachers it may be made very useful. Young and old will be benefited by it. Price, $1.

"Talmagean Inanities, Incongruities, Inconsistencies and Blasphemies; a Review of Rev. T. DeWitt and Rev. Frank DeWitt Talmage's oft-repeated attacks upon Spiritualism." By Moses Hull. Price, 10 cents.

"In the World Celestial," by Dr. T. A. Bland. Interesting, instructive and helpful; Spiritually uplifting. Cloth bound, price $1.

"The Molecular Hypothesis of Nature." By Prof. Wm. M. Lockwood. Professor Lockwood is recognized as one of the ablest lecturers on the spiritual rostrum. In this little volume he presents in succinct form the substance of his lectures on the Molecular Hypothesis of Nature; and presents his views as demonstrating a scientific basis of Spiritualism. The book is commended to all who love to study and think. Price, 25 cents.

"Spiritual Songs for the Use of Circles, Campmeetings and Other Spiritualist Gatherings." By Mattie E. Hull. Price 10 cents.

"New Testament Stories Comically Illustrated. Drawings by Watson Heston. With Critical and Humorous Comments upon the Texts." Heston's drawings are incomparable, and excruciatingly funny. Price, in boards, $1;

"The Light of Egypt." Volumes 1 and 2. An occult library in itself, a text-book of esoteric knowledge as taught by Adepts of Hermetic Philosophy. Price $2 per volume.

"The Kingship of Self-Control." By Wm. George Jordan. It treats of the crimes of the tongue, the Red Tape duty, the supreme charity of the world, the revelation of reserve power, etc. Price, 30 cents.

"The Jesuits" By Rev. B. F. Austin, A. M., B. D. An excellent pamphlet. Price, 15 cents.

Prominent Spiritualist Passed to Spirit Life.

Marie H. Rondell departed this life from her earthly home, 3356 Vernon avenue, Chicago, for her spirit home, Thursday, Nov. 29, 1906. She was born, educated under Catholic religious influence, and married in France; and came to reside in the United States about four years ago. Several years ago she lost all interest in the formal religion under the influence of which she was educated, and grew naturally into Spiritualism, recognizing all phases of its phenomena, and accepting its teachings as natural religion. In this matter she and her husband were united. They also maintained that cremation is the only proper way to dispose of the human body when the spirit has left it. The husband and wife were happily mated in all matters pertaining to the duties and responsibilities of married life. They made the home a heaven for all who were in it; and she was its recognized, honored and loved Queen-Mother. There are six children. The oldest daughter, Isabelle, was exceptionally faithful and devoted in tenderly serving her during her suffering and sickness, and now has the task of caring for the home and little ones and her father. As a daughter, wife and mother, Mrs. Rondell has faithfully fulfilled every duty in life during her forty years' experience with it. Her teachings and life have established the sublime faith in all the matured members of the family of the guardianship of angels, and that angels are our loved ones who have passed into life in the realms of spirit. Who will say that though having cast off the body, her judgment, counsel and love will not continue to rule and guide the lives of those to whom she was near and dear?

The writer conducted the funeral services at the home, and a short service in the chapel in Graceland Cemetery, where the body was taken to be cremated in accord with her request.

Everybody Is Reading

Every Man a King

Or, Might in Mind Mastery

The latest book by O. S. MARDEN Editor of Success

It is the sort of book that grips one by its truths in relation to the inner self and its possibilities—that one wants to give to a friend after reading.

A millionaire, head of one of the greatest shoe houses in the world, writes: "Under the doctor's advice I spent the last three days at home, and put in the time reading, 'Every Man a King.' It did me great good, and has changed me so that I am anxious to give a good word to everybody in the future."

Gems of Thought

13 OUR THIRTEENTH 13 PREMIUM BOOK

Read the Following Explanatory Sketches

Our Thirteenth Premium Book.

Our Thirteenth Premium Book, now ready for delivery, contains 356 pages of the most interesting and valuable spiritual, occult and scientific literature to be found in the same number of pages of any book ever published. It is a work that no one, not radically prejudiced against everything outside of a creed, can pick up and not find some interesting information.

Heading the list of articles is one by

Mrs. M. T. Longley,

entitled "The Spirit World, Where Is It? Its Conditions and Employments," and in which her guide separates the spirit worlds of the various inhabited planets as the planets themselves are separated, but explains with great precision the spheres or spirit worlds surrounding this particular planet.

These spheres, it is claimed, "are creatable, that one can create his own sphere, and come in touch with others who are in the same rate of vibration, who are in a similar sphere or condition."

In this profound lecture is something highly educative to the spirit, and must be of value after transition. It is full of comfort and information—comfort to those who long to be again with their loved ones gone, and information as to their source of employment when they get there.

Countess Wachtmeister.

The second lecture is by Countess Wachtmeister, and gives in a straightforward way the founding of and the purposes of the Theosophical Society. Placing before the reader three distinct objects.

First—To form a nucleus of a universal brotherhood without distinction of race, caste, sex, creed or color.

Second—To study comparative religion, philosophy and science.

Third—To investigate the unexplained laws of nature and the powers that lie latent in man.

This lecture shows the difference physically and psychically between people, especially women of America and those of Europe; teaches how to unfold the psychic powers, and gives reasons why so many mediums in Spiritualism unfold psychically, but so often into unreliable mediums, and how to avoid these dangers, and the dangers of obsession. It treats of crystal-gazing; the power of frenzy, indulged in by the dervishes; ceremonial magic; of unfoldment through the imagination; the deep breathing process; lastly, giving the methods, to an extent, practiced and taught by Helena Petrovna Blavatsky, in the unfoldment of the power to enter the astral realm at will. Along the line of Theosophy it is interesting and instructive, and will enlighten anyone as to the objects and benefits of its teachings.

Cora L. V. Richmond's

lecture on the theme, "The Twentieth Century Fulfillments," is replete with prophecies. It gives a resume of the many prophecies of science that have in regular order been fulfilled; tells how the energies, mentally and physically, are being inclined to the invention of the most destructive munitions of war, and how this will lead to universal peace among nations; how the psychical unfoldments will raise the standard of true wisdom and morality, perpetuate the peace and harmony of the future human race. Mrs. Richmond is too well known as an instrument in the hands of highly unfolded spirits, as a lecturer, improvisatrist and author to need any laudatory comments.

She also has three other lectures in the book, one upon the subject, "God Is a God of the Living, Not a God of the Dead;" "Spiritualism and Christianity;" and "Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage."

C. W. Leadbeater.

"Dreams and Their Significance," is the title of the fourth lecture in the book, and was delivered by C. W. Leadbeater, the noted English Theosophical lecturer of London, to a Chicago audience.

This is a very candid, logical and explantory analysis of the causes and effects of dream impressions or waves, how received by the physical organism, the brain, and how it may be affected by conditions, disturbances internal and external; the etheric part of the brain; the astral brain, etc. This is one of a series of interesting lectures delivered by Mr. Leadbeater in Chicago, others of which are contained in this book. For instance, here are their themes: "Man and His Bodies;" "Reincarnation;" "The Law of Cause and Effect;" "Life After Death—Purgatory;" "Life After Death—The Heaven World;" "Telepathy and Mind Cure;" "Invisible Helpers;" "Clairvoyance—What Is It?" All these lectures must be taken as profound, logical and scientific from the Theosophical standard of reasoning, and whether approved in their entirety by the reader or not, something of deep interest, of instructive tendency, of elevating power will be found in them.

Prof. W. M. Lockwood.

"The Relation Science Holds to Natural Philosophy—Its Conflict with Every Phase of Religion," is the title Prof. W. M. Lockwood gives to his lecture, and he recites many instances of the progress of science, and its popularity with the entire thinking, reasoning world, including advanced theologians, and the effect this progress is having upon the previously beclouded and befogged minds of credulized humanity. This production is in his usual deliberate, concise, analytical and instructive style of expression, and must be studied to be understood.

Prof. J. S. Loveland

produces a profound criticism of the famous mathematical argument, "As to the Existence of a Soul." He takes a firm stand against mental or intelligent causation, and in favor of material causation; considering the phenomena of life from the vegetable and animal kingdoms. This is indeed, one of the Professor's strongest and most analytical lectures, and will be read with deep interest by everyone.

Mrs. Helen P. Russegue

offers a lecture for our book on the subject, "What Has Spiritualism Given to the World?" which was delivered before a Boston audience. The lecture beams with spiritual thought from beginning to end, and states the relative position to this and the after life, of the spiritual teachings.

Rev. Minot J. Savage's

lecture is a Comparison of Ancient and Modern Ideas, from the text, "And Death Shall Be No More." Herein he compares the idea in the Old Testament, that "death ends all," which presents such a gloomy, dismal prospect of any future state, to that of the New Testament, where Paul says, "To die is gain," and to the present day growing belief that it is only "transition." The lecture is one of his most logical upon a matter that will interest every reader.

Prof. Alexander Wilder, M. D.,

contributes his views, gathered from a careful study of the subject, "Burying Alive a Frequent Peril," and relates many incidents that have come before him in his life experiences, and those related by other people. Some very fascinating reading and precautionary suggestions are given in this essay by Dr. Wilder. It should prove remedial of present-day methods of interment without proper investigations of the deceased form.

Dr. J. M. Peebles.

"Watchman, What of the Night? The Morning Cometh," are the first words of Dr. J. M. Peebles, in his lecture on "Spiritualism, in Its Relation to Life," delivered in London, Eng. He gives an illustrative word-painting of the high moral standard to be attained by and through true soul inspiration, and cites the reader to Jesus as standing upon the "summit of moral science," and cites many other Bible characters who reached almost the same height; also the changing attitudes of science or the sciences. This is a masterly discourse, and will be read with a warm degree of appreciation.

Ella Dare

presents an essay on "Our Finer Forces," and in it deals with the action of the unseen upon and in co-relation with the seen; the laws of vibration; psychological functions, etc. She is known to the readers of The Progressive Thinker mostly by her beautiful poems, in which the "finer forces" are involved to their limit. Her essay is a lesson in itself upon the necessity of right thinking and right speaking and how to subdue the turbulent spirit. It is a pleasing and instructive addition to the book.

Baba Bharata.

"Wonderful Spiritual Phenomena," is an article from the New York Herald, and tells of materializing of food; spirits from heaven; praying in the clouds; the most extraordinary phenomena of modern times, etc., by Baba Bharata, a "holy man" who came to New York to make converts to his faith, which is "Love for all men." This is a fascinating production and a welcome bit of reading will it be to all.

Rev. Daniel W. Hull's

lecture on "Whence Our Christmas?" delivered before an audience at Tacoma, Wash., is an analytical criticism, or search into ancient history for the origin of the day held sacred by all Christians, and celebrated in all Christian countries. The lecture is wholly from a biblical standpoint and to the bible student will prove of value.

M. M. Mangasarian,

This noted liberal lecturer and traveler discourses upon "The Abysmal Monster," telling the story of his travels in Europe and the Orient, and of the human ignorance noticeable; gives his thoughts on prayer, liberty, churchianity and degeneration. The lecture is full of interesting data and convincing thought.

Prof. Elmer Gates,

in an article from the New York World, gives some theories and some demonstrated facts relative to "Moral Sense Colors, and Their Influence Upon Human Conduct," the results of experiments in Color Psychology. This is a strictly scientific deduction and explanation of a matter all are interested in.

Price 25 cents, when accompanied with a yearly subscription. See premium list on sixth page.

The System of Philosophy Concerning Divinity.

By J. C. F. Grumbine, B. D., Fellow of the Society of Science, Literature and Arts, London, England. This system is a science which makes practical and demonstrable all of the hidden, psychical powers of the soul.

What is taught is pre-eminently a system—not a theory or a doctrine—but a scientific, practical method of doing the things which mediums do and the prophets did.

Most mail courses are merely books which read like romances or text books which are loaded with dry matter, but which contain little useful and practical knowledge. They also cost from $10 to $100 for ten to twenty lessons. Mr. Grumbine's System is first of all a revelation, and secondly, a science which any person, old or young, can grasp and apply. It consists of over fifty lessons and numerous experiments not found elsewhere.

Mr. Grumbine is the pioneer of his work. His college was organized in 1893. Since then thousands all over the world have not only profited by what he taught but copied him and so proved that imitation is the sincerest flattery

This System will unfold your psychical powers so that you can see clairvoyantly, hear clairaudiently, feel clair-sentiently, see and commune with spirits and without losing your self-control or consciousness; and it will teach you how to be successful, prosperous and well. A special series is on the Divine Science of healing.

There will be no interruption in your business, but there will be interruption in hard times and miserable living and a new life and world will be yours. Remember, you can pay cash or installments. When you finish this System you need study none other. It is therefore less expensive because it comprehends all other systems on Theosophy, Spiritualism, Christian Science, Mental Science and Magic. Send stamped, addressed envelope for circulars to J. C. F. GRUMBINE, 24 Strathmore Road, Brookline, Mass.

The Progressive Thinker.

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 35 CHICAGO, ILL., DECEMBER 22, 1906. NO. 891

MRS. ROPP-AMOS FULLY VINDICATED.

A Comprehensive Statement of the Status of the Case.

To the Editor:—I do not often allow my name to get into print, but when there is a chance to defend a woman, and one of our oldest mediums, I feel justified in doing so.

In your issue of Nov. 10, you give quite a lengthy account of the application for divorce by John B. Amos from Josephine Ropp-Amos of Indianapolis.

I happen to be pretty well acquainted with both parties in this case, having known Mrs. Ropp long before she met Mr. Amos, and having been in the home of Mr. Amos when he lived on the farm in Clinton county, and during the life time of his former wife. Mrs. Ropp knew these people before I did and held seances in their home on more than one occasion.

I was called as a witness in the case and heard all of the testimony given. The evidence showed that in a very short time after the former wife passed away Mr. Amos took his son, who was not a Spiritualist, to Mrs. Ropp's home for a seance, and the son testified that the former wife came and talked to his father, and that Mrs. Ropp expressed surprise that she had passed out of the body. On the witness stand Mr. Amos did not accuse the spirits of influencing him to sell his farm (which he had received from his former wife), marry Mrs. Ropp, then invest $10,000 in town lots, build houses on them and give his new wife a half interest in the property, but in the cross-examination confessed that he had tried to get Mrs. Ropp to marry him in two months after his former wife had passed away, which she refused to do until a year had elapsed.

It is true all the property was put in a joint deed, but Mrs. Amos did not receive any of the money that was taken as rents. The will was made in her favor to keep the son, his only child, with whom he had quarreled some years before, from getting any of his father's property. Mrs. Amos testified that she pleaded for the rights of the son, but to no avail. Mr. Amos burned the will.

The insurance policy was taken out because Mr. Amos had an idea that he had some heart trouble and saw a chance to have a medical examination free of charge, came home and told his wife he was so glad to know there was nothing the matter with him, and when the premium came due, refused to pay it. In the cross examination he acknowledged that he did all these things "because he wanted to," and knew what he was doing, but once in a while would say, "She kept insisting," but did not blame it on the influence of the spirits or accuse his wife of fraudulent mediumship. In his charge he says after she got all these things as she wanted them, she began to abuse him. When questioned as to the nature of her abuse, he said she refused to occupy the same room with him on several occasions. Mrs. Amos gave as her reason, that because of his early abuses, he was suffering from debility; this he did not deny, and it was further verified by letters from some medical firm in the East, with whom he had been treating both before and since his marriage with her. She also proved by two or three witnesses that at one time he had slapped her in the face and at another time had bruised her arms.

Mrs. Amos filed a cross complaint, simply asking for a divorce and not for any property.

There was nothing said against Spiritualism during the trial, and not one word against her mediumship, except what Mr. Amos' lawyer said in his plea, and the only plea he could make was to abuse Mrs. Amos and the cause. Mrs. Amos' lawyer spoke very nicely of Spiritualism and said that the world was compelled to recognize us as a religious body.

In Indianapolis, where she has lived for nine years, you have only to advertise that Mrs. Ropp will give messages and the church will be full.

Since writing the above I have just received the following from Mr. Tom O'Neill of Indiapapolis, who is president of Chesterfield camp:

"Mrs. Ropp gets a divorce and as alimony twenty-seven hundred dollars; Amos to pay $500 to Henry Spann, her lawyer, in addition to all the court costs. Righteous judge."

THEY ARE MY ANGELS, ALL.

How I love the pretty babies, love their crying and their coo,
And they always look up at me as if saying, "I love you."
Yes, I love them; they are precious, ere they walk or ere they crawl,
With their fisting and their kicking, and they are my angels, all.

There are many who grow nervous when they hear a baby cry;
They forget that they were babies in the happy days gone by.
It unfolds the vocal organs, to occasionally squall;
It is music to my spirit, and they are my angels, all.

How I love to sit and watch them when they first begin to see,
And to notice their surroundings, when they first look up at me.
I can sense the little spirits ere they came at Nature's call,
In the love-land of the fairies, and they are my angels, all.

DR. T. WILKINS.

"IF."

If everyone were wise and sweet,
And everyone were jolly;
If every heart with gladness beat,
And none were melancholy;
If none should grumble or complain
And nobody should labor
In evil work, but each were fain
To love and help his neighbor—
Oh, what a happy world 'twould be
For you and me—for you and me!

And if perhaps we both should try
That glorious time to hurry;
If you and I—just you and I—
Should trust instead of worry;
If we should grow—just you and I—
Kinder and sweeter-hearted,
Perhaps, in some near by and bye,
That good time might get started.

UNITY AMONG WORKERS.

An Earnest Plea for Charity, the Greatest of Virtues.

One who is torn by many "whys," asks a hearing, and asks to know the wherefore. "The greatest of these is charity."

The quality of aforesaid charity embodying all love is in question.

We have read in The Progressive Thinker, No. 886, two appeals for unity among workers for Spiritualism. One by Moses Hull, and one by William John Ward. These fine plans have impressed me very strongly. An isolated student of Spiritualism goes forth into the world to find co-workers and counselors, invariably runs against the rocks of jealousy and petty scandal.

In our large city, in which the writer has sought light. Endeavor has been made to find workers who could give him instructions upon the phenomena and philosophy of Spiritualism.

He has been fortunate enough in finding those who gave him help in abundance; yet, every exponent, in moments of confidence, have voiced a "They say" about some friend (?) and fellow-worker; who in turn had a similar confidence to impart of the former.

Nearly all workers in the highest places in the cause of Spiritualism have been assailed by the relating of some nauseating tale of failure in the conventional and religious code of morals.

The majority seem to have the good of the Spiritual cause at heart, but, there is another whose good lies nearer and that one is "Self."

One question will not down. Who ever gave good work to the world in any good cause that put SELF before the CAUSE?

In this city we find one who put himself forward as a leader—and he has the qualities of the leader—whose mind and morals are the antipodes of spirituality.

His influence has caused the ranks of Spiritualists to break up into petty societies, each striving for leadership, and none doing much but partisan work.

This deplorable condition reminds one of a priceless jewel shattered into tiny fragments; unity is destroyed and harmony impossible.

Inharmony has caused a fine element to withdraw, and identify itself with New Thought and Christian Science churches.

Now, where is the good of professing Spiritualism that does not spiritualize its leaders and pupils?

Why will said leaders see only the faults of their opponents, who should be co-workers, and give no heed to the great good that all have done in the past? Why will people working together for good allow a known corrupt leader to displace those who are his superiors in every way?

And why do good workers allow themselves to be thrust aside to give place to a base element?

These questions could be asked of more communities than the one the writer has in mind, or masterly men and forceful women would not cry for unity in our ranks. Why, oh why, cannot the past in every earnest worker's life be buried, as each one is purified from faultiness and has put on the strong armor of truth and right.

Why do those who should work shoulder to shoulder pick little holes—each in the armor of the other for every new-comer to peep in and view that which should remain buried from sight forever more?

It is not to be wondered at that many fine mediums and lecturers stumble and fall, to remain lying in the dust, when so many impure thoughts are directed toward them by those who should purify themselves and support their brothers and sisters in the GOOD they do, and are capable of continuing to do?

If only all whose dear desire is to see Spiritualism prospering would give themselves to concerted good thought, and earnest, efficient help, spiritually, and materially, how much wiser it would be!

Although these questions continually perplex the mind of the writer, yet he is not cast down. Nor is he going to let go of the great truths that have been trusted to his keeping. All his desire is, for established workers to "Let the dead past bury its dead," and all unite to live out the very best we find in our teachings, and all work together for the best good of all.

Do let us be charitable, kind, constant and ever true to Spiritualism and til it stands for.

SPIRITUALISM DEFENDED.

It Is Not Responsible for Crime—an Article Written for the St. Louis Republic.

To the Editor of the Republic:—Dear Sir,—In to-day's Republic there is quite an article on the shooting of a Mr. Alfred H. Luster. Mrs. Mary Cottle, who has been arrested on suspicion of having committed the crime, and the wounded man are (so the article asserts) Spiritualists and the impression conveyed all through the article is, that the teachings of Spiritualism are responsible for the shooting. I want to deny in the first place, that either of the above-mentioned parties is a member of organized Spiritualism. I want to deny emphatically in the second place, that soul mate rot or stuff of that character is taught or believed in by intelligent Spiritualists. There have been many crimes, many misstatements made in the past in the name of religion, but no sensible person holds religion per se responsible for the misconceptions of some crazy enthusiast. As a matter of fact, a man's or woman's conception of Spiritualism (like conceptions of other religions) are about as big mentally and morally as the man or woman. While ignorant psychics may, under influences as ignorant as themselves (for like attracts like) give out in the name of Spiritualism some rot about soul mates and affinities, yet Spiritualism per se does not stand for or teach stuff of that character any more WILKINS TWELVE than Methodism stands for what I have heard some of their backwoods preachers teach in the name of Methodism.

The trouble has been with the press and public at large, that they class all Spiritualists promiscuously as either fortune-tellers or their dupes. They are neither. Not one fortune-teller is affiliated with or recognized by organized Spiritualism here in Missouri. Our mediums are not luring in by large signs and newspaper advertisements the people who seek spiritual consolation (mark the term). They seek the medium and are (as a whole either Spiritualists seeking spiritual advice (as the orthodox would of his priest or clergyman) or investigators seeking knowledge along these lines of psychic phenomena. That they compensate the medium and just; she must live the same as your priests and clergymen who are paid for their service and who expect extra compensation for every wedding, funeral, or baptism they officiate at.

The fortune-teller is not a religious teacher, striving by spiritual advice to console and uplift humanity. He or she is engaged in a commercial enterprise, and their aim is wholly and solely to rake in the coin. In their advertisements they appeal to the animal instincts, promising to bring back lost lovers, selling love powders, love charms, locating lost dogs, gold mines, etc. They are as far away in thought and purpose from the religion of Spiritualism as the north pole is from the south.

Don't blame Spiritualism for the fortune-teller and the crimes committed by them; blame your city authorities who sell them the privilege to prey on the public at so much per license. Blame your press which, by accepting their money and printing their fraudulent advertisements are particeps criminis in the crime of obtaining money under false pretense. No Spiritualist medium has a sign out or advertises his or her mediumship (in other words) their religion. It would be well for some of the dupes to heed the advice given in the Scripture by St. John: "Try the spirits whether they be of God," also to note the words of Christ, "By their fruits ye shall know them."

Yours for fair play,

PAUL McARTHUR.

President State Spiritualist Association of Missouri.

SHE IS AFTER SKEPTICS.

Mrs. Pepper to Demonstrate at Service That She Is Genuine.

Mrs. May S. Pepper will arrange a seance for skeptics to demonstrate that she is a genuine medium. Prof. G. W. Fowler, one of Mrs. Pepper's followers, made yesterday this announcement. He says she will prove absolutely "the immortality of man and the practicability of Spiritualism." He declares the public and press are prejudiced against Mrs. Pepper.

The time and place for the seance have not been announced.—New York World.

Finer and Finer Forms.

The Evolutionary Process of Nature—The Birth and Growth of the Human Soul.

Ever since man has been able to leave a record of his beliefs do we find this one theory advanced—there is a physical body out of which a spiritual body is evolved. And I am convinced that ever since man has existed as an individualized entity; though it may have been aeons before any record of the fact was made, this same belief prevailed. But throughout all the pages of history or written science that I have been able to find, do we glean no inkling of how this growth from one to the other is accomplished, other than that the spiritual body is "a gift from God."

Man's mentality has advanced from the age of "supernatural" causes, and now we seek and FIND a natural cause for all things.

Geological research has demonstrated to us that before man inhabited the earth the atmosphere that surrounded the globe was so full of moisture and noxious gases that it was impossible for animal life to endure. The process of purification was taken up by or rather these conditions stimulated the growth of abundant vegetation, especially adapted by its nature to just such conditions. Following this purification of the atmosphere came the earthquakes, volcanic eruptions and upheavals on the earth's surface, a veritable turning inside out of almost the entire crust, mute evidence of which is the vast coal deposits. After this a new form of life began to manifest under these new conditions. Monstrosities in the animal kingdom then held sway for a few ages; and they also have left a record of their existence to be read by the geologist. Higher and higher have the types of both vegetation and animal life advanced from their earliest stages to their present day usefulness, and they will continue to grow through eternity.

It has been my contention for years that the earth is gradually growing larger through this purification of its surrounding nebulae, as are also all other planets. If science succeeds in her present attempt to measure and weigh the earth to any degree of accuracy, I am convinced their reckoning a few centuries hence will fully corroborate this theory. If this is not so, will someone please explain the experiment of taking a ton of dry earth, boxing it up so that none will be added nor taken from the original amount, and then plant therein a peach seed. Afaer a few years the tree and its product may be removed and it will be found the weight of the soil remains the same while, no matter what the chemical process the tree and its fruit may be subject to, it will be found there is a residuum to fall to earth. Whence came this product of the peach seed? No new matter has been created—it has been simply a separation of the gross from the finer elements of the atmosphere. To illustrate this principle, take a dish of clear water and put it through a boiling process and then watch the lime separate from the liquid and fall to the bottom. It is through this process that barren soils are made fertile, and noxious weeds instead of being a curse are one of nature's greatest blessings. But that is another story, as we are now dealing only with the refining process of nature as it pertains to the infinitive growth of man.

The physical body of man is nothing more nor less than a plant of a different grade, capable of assimilating and manifesting a higher type of intelligence, and the degree of that intelligence, morality and culture may be traced back to the climate, diet and customs of the man.

Transplant any vegetation in a different climate from the one in which it is found in its natural state and it will either not thrive at all or it will change its species apparently, sometimes to a higher and sometimes to a lower grade. The cultured white man in changing his location carries with him all his old customs, habits, modes of living, and makes his new conditions conform to the old as near as possible in regards to diet, temperature, etc. The cultured and educated negro does not live upon the coarse foods that are the sustenance of his less fortunate brethren. And the rule works both ways, as per example "Joe" Morgan, fed upon the best in the land and educated for a missionary, he returns to his own people in dark Africa, eats, sleeps and dwells with them as one of the tribe, and he soon degenerates to the savage cannibalistic nature of the tribe.

And so I am led to assert that the food we eat in very large measure determines our morality. Show me a man whose diet is principally pork and I'll show you a man whose greatest glory is not in giving, but in receiving. Charity in its broadest sense is practiced most freely by the strictly vegetarian.

What has this to do with the birth of the soul?

The whole universe is builded of atoms, and as atoms are spherical there is always an etheric space between the atoms of any one material, which is filled with the atoms of another grade which are smaller, and so on down infinitely. For one to try to conceive to what extent this division and subdivision may be carried, is like trying to grasp and comprehend the magnitude of space on the beginning or ending of time; it is like reducing an indeterminable decimal fraction—there is always an etheric space between the atoms of the physical or spiritual body of whatsoever plane, it has advanced to that may be filled with a finer form of life.

To more clearly illustrate the construction of the body, let us compare it to a large vessel filled with marbles. While the vessel is full as possible to fill it with marbles, yet we may pour into it a quantity of large shot, and still farther, we may sift through this a good quantity of sand. Now pour into this a quantity of water, and into the water may be added solution after solution of the different acids. This may be a crude illustration, but I think you can glean from it what is meant by the "atomic construction."

Every particle of vegetation we eat, every breath we breathe, every article of clothing we wear, the very soil upon which we tread, and our every association is full of a manifestation of divine intelligence which is assimilated by the physical body and stored within the etheric space of its atomic construction, and all have an equipollence in the construction of the spiritual, or as the oriental would call it, the astral body. But whatsoever it may be called, it is as much objective on that plane as is the physical body on this plane.

"Death," then, is but the birth of this finer body out of the physical, which then crumbles to earth, and the soul, which the physical body has gathered from the elements with which it was surrounded, then starts on its journey through time as an individualized entity.

Nothing new has been created; it has simply been the gathering together of the finer elements, separating them from the grosser matter, which then goes toward the formation of the planets, suns, moons and stars of which the universal space is full, while the finer intellectuality goes on as an independent entity.

Ample proof of the existence of this invisible body in conformance to the type of the visible is given us by those who have been bereft of an arm or a leg. A friend of mine who lost an arm in an accident several years ago, very frequently in moments of abstraction, will reach with the remaining hand and rub the invisible one.

This idea of the birth and growth of the soul will not appeal to the Theosophist, as it does away with the reincarnation theory as advocated by them. It does not, however, interfere with their "karma," in fact it is rather the working of this law toward the consummation of a divine purpose.

Hypnotism, dual personalities, obsession, trance phenomena, and other occult occurrences lose much of their mystery when studied from the standpoint of this atomic construction of the human frame. This also throws much light on the whys of astrological influences upon the life of man. But these are always subject matter unto themselves, and may be taken up later. The point I wish to impress upon all is that the best is just good enough for us, and should be honestly striven for at all times, not for physical aggrandizement, but for the purpose of furthering soul growth. Past experiences and conditions were necessary steppingstones to the present; the present is necessary to the future, so

Strive not to emulate the lives of the past age—
They are but the relics of which we are fruitage.
Each new generation is better than the last,
And higher ideals replace those of the past.

Each new babe is father of a newer born hope
That peers into the mists with deeper, broader scope.
Measure future standards by ideals yet unborn;
Each to-day is the dawn of a new, brighter morn.

Look not into the past to find the world's new needs;
Bury all religions that are bounded by creeds.
Neither condemn the past, for 'tis the foundation
Of a superstructure of perfect creation.

And every to-day is but pulsating sands—
Necessary atoms—on which tomorrow stands.
Each succeeding creature is but a new relay
In man's eternal race down time's endless pathway.

A Gift! A Gift!

"The Unknown Life of Jesus Christ," a most valuable illustrated work, translated from the French by Mr. Ghandi, a learned Hindoo, is to be sent as a Gift to every subscriber of The Progressive Thinker. It has always sold for $1.00. We purchased the copyright and now we have the exclusive privilege of publishing the work, and wholly for the benefit of our subscribers. Read carefully the following:

"The Unknown Life of Jesus Christ" is a remarkable book. It supplies a veritable missing link in the history of a remarkable personage. It fills a hiatus which has puzzled Christian as well as non-Christian scholars, to account for. The New Testament account of the life of Jesus is vitally deficient, as passing over in blank silence a great many years of his earthly existence.

It is the usual understanding of Christian writers and scholars, that the public works and teachings of Jesus, except what little was done before the end of the thirteenth year of his age, were comprised in the last three years of his life. Luke says (Chap. 1:80) "And the child grew, and waxed strong in spirit, and was in the deserts till the day of his showing unto Israel." Chap. 3:23, says, "And Jesus himself began to be about thirty years of age."

It is indeed strange that the most remarkable character in the world's history should drop out of sight for a long period of years, comprising the larger part of his life from childhood on, and no record of that period be found. It seems the last three years of his life comprised the years of his public ministry. Where was he, and what was he doing during these years from about his thirteenth to his thirtieth year?

This remarkable book seems to answer the query. He traveled into India, the land of Buddhism and Lamaism, and there became learned in the lore of that country, he became proficient in the study of its antiquities and literature, its religions and its philosophies.

In the Buddhist monasteries of Thibet, M. Notovitch relates how he found access to some manuscripts which told of the visit of Issa (Jesus) and his life while there. This narrative fills the gap in the New Testament account, from his thirteenth year until his return and his public "showing unto Israel," as a divine teacher. The Buddhist records complete what the gospel records omit.

The translation of these Buddhist records forms an exceptionally interesting study to the general reader as well as to the more critical scholar and student of ancient religious literature.

And now we are happy to announce to the readers of The Progressive Thinker, that, having secured the plates of this remarkable book, we have concluded in this holiday season to offer this volume to them as a premium. It will be an actual gift to each one who sends in One Dollar for a year's subscription to The Progressive Thinker, and ten cents in stamps to pay the postage on the book.

Any one who is now on our list of subscribers can also secure this book as an actual gift, by sending in ten cents in stamps to pay postage on the same, and One Dollar to extend the time of their present subscription one year.

The Next National Convention

President Barrett Explains the Situation, and Offers Remarks and Suggestions.

Mrs. R. S. Lillie presents some very important matters for the consideration of the Spiritualists of America in her able article in a recent issue of The Progressive Thinker. Inasmuch as she refers to myself personally in one paragraph, I crave your kind permission, Mr. Editor, to explain my position with respect to the question at issue.

Soon after the adjournment of the Chicago Convention, I received some letters from the East, also from the Middle states, criticising the selection of Los Angeles as the place of meeting for the next national convention. Some went so far as to say "Why did you allow the convention to go to Los Angeles."

To answer the question, I wrote a paragraph in one of my communications to The Progressive Thinker, stating that some of the delegates deliberately shirked their duty in regard to several issues that were before our Chicago conclave, instancing the fact as stated by Mrs. Lillie, that several delegates from the east listened to the lectures and messages on the evening the convention was in executive session, and were not where they should have been on that occasion.

This paragraph was written to show my questioners that the responsibility for the decision under discussion was not with me, but was with the delegates who took no interest in the final business session. They were in some half dozen or more instances, Spiritualists of forty or fifty years' standing, yet preferred pleasure to duty, and were more interested in their own enjoyment than they were in the welfare of the Cause as a whole.

Perhaps some or all of them would have voted in favor of Los Angeles. That would have been their right had they so wished, and it would have made the case of Los Angeles that much stronger. Having failed to be present and record their votes, they and their friends have no right to censure the President, nor any other member of the N. S. A. Board of Trustees, for permitting the convention to go to Los Angeles. The responsibility rests, I say again, with the delegates themselves.

I was not present at the final business session, for I was presiding over the "ornamental" session in the main hall, as it was my duty to do. Vice-President Warne occupied the chair in the small hall. I did not vote because I was not present and did not know when the question was decided. Vice-President Warne did not vote because he was in the chair, and reserved his ballot for the purpose of breaking a tie, should one occur. Trustee Evans did not vote because he was the stenographer of the convention, and was undoubtedly too busy to do so. Trustee Howe voted for Los Angeles. I believe the other five voted in favor of Washington, D. C.

These facts certainly prove that the official Board of the N. S. A. did not decide the location of the next convention.

As for the proposition itself let me say that California wanted the convention, and with the usual California determination set to work to get it. The delegates from that state knew what they wanted, and did not waste their strength upon small issues. They stood together, acted together, and did not dodge the business sessions of the convention. They were always in their places, and were keenly alive in everything that went on in the convention. For my part I feel to commend them for so doing! It is an example worthy of emulation by other delegations, even when such delegations are composed of people who feel that lectures and messages are of more importance than business.

Our friends from California were entitled to a large number of proxies by reason of the fact that there are many local societies in the state that are in good working order, and in good standing with the State Association. When a proxy was appointed it was only natural that he should be told that the Spiritualists of California wanted the next convention held in Los Angeles, and that he could best represent them by voting in favor of that city. I fail to see in this course anything reprehensible on the part of our California friends.

They were doing what their constituents wanted them to do, merely this and nothing more. By this action, however they have succeeded in making the proxy question a "paramount issue" in the councils of the organic body, until it is solved in a just and equitable manner for all parties concerned.

The records show that 52 delegates voted for Los Angeles, and 46 for Washington, D. C. Nearly one hundred delegates—eighty, at least—were not recorded on this proposition, being absent from the hall, or present and not voting when the ballot was taken. California voted as a unit, and was reinforced by the votes of the other Pacific Coast states, by Montana, Texas, Colorado and Kansas. The issue was an open one. I do not believe any undue influence, nor yet any political intriguing were resorted to by the Pacific Coast delegates.

I feel that they acted conscientiously, and won an honorable victory. I do not see why they should be censured for doing what they felt to be their duty, for the highest good of our Cause.

California has been loyal to the N. S. A. and to the principles underlying organization from the day our National Association was formed. A Californian in the person of Mrs. Elizabeth Sloper, was elected a member of the first board of trustees chosen in 1893. From that time to the present the Spiritualists of California have been friends of the N. S. A. Their delegates have had to make long journeys at great expense in order to attend our annual conventions. These facts should be remembered to California's credit.

I am not writing as a special pleader for California, nor yet because I feel that Los Angeles was the best place for the convention of 1907. I am writing because I believe in fair play, and in giving credit where credit is due. The wisdom of selecting Los Angeles is questioned by many true-hearted Spiritualists. They feel as if the time had not quite arrived for bringing the convention to the Coast. None of them, however, want to deal unfairly by our California brethren, nor take any undue advantage of them. Many Spiritualists east of the Rocky Mountains have a settled conviction that the gravity of the issues now before our people, and the exigencies confronting our organic movement require that the convention should be held, if not in Washington, D. C., then at some convenient geographical point equidistant from all quarters of the nation. I have such faith in our California friends that I believe they will voluntarily relinquish the convention for next year, and request the N. S. A. trustees to call it elsewhere. They are convinced that its coming to the Coast would be fraught with danger and possible harm in the N. S. A. In other words, I believe Californians are for Spiritualism first and self last. They won the convention of 1907 in a fair if spirited contest, and if the location is to be changed they should know why, and be given good reasons therefor. In fact the change would be suggested by them, if good reasons exist for it, for California Spiritualists are big enough, brave enough, generous enough to make a voluntary surrender of their prerogatives when they see that Spiritualism will be benefited by such action on their part.

In closing let me say that I do not object to a referendum vote, as suggested by one of the proxy delegates in a recent number of The Progressive Thinker. By all means let it be taken; but let each society, in sending in its vote to Mrs. Longley give what seems reasons for desiring the change. Such a vote would have no legal nor binding force. It would be purely moral in its influence, and its moral impress, if based upon good grounds, would undoubtedly induce our California brethren to sink their own preferences in the larger good of the Cause as a whole, by voluntarily yielding the convention of 1907 to some central eastern city.

Yours for the N. S. A. and the Cause.

WHATEVER IS, IS RIGHT.

There Is No Evil—All Is Good—There Is No Sin, Nor Obsession.

In each of the civilized nations of the world there are different grades of civilization among their people. They each contain representatives of every grade of civilization that has existed for the last two thousand years. It follows that where so much diversity exists there must be many different standards of right and wrong. What is considered good by people of the most advanced civilization may be regarded as very bad by those who are not so far advanced. In fact there are so many standards of civilization in the world that it is utterly impossible to establish a standard that will be acceptable to all. The necessary implication of this condition is, that no standard of right and wrong can be maintained, which will be accepted by the individual units of the civilized world. That individual or society is yet to be discovered that can dogmatically assert what is right and what is wrong in human conduct as a whole. There may well be a consensus of belief in some, and if you please many, of the things which go to make up the entirety of human conduct, but not in all. In many things which are right for one person or society are wrong for another. My orthodox friend believes it right to worship the God of the Bible, but a large army of intelligent men and women believe that it is wrong. What is one man's meat is another's poison, is as true in a spiritual sense as it is in a physical sense. This want of uniformity in belief and sentiment will probably exist forever.

If the religious sentiment of a century ago was right, the religious sentiment of to-day is as nearly wrong as it can well be; and if the religious sentiment of this age is correct, the good Christians of a hundred years ago were lost in a dense wilderness of error. If the governments of a century ago were just and right, then those of to-day fall far short of it; and if the present governments of the world are approximately what they should be, then the ancient statesmen looked through a glass very darkly.

In the grand march of human progress the standards of right and wrong are continually changing, and will continue to change so long as such progress exists. Change is the trusty handmaid of progress, and ever will be.

There is no doubt that the religious teachers and statesmen of a century ago did as well as they could under the then existing conditions, but the light of this age discloses their manifold errors. And no doubt the light of a century hence will expose many of the errors of this age.

"There is nothing either good or bad But thinking makes it so."

Herbert Spencer has well said: "Let us keep before ourselves the truth that in human actions the absolutely bad may be relatively good, and the absolutely good may be relatively bad."

From the foregoing it necessarily follows that there is no place in this world for the conditions called sin or obsession. These words are symbols of an airy nothing. This world, under Infinite Power, is governed by unerring laws, and man is born, lives, progresses and dies in conformity with those laws. That Great Power when it established these laws knew that it was doing, and made no mistakes. Obediently to these laws "All things exist by elemental strife." The volcano, earthquake, tornado, cyclone and storm, as well as the wars and conflicts among men and the inferior animals are proof of this strife.

There are forces in nature which continually build up, and there are those which continually pull down. Growth and decay ever go hand in hand. And these forces all work together for the ultimate good of man and all of the rest of creation. The forces which are called evil, are just as necessary for human progress as those which we call good.

In a word let us comprehend the great and important truth, that Infinite Power "doeth all things well"; and by the recognition of this great truth we will find ourselves en rapport with this earthly life, and prepared for that broader and more intelligent life in the hereafter.

We spread before our readers this week copious extracts from the initial number of the Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research. It is refreshing to know that William James, James H. Hyslop, Geo. Dorr and others, typical investigators of the phenomena, keenly receptive to the truth, and always looking for it, yet quick to detect error—it is refreshing, we say, to see them so intensely interested in investigating Spirit Return in all its various phases. We spread these facts before our readers as exceptionally important news in our Great Movement, The Progressive Thinker being the only Spiritualist paper that furnishes everything that pertains to Spiritualism, whether it be the exceptionally bright and glorious side, or the side tinged with darkness and trickery. Every person who can should contribute to sustain the American Society for Psychical Research.

It will be a sufficient explanation of the reasons for the organization of an American Society to publish the official document which announced the dissolution of the American Branch. This is found below as published in the "Journal" of the London Society.

Dissolution of the American Branch.

The following document was signed by three vice-presidents of the Society for Psychical Research at a meeting in Boston last May, at which it was resolved to dissolve the American Branch of the London Society:

American Branch of the Society for Psychical Research.

After full and anxious consideration it has been decided to dissolve the American Branch of the Society for Psychical Research at the end of the current year.

It is noped that a scheme, upon which Professor Hyslop has been for some time past engaged, may result in the formation of an independent organization which will carry on the work of psychical research in America.

The records of sporadic phenomena now accumulated at the office of the Branch will be carefully gone through, and a selection from them will be published in the "Journal."

The Piper records, and all documents appertaining thereto, will remain in charge of the Council of the Society, and as promptly as the labor involved in the study of their voluminous and complicated contents will allow, a full report on the later developments of the Piper case up to date of Dr. Hodgson's death will be issued in the "Proceedings."

After publication the Council of the Society will allow qualified and serious students access to the records; but only on terms which will insure that all private and intimate matter contained in them shall be handled with proper discretion and reserve, and that all confidences shall be respected.

Signed on behalf of the American Branch,

WILLIAM JAMES,
JAMES H. HYSLOP,
GEORGE B. DORR,
Vice-Presidents.

Signed on behalf of the Council of the Society for Psychical Research.

Dr. Richard Hodgson.

Psychic Research has suffered an irreparable loss in the death of Dr. Richard Hodgson, and it is fitting in the reorganization of this work in this country that his unusual gifts in connection with the past work of this kind should receive some memorial notice. He had devoted his life and abilities to the solution of one of the world's largest problems and for this task he was possessed of exceptional qualities of mind and heart, developed under the most favorable influences. His place in the work can be appreciated only by a brief account of his life.

Richard Hodgson was born in 1855 in Melbourne, Australia, and received his early education in the public schools of that place. He afterwards entered the University of Melbourne and took there the degrees of M. A. and LL. D.

It was his original intention to study law and this course was followed for a time. But during his legal studies he gave some attention to science and philosophy, and finally resolved to devote his attention exclusively to these fields. In the meantime he early became interested in the occult, owing to certain incidents which he told only to certain intimate friends, and it seems that a symposium in one of the British monthly magazines stimulated him to make this matter a subject of his inquiries.

After completing his law studies at Melbourne, he went to the University of Cambridge, Eng., and there graduated in the mental and moral sciences. The teacher from whom he learned most, according to his own statement, both in personal instruction and lectures, was Professor Henry Sidgwick, Professor of Moral Philosophy in Cambridge, and President of the Society for Psychical Research. In philosophy he had also learned much from the study of Herbert Spencer and was to a considerable extent influenced by that writer's doctrines, though he afterward imbibed enough of an idealistic philosophy to eliminate the materialistic tendencies of that author. On the subject of Spencer he at one time engaged in a controversy with Thomas Hill Green, of Oxford.

After the completion of his Cambridge course, he spent six months in Jena, Germany, attending the university there, and soon after his return to England he lectured for six months at different towns in the north of England in connection with University Extension. His subjects were scientific and literary, being "The Development of Poetry Since 1789," and "The Mind and the Senses."

An undergraduate society, called the Cambridge Society for Psychical Research, was started during the second term in Cambridge, early in 1879, and in this he took an active part. He assisted at various sittings with mediums, who proved to be, with one exception, fraudulent or unsatisfactory; and the society gradually dissolved, this being due partly to the fact that the members of the society could not spare the time from other university work. The exception mentioned above was a medium, who gave some remarkable tests, sometimes in apparently normal states and sometimes under "control." Dr. Hodgson had met her in London and persuaded her to give two experiments to the small society. This society, however, had no connection with the later organization which took its place in work of this kind and owed its existence to a different set of influences.

Soon after the dissolution of the Cambridge Society, Dr. Hodgson joined the new Society for Psychical Research which was organized in 1882 and served on its Council and some of its committees. In 1884, he was appointed by the Board of Mental and Moral Sciences in Cambridge University, England, as Lecturer on the Philosophy of Herbert Spencer. But this course was interrupted by an appointment to go to India and to investigate the marvelous phenomena alleged to have occurred in connection with Madame Blavatsky and the Theosophical Society. The details of the investigation, made in behalf of the Society for Psychical Research, were published in Vol. III. of the Society's "Proceedings." His conclusion was that the phenomena were fraudulent, and whoever takes the pains to examine this report with care must appreciate the strength of his case, to say nothing more of it.

After his return to England, in 1885 he lectured again at Cambridge on the Philosophy of Herbert Spencer, and then spent a year in London, engaged to some extent in political work. At the same time he employed himself in psychic research. He conducted a series of investigations, assisted by Mr. J. S. Davey, into the possibilities of mal-observation and lapse of memory, with special reference to the marvelous phenomena alleged to occur in the presence of mediums and with reference to conjuring tricks imitative of spiritistic or alleged spiritistic phenomena. The result of these investigations was published in Vols. IV and VIII of the Society's "Proceedings." In the monthly "Journal" of the Society, about that time, he reviewed in detail a large number of reports of alleged independent slate-writing and analagous phenomena, showing that they could be accounted for by conjuring. He also contributed papers on philosophic subjects to the quarterly journal "Mind."

Early in 1877 he accepted the position of secretary to the American Society for Psychical Research, which, in January, 1890, was transformed into the American Branch of the English Society, of which Branch he was appointed the secretary and treasurer. During his residence in America and his service in the American Branch he contributed various articles in the "Forum" and "Arena," as well as a number of important papers and reports to the "Proceedings" of the Society. Of the latter are the following:

"A Case of Double Consciousness," being a report on a remarkable instance of duplex personality in which a man lived a normally unconscious life for eight weeks. The next was his first Report on the Piper Case, which was entitled, "A Record of Certain Phenomena of Trance." Then came an article on "The Defence of the Theosophists," being a reply to criticisms by the Theosophists on his report on Madame Blavatsky, and an article on "Indian Magic and the Testimony of Conjurers." Following this was his second report on the Piper Case, "Further Record of Observations of Certain Phenomena of Trance," in which he came out in defence of the spiritistic hypothesis as based upon that record.

The above short sketch of Dr. Hodgson's life and work has been taken, in the main, from the "Religio-Philosophical Journal." The editor of that journal was a personal friend of Dr. Hodgson's and received from him the main incidents representing his career. The most important incidents, however, Dr. Hodgson could not state for himself. It will remain for his literary executors to give a more full account of him and his work.

The most important incident in his career was the publication of his second report on the Piper Case. It came out in 1898. This represented him as apparently breaking with all his previously skeptical convictions in regard to Spiritualism, or what has been called spiritism in order to escape the associations which that term has obtained its connection with so much fraud and illusion. Dr. Hodgson had established such a reputation for the discovery of fraud and for skepticism regarding a future life that his conversion as indicated in this report, to the theory of spiritism or the possibility of communicating with deceased friends and relatives came as a distinct surprise to many psychic researchers to say nothing of the astonishment of the man of the world. He had been exceedingly cautious and slow in the formations of his convictions on the subject, and had maintained such a reserve in his scientific utterances that few would have even suspected the real sympathies he felt for the conclusion which he wished to see proved, but which his strength of intellectual nature would not allow to be proved by anything short of the most satisfactory evidence. Many a time just as he thought he had hit upon the phenomena which would serve his purpose he found himself balked by various difficulties and had still to suspend his judgment until he obtained further light. The primary difficulty with the theory was not the lack of supernormal evidence, but the peculiar form and limitations of the phenomena which purported to be this evidence of a future life. It was not until 1896 or 1897 that these perplexities were finally cleared up in his mind and the result was published in the report mentioned. But the sympathies of his mind are well indicated in a personal letter to the editor of the "Religio-Philosophical Journal" in 1890, before even his first report on the case was published. I am permitted to quote from this letter to Col. Bundy. He said:

"My interest in psychical research is greater than ever, and it seems to me highly probable that before many years have elapsed there will be much new and valuable testimony before the world as the result of the labors of our society, in favor of the Spiritualistic claim that it is possible for our departed friends under special conditions to make their continued existence known to us. It is my own conviction that such communication is possible, though I hold that it is not nearly so frequent as most Spiritualists commonly suppose. What we need at the present time is the earnest sympathy and co-operation of all who do hold or would like to hold this conviction as well, indeed, as of all those who think that further inquiry may lead to a different conclusion."

It is a tribute to the scientific cautiousness and thoroughness of the man that he so long persisted in the suspense of judgment that carried him through seven or eight years more investigation before he would allow himself to confess his belief in the scientific evidence for a future life. He appreciated quite as fully, and in the same spirit, as the lamented Frederick W. H. Myers, the wide and deep bearing of the belief in a future life upon paitosophy, religion, and social and political life, but he allowed no mere sentiment to affect his conception of the scientific method which was to be the arbiter of that fate.

As he proceeded with his inquiries, after some earlier experiences which had awakened his interest, he found himself more and more confronted with difficulties in his problem. These difficulties, however affected the evidential aspects of it, not the truth of it. He saw more and more clearly the radical distinction between scientific proof and personal belief obtained by personal experience, a distinction which few see, or if they see it, too frequently neglect its importance in the prosecution of their work. It was the realization of this distinction and its importance for his problem that sustained him in a policy which brought many an anathema upon his head from the very class whose belief he was proving. He had long felt the cogency of certain facts in favor of the belief, but as believing and proving were such different things to him he sacrificed his personal desires to the rigorous demands of scientific method and kept up the high ideal which he, with the Society of Psychical Research had formed of scientific duty and allegiance.

His patience and perseverance were finally rewarded. Though he had much material which had great significance in support of his suit he did not make up his mind until fortune favored him with a long series of investigations in a single group of the most interesting phenomena yet recorded—those of the Piper case. He had been able to publish a part—a very small part—of the concrete evidence gathered by his labors in support of survival of personal identity after death. This he regarded as the foundation of his work and he never wearied in his efforts to lay that foundation broad and deep. On this foundation it was his desire to build a structure which would equally explain the perplexities apparent in the problem and the limitations under which the revelations of another life were made. But I believe he had committed nothing to writing of the system which he had in mind, save what he had stated briefly in his Report on the Piper case, when, on the 20th of December, 1905, he suddenly passed away and left some future successor to gather up the threads which his death so disappointingly severed.

Of the man Richard Hodgson as he appeared to his friends in the ordinary conversation of daily life a sketch has been drawn, so vivid and true, that no account of him will be complete without quoting from it. His work and convictions had brought him to a course which required him to distinguish them apart in behalf of their own several interests, and this resulted in certain concessions to the "personalities" which had been instrumental in his conversion to the belief in a personal existence after death. Whether he was right or not makes no difference to us as long as we know that he surrendered none of his allegiance to scientific method. To quote, then, from the above-mentioned sketch:

"Though finally surrendering his own life to the direction of 'Imperator' (the chief of the trance personalities whom he recognized in the Piper case as spiritual), he sought to retain in his work of interpretation for others the attitude of the investigator insisting upon the best of evidence. It was his unflagging desire to accumulate a mass of evidence sufficient to form a reasonable hypothesis regarding the 'spirit world.'

"There is no lack of pathos, from one point of view, in his having dropped this work unfinished. From another there is the satisfaction of his having passed quickly, as he wished to pass, from the present to the future life. More than one of his friends recall the eagerness with which he said only last summer, 'I can hardly wait to die.' A keen intellectual curiosity regarding what awaited him was his own chief concern about death. Then came that which he desired; and then neither the doubters nor his fellow-believers could wholly grudge him the opportunity to carry forward—as he would have said—'on the other side' the work to which he gave his life on earth. With a swift passage from the known to the unknown sphere, the visible life among us came to an end.

"To those who knew him in private his utter confidence in his work was one of its highest justifications. To hear him talk of that 'other side' as if were literally a room separated from the house of life only by walls and doors of glass, to see him year in and year out devoting to an idea intellectual and moral powers which might well have won him many of the rewards which men prize most,—this was to realize in a measure the spirit which has animated the idealists of every age, the spirit through which a man saves his life by losing it.

"The general and the personal significance of his work were so inextricably twined together that it is hard to discuss it at all without seeming to invade the inmost sanctities. Yet it is no sacrilege to quote from a private letter of 1901 a passage which reveals at once the intense conviction of Richard Hodgson's belief and the pure spiritual faith of which it was the embodiment: 'I went through toils and turmoils and perplexities in '97 and '98 about the significance of this whole Imperator regime, but I have seemed to get on a rock after that,—I seem to understand clearly the reasons for incoherence and obscurity, etc., and I think that if for the rest of my life from now I should never see another trance or have another word from Imperator or his group, it would make no difference to my knowledge that all is well, that Imperator, etc., are all they claim to be and are indeed messengers that we may call divine. Be of good courage whatever happens, and pray continually, and let peace come into your soul. Why should you be distraught and worried? Everything, absolutely everything,—from a spot of ink to all the stars—every faintest thought we think up to the contemplation of the highest intelligences in the cosmos, are all in and part of the infinite Goodness. Rest in that Divine Love. All your trials are known better than you know them yourself. Do you think it is an idle word that the hairs of our heads are numbered? Have no dismay. Fear nothing and trust in God.'

"His friends and brothers care especially to remember one thing—that this idealist did not detach himself from the most earth-bound of us all. Though so much of his commerce was with the unseen, his feet kept step with ours on solid earth. In the field of mental activities, there was no one better qualified to discuss the freshest topics of physical science, the events and tendencies in the world of affairs, and their deeper significance.

"Nor was this community of interest restricted by any means to the things of the mind. The healthy Anglo-Saxon devotion to every exhibition of physical prowess was conspicuously characteristic of this child of the spirit. The professional ball game, the college boat race and foot-ball battle excited his keenest interest; and it was like him to double his enjoyment in these sports by the companionship of one or more of us.

"A purity of nature which leaves his friends unable, even should they try, to recall a single taint of coarseness in his word or thought; a sincerity like that of a true-hearted boy; an unselfishness and absence of egotism which made our concerns far more often than his the topics of our personal intercourse; a self-respect which included in its operations a body as wholesome as the air and sea he loved;—these must surely be remembered in any enumeration of the qualities which made his personality so rare a blending of the spirit and the flesh. Who better than our well-loved friend can remain for us the interpretation and type of this blending? What man of us has lived in the flesh a life so illuminated and controlled by the spirit that the transition from the seen to the unseen could have seemed so short a journey as for him? One whose spirit, like our friend's, was clothed with the whole armor of faith and courage has told what it is for such a man to die: 'In the hot-fit of life, a tip-toe on the highest point of being, he passes at a bound on to the other side. The noise of the mallet and chisel is scarcely quenched, the trumpets are blowing, when, trailing with him clouds of glory, this happy-starred, full-blooded spirit shoots into the spiritual land.'" ["A Memoir of Richard Hodgson," by M. A. DeW. H. Quoted by permission.]

Very few know anything about the personal struggles which he had in the effort to carry on his work. Of the inner life that sustained him in these struggles during nearly thirty years of investigation; that made poverty light and enabled him to remain unmoved amidst ridicule and calumny alike, and that kept up his faith in the most trying and pathetic circumstances the time has not yet come to speak without reserve. They were incidents of a firm resolution to know and abide by the truth, whether it favored his personal wishes or not. Sincerity was native to him, and in the modern dissolution of the old faiths the now dominant methods of science compelled him to surrender a large part of the convictions which he had imbibed with his early teaching and at a cost which none who do not know the circumstances can realize. He felt that, for him and for men of his type, the belief in an unseen world of spirit which is the sole sustenance of the best spiritual life, must be based upon evidence of a more substantial kind than the one of tradition, and that without credentials of a scientific character the belief must inevitably waste away. In Professor Sidgwick, Mr. Gurney, Mr. Myers and the group of men that gathered about them in Cambridge, England, he found men who were influenced by the same conviction, and the fortunate meeting with them determined Richard Hodgson's life. As long as these men lived they were his faithful friends and coworkers. None of them ever lost sight of the great end in view, namely, the scientific demonstration of a future life, but none of them ever forgot that a chief means to that end was a strict adhesion to the severest methods of criticism and investigation which would result in the collection of a body of evidence that would command respect and produce conviction.

Dr. Hodgson's native hatred of fraud and humbug enabled him to enter into the work of sifting evidence with great zest. Early in his career he found it needful to acquaint himself with all the methods and appliances with which adventurers might delude the public and as a result he became one of the most skillful detectors of fraud that has yet arisen, as was shown in his exposures of Madame Blavatsky and Eusapia Palladino. Indeed the earlier years of his work seem to have been productive rather of negative than of positive results. He did meet, however, at an early period, with a few phenomena which he could not discredit and which encouraged him to continue perseveringly his work with the hope of finally obtaining what he sought, namely, a mass of evidence which would be sufficiently impressive to enforce consideration of his problem. This he first found in the Piper case. After several years' anxious doubt he came finally to the definite conviction that the communications there received are the utterances—confused and fragmentary and mingled with extraneous elements—yet in the main the utterances of spirits freed from their earthly embodiment, and in that conviction he found the basis for a religious faith which he had so long sought.

Yet his personal conviction never caused Mr. Hodgson to lose his sympathy with the position and difficulties of the honest skeptic. He had too long wandered in the labyrinth of doubt himself to lose appreciation for those in perplexity with their beliefs. He well knew the maximim of Epicharmus,

A sober sense of honest doubt
Keeps human reason hale and stout.

In fact the honest skeptic's state of mind was much more congenial to him than that of the uncritical believer. He welcomed every precaution an experimenter could take to guard against deception and frankly recognized that he had himself to bear the suspicion that he was in collusion with Mrs. Piper, urging that in no other way could evidence be obtained that would be worthy of that name. Sound evidence was always his object, both for himself and for others, and nothing so much delighted him as the convincing of an unbeliever, just as nothing so excited his contempt as the unreasoning credulity which accepts everything and examines nothing.

Far as he went in his acceptance of the Piper phenomena, he never went further than he believed the evidence would carry him. So-called "physical phenomena" he never definitely accepted. To a friend who asked him this question some years ago he replied: "All I can say is that I have sought for them diligently more than fifteen years and have never found any that I could regard as well established." To the same friend he said that he thought Crookes' experiments with Home were the best attested physical phenomena on record, but he could not finally accept them until some additional cases had been adduced. This extreme reluctance to accept phenomena which he had not personally examined frequently caused him to differ with his associates in the Society of Psychical Research and especially with Mr. Myers. Yet these differences led to no interruption of the friendship and esteem that had so long subsisted between them. This was well indicated in the fact that Mr. Myers, when failing health would not permit him to complete unassisted his great work on "Human Personality and its Survival of Bodily Death," invoked the aid of Dr. Hodgson. Dr. Hodgson worked with Mr. Myers for several months and after Mr. Myers' death, Dr. Hodgson and Miss Johnson superintended the completion of the work. What that work owes to Dr. Hodgson's acute intellect and critical judgment Mr. Myers alone could attest, and he would no doubt have acknowledged the amount of that debt had he lived to write the preface.

It is in place to state something of my own personal relation to Dr. Hodgson and his work. The incident that attracted my interest in psychical research was his paper on "A Case of Double Consciousness," which is mentioned above in the list of his contributions to the Society's publications. I heard an abstract of it read by himself at a meeting in New York City, called for the purpose of organizing a Section of the Society. What excited so much satisfaction in me regarding this paper was the great pains and expense involved in the effort to ascertain exactly what the facts of the case were without any attempt to offer a theory to explain them. The reading of that paper decided my mind to join my lot with the investigators. To me it seemed that science was primarily observation of facts and theory. The joining of the Society soon brought me into intimate relations with Dr. Hodgson as Secretary and also as a personal adviser in matters pertaining to it and in which I was but a novitiate. I soon learned his range of knowledge in the complicated field of abnormal and super-normal psychology as well as in the prestidigitator's field, of tricks and illusions This acquaintance began in 1889 soon after I came to Columbia University and it soon ripened into warm friendship. But our relations were associated mostly with the scientific aspects of his work. What impressed me most in his character was the separation of his emotional from his intellectual life, or better, his desires from his scientific judgment. He knew from his own experience and from his knowledge of human nature generally that the subject of a future life stimulated emotional interests and judgments which ought to be kept in abeyance when paying deference to the claims and methods of science, and he was so coldly cautious on this matter that he never gained the reputation before the public, as did Mr. Myers, for human sympathies which were his in a most marked degree. He had a profoundly emotional nature which few ever knew or suspected, but he never allowed it to play any part in his scientific conclusions. In this respect he was a perfect master of himself. From personal conversations with him I found that he had such a confidence in the idealistic view of the world that he had no need to press his facts into moulds that did not fit. He did not require scientific support for his ideals, though he wanted it. Hence he was the most unsparing critic of any temptation to accept conclusions in the mere interest of emotional passions. This was so true that he had the reputation of being an uncompromising opponent of Spiritualistic theories when the very opposite of this was the fact. He was exceedingly anxious to prove that theory, but long after he had come to the conclusion personally that the belief in a future life was true he kept his scientific method intact from the influence of emotional interests and still made many Spiritualists hate him cordially for his apparently obstinate skepticism. He knew better than they, however, the necessity and importance of methods which serve the truth more effectively and more serviceably than impatience with the most rigorous scientific standards. He had his faults, but they were not what the public has often supposed. He was not always as tactful or patient with others as is necessary in his complicated subject, but even in this only his best friends are entitled to criticise. The sincerity of his devotion to sound methods was so great that nothing would stand in the way of enforcing their consideration, and the future will have occasion to pay its tribute to his insistence on them.

We were both working together for the proper organization and endowment of psychical research in this country, and I hoped that only a short time would intervene before having him in a position to do his work more effectively. We exchanged views upon the subject and had reached a definite understanding in regard to our policy. We both agreed as to the problems which we had to solve, and also in the main, as to the theoretical considerations which needed public discussion. But he had been the blazer of the way and I was the follower. I had relied upon the prospect of his taking the leadership in this country, as there was no other man so well equipped for it. The deaths of Mr. Myers and Professor Sidgwick in England had left the work very much in need of successors. With Dr. Richard Hodgson passing the great divide there are fewer or no such persons to assume the task thus laid down, and those of us who are left to continue it will have to accept its duties in a stoical temper.

JAMES H. HYSLOP.

Objects of the Institute.

It will be proper to explain at some length the aims of the American Institute for Scientific Research, of which the American Society for Scientific Research is but a Section. The Institute has received a perpetual charter from the State of New York and intends to combine the work of investigation and philanthropy. The work of scientific investigation will occupy two more or less separate fields of interest. Its philanthropic work will be confined to one of them. This latter function will be taken up only when it has secured the proper endowment. In the meantime it can only begin its investigations upon a small scale. But the nature, aims and needs of the Institute will here be the subject of careful explanation.

I.—Nature of the Institute.

The Institute is constituted by a Board of Trustees, whose primary function shall be to act as custodians of funds and to supervise their distribution among qualified men or bodies of men interested in the fields of abnormal and supernormal psychology, and residual phenomena generally. The Intitute will also supervise the organization of groups of scientific men interested in its fields of work. This work will be limited to a definite though comprehensive territory of scientific investigation and philanthropic labor, namely, that of all residual phenomena in normal, abnormal, and supernormal psychology, including borderland and sporadic phenomena between physiology and psychology. No propagandism of any sort, whether philosophic, religious, or scientific, will be associated with the work of the Institute. Hence there will be no teaching connected with it. Its sole work will be the care of endowments and the supervision of investigations with such philanthropic services in mental disease as are necessary in the interest of these inquiries.

The first function which the Institute can perform is that of a "clearing house" for all those sporadic phenomena and isolated cases having a scientific interest for psychology and which would otherwise be lost to science. Academies of Medicine and bodies of scientific men can be invoked and aided in its aims, and committees appointel for the collection, record, and publication of important material related to the objects of the Institute. It will thus be apparent that the Institute does not intend to act in entire independence of other efforts to deal with residual phenomena, but as a central bureau or co-operative agency in more effective investigation.

There are two fields of investigation with which the Institute will be directly and indirectly occupied. The first may me called Psychopathology, or Abnormal Psychology, and with this it is desired to associate a philanthropic work of an important kind, a clinic, partly as a means of giving a practical character to the Institute's aims and partly as a means of facilitating scientific research. The second field is popularly known as Psychic Research and may be called Supernormal Psychology. It comprehends a variety of phenomena imperatively demanding investigation. At certain points the two fields tend to merge into each other and at others they are widely separated. On this account and of several other considerations it is important not to associate the investigation of the two fields, while the means are provided for the articulation of results in both. Hence two Sections of the Institute have been organized; Section A., or Psychopathology, and Section B., or Supernormal Psychology.

II.—Psychopathology.

The field of Abnormal Psychology in which philanthropic effort may be organized and conducted simultaneously with investigation consists of such cases as functional mental disease, and all psychological disturbances due even to organic troubles; functional insanity and hallucinations; amnesia or loss of memory, especially of that type often taken for serious insanity, but curable by other than ordinary methods; secondary personality or unconscious mental acction simulative of other agencies than the normal consciousness; functional melancholia and vicarious sympathetic mental aberrations; neurasthenia and psychasthenia; hysteria and hystero-epilepsy; obsession; fixed ideas or monomanias; phobias; delusions, alcoholism, and all functional troubles that may ultimately be made to yield to the various forms of suggestion. It will also be an important part of the Institute's work to aid or to conduct a thorough scientific investigation into the phenomena and capabilities of hypnotism, especially on their psychological side, while organizing the application of hypnotic therapeutics in their scientfically legitimate forms. For this purpose a clinic and hospital of the Salpetriere, Nancy or Berilion type would be necessary after the Institute has been fully organized.

In thus outlining this field of work and investigation I do not mean to imply that science has been oblivious to it or that it has neglected it in its main aspects, but only that the work needs both centralization and special attention to its psychological as well as to its physiological relations. The work proposed is superadded to that of Psychiatry, and is not a substitute for it. The psychological study and connections of the phenomena interesting to it will not be supplanted or ignored by it. On the contrary, this must ever be the basis of much of its inquiries and always the final result of them. But owing to the fact that there is some reason to suppose that the phenomena of consciousness have something like a causal nexus between different events in its streams and also that they probably exercise a frequent influence to produce bodily disturbances, it is desired that the purely psychological connections and relations of mental phenomena in certain cases be studied with reference to their possible value in diagnosis and the application of therapeutic methods supplementary to the ordinary ones. Many important facts may be ascertained for practical life antecedent to the autopsy which must be the last stage of inquiry and which never aids in the treatment of the individual patient. Experience has shown that the psychological study of certain disorders may lead to the improvements of treatment.

This is not the place to explain in detail how the psychological aspects of these phenomena shall be investigated, since every psychologist will understand what is needed in work of this kind in contradistinction from physiological problems. What is most wanted is the right understanding of the dissociations of abnormal mental life in comparison with the associations of normal life, in order to determine more distinctly the practical measures which may be necessary for prevention and cure. The many cures in this field effected by suggestion are evidence of what might be accomplished after a more scientific knowledge of abnormal mental phenomena has been obtained.

Incidentally investigations in abnormal mental phenomena, especially those of secondary personality, may throw light upon some of the vexed problems of philosophy. They may affect these in what they show of the nature and limitations of our normal personality. We must remember that what we directly know of ourselves is the result of introspection and what we know of the consciousness of others is indirectly ascertained through their motor actions. All consciousness other than our own is inferred from the physical actions, and we can infer and understand it only in proportion to our direct knowledge of ourselves, on the one hand, and on the other, in proportion to our knowledge of the extent to which consciousness obtains physical expression through the motor system in others. In our normal life consciousness and the organism are so correlated as never to suggest any other conception of their relation than the dependence of consciousness on the body and the body alone. In this normal life personality seems to have its nature and limitations determined by the nature of the organism and its wants. Consciousness of the normal type has been useful in the struggle for existence and the survival of the fittest, and the abnormal types seem to characterize the unfit and unadjusted organism. But in certain forms of abnormal mental life there are distinct traces of mental action that does not obtain physical expression at all times. Unconscious motor actions show evidence of personality that apparently represents no utility in the process of evolution, and sometimes indicate a wider range of that personality than the normal. Hence it is important to ascertain, if possible, how much evidence there may be for this condition of things, as it is quite possible to conceive that abnormal rather than normal psychology may be the key to the solution of the problems of philosophy. It would be strange if Materialism were discredited by the study of the very phenomena upon which it has hitherto relied for the proof of its claims. But, however this may be, it is certain that our conclusions must be consistent with the existence of the abnormal, and that it may be that the abnormal instead of the normal must represent the territory in which the solution of our problems is to be found.

We know that the study of physiology and the practice of medicine were revolutionized by the study of pathology. Normal physiology never adequately understood its own problems until it gave almost exclusive attention to pathology, and thus health became intelligible through the study of disease. Both Physiology and Biology have been similarly affected by the work of Bacteriology, which in many cases represented the study of incursions by foreign agencies to produce disease.

In a similar manner the fundamental problems of psychology and philosophy may have to wait upon the methods and results of psychopathology. If there be any hint of a non-coordination between the range of conscious or subconscious mental action and its physical expression in favor of mental action not physically expressed, a very large possibility is opened to scientific consideration, and possibly also to practical and corrective agencies.

If there be adequate reason to believe that the range of personality is larger than is expressed in our normal consciousness, or than that which gets normal motor expression, we at once raise the question of the adequacy of the current conceptions for explaining the phenomena, and certainly there are scientific and moral interests on both sides of the problem that require consideration in this connection. It would, therefore, be interesting to find that abnormal psychology might open the way to conclusions which have hitherto been supposed to be the exclusive property of normal psychology. It is therefore time that a connected and concentrated study of these phenomena be undertaken with reference to their comprehensive value scientifically and practically.

It will be no easy task to accomplish this object. The phenomena that will throw light upon the problem are sporadic and must be collected from large masses of irrelevant material. Co-operative effort will bring science into knowledge of these phenomena more rapidly than individual labors. Much could be done for the medical profession outside large cities and possibly for the organization of psychological study on more comprehensive lines in our medical colleges. It is probable that normal psychology will become as important an equipment of the physician as abnormal psychology, and the Institute might be made the center for the organization of such study, through its publications and funds.

The work of Charcot and Pierre Janet at the Salpetriere, of Bernheim at Nancy, and of Berillon's Clinic are examples of what we should have in this country in all the large cities. The efforts now making to begin the study of insanity in our asylums should be aided and the results brought before the public in a manner to educate the physician in ways not now possible. Individuals qualified to investigate asylums and hospitals might be enabled to do this work by assistance which is not now accessible, and the whole work of Psychopathology centralized and made scientifically effective.

The work of men like Wetterstrand, Liebecault, Bernheim, von Kraft Ebing, Van Renterghem, Tuckey, Bramwell, Forel, Vogt, and many others show what may be done with the scientific use of hypnotism. There are special reasons for concentrating the work in this field, but more important still is its psychological study which has not been made with any degree of completeness. Many would say it has not been studied at all. But while this is hardly true, it is certain that it has been better understood as a therapeutic agent than it is as a phenomenon of the mind.

Our command of it in both its use and its dangers will be proportioned to our knowledge of its psychological functions. Its phenomena were the plaything of charlatans for a century, the contempt of science for nearly the same period and its amusement for a large part of this time, the serious interest of only a few who have been able to use it in practical therapeutics, and never the subject of more than a superficial psychological study. Its phenomena are, of course, extremely difficult to investigate, as are all phenomena that are outside the reach of direct individual experience. Hypnotic phenomena belong to the field of the subconscious where caprice and triviality sometimes seem to prevail. But we shall never know their use and their dangers,—if they have any dangers,—and we shall never understand them until they are brought under intelligent scientific exploration. Moreover the general public labors under an entire misconception of hypnosis and this avails to prevent the therapeutic use of it by many able physicians who would be glad to employ it in certain emergencies did it not affect their practice. A clinic would obviate this difficulty without affecting the practice of those who wish to employ it, while it would at the same time afford rare opportunities for the scientific study of hypnotic phenomena on a large scale.

III.—Psychic Research.

The second field for investigation which it is desirable to organize and aid is that which is known as Psychic Research. The popular conception of this field identifies it with the study of Spiritualism which has managed, in this country especially, to associate its methods and "phenomena" with fraud and illusion to such an extent that it is almost impossible to elicit attention to genuine phenomena. But it is designed in this term to sustain that conception of the field which is much wider than the general notion of Spiritualism, while it may comprehend it in both its fraudulent and apparently genuine form. The work of the English Society for Psychical Research defines what we have in view. This comprehends alleged telepathy, alleged clairvoyance, alleged mediumship, and all claims to the supernormal acquisition of knowledge, as well as the alleged production of physical effects without contact. As all these phenomena are exceedingly sporadic, except, perhaps, their fraudulent form, it is in the same degree necessary that the work of investigation should be organized and centralized with funds to make its aims effective. The organization is in a measure already undertaken by the English Society, but very inadequately for want of funds and proper co-operation, and it is the aim of the American Institute for Scientific Research to organize and endow this work while it extends investigation to abnormal psychology.

There is a vast field of pseudo-supernormal phenomena which intervene between the genuinely supernormal and the abnormal, and this field is of especial importance to psychic research, more particularly because the abnormal is sometimes the medium through which supernormal facts find their way. We require as much to define the limits and medium of the supernormal as we do of the existence of the supernormal, and these limits are close to a very large territory of the abnormal and of secondary personality. It is therefore important that we articulate the results of investigation in both fields of mental phenomena while we keep the actual work of inquiry in each case independent. Scientific men will appreciate the necessity of careful methods in this matter and ought to recognize the importance of making the investigation as comprehensive as possible, and of bringing the whole field of residual mental phenomena together to ascertain their inter-relations. Not that the supernormal is necessarily associated with the abnormal, but that somewhere between the purely normal field of mental action and the supernormal we should expect to find connecting links, now associating the supernormal with the normal and now associating the supernormal and now associating it with the abnormal. Our knowledge of its nature and limits will thus be determined more or less by the borderland cases, so to speak, intervening between the two extremes.

The field of psychic research proper divides itself into at least three types of facts having a scientific interest. The first of these may be denominated as that of frauds and delusions. This is an extremely large one and is represented by all those forms of jugglery which claim to be "supernatural" phenomena, such as slate-writing tricks and cabinet "materializations," and various mystifying performances. This field of fraud is well organized and equipped for its work. It was demoralized by the publication of the Report by the Seybert Commission, but since the work of the Society for Psychicl Research has reinstated the belief in the supernormal of some kind, whether rightly or wrongly, the effect has been to encourage the reorganization of fraud on a wide scale and it is so rife that no better service for a large class of people can be performed than to serve as a means for the correction of illusion and the detection of this fraud. In the decline of religious beliefs which had created so many hopes and ideals it is quite natural that the despair attending the dissolution of that faith should result in the credulous pursuit of consolation, especially if science will not step in to supply the guidance which is so much needed.

Science has insisted on supplanting faith in determining truth and hence it cannot shirk the duty to take its place in the investigation of the phenomena which claim, whether rightly or wrongly, to be so important. It cannot assume an attitude of intellectual and aristocratic pride, after disillusioning mankind as to the "supernatural," without forfeiting its claim to be our moral guide in the affairs of practical life. It must offer a constructive view of the world to surrender the influences which skepticism does not and perhaps cannot destroy. In this work protection against illusion and fraud is a task not less important than the discovery of the supernormal.

The second field may be called that of the pseudo-supernormal and the pseudo-spiritistic type of phenomena, without implying that there is anything fraudulent or consciously associated with deception in them. This field is far larger than the public suspects, and is as important as it is scientifically interesting. This territory was not properly understood or appreciated before 1879 and perhaps not until later. Hence, much that passed for the supernormal and spiritistic has been excluded from that consideration, and found to be the result of subconscious mental action or secondary personality. It is often simulative of other agency than the person manifesting it. Flourney's case of Mlle. Helene Smith is a good instance of this kind. Another most striking case is that of Dr. Morton Prince. In less interesting forms the phenomena are very frequent and are the source of much illusion and error on the part of those who cannot discriminate secondary personality from the supernormal. The study and mastery of this field will put very decided limits to the claims of Spiritualism and will also exhibit the matrix through which much of the acctually supernormal has to come. For both sides of the issue involved this field is a most important one and its study will afford as much scientific instruction as it provides protection against illusion.

The third field is that of the actually supernormal, and comprises the claims of telepathy and spiritism as names for facts and not their explanation. What its extent is we do not know and it may be a long time before we do know. If previous inquiry had discredited the existence of anything supernormal the claims of investigation could not be so forcibly presented. But the work of the Society for Psychical Research, though carried on under disadvantages and discouragements which no other form of inquiry has had to suffer, has presented such a mass of evidence for something exceptional in the process of acquiring knowledge that its possible meaning for philosophy, science, religion, ethics and politics cannot longer be ignored without forfeiture of the claim to scientific intelligence, to say nothing of human moral interests. This is, true without accepting even the provisional hypotheses which are often put forward to explain its phenomena. But even its best accredited theory, if theory it is, namely, telepathy, is not a generally accepted fact in the scientific world, and whether true or false involves vastly important consequences to human knowledge. If true, it revolutionizes philosophical psychology and if false its place must be taken by a far vaster hypothesis, and as the phenomena which bear this supernormal character are very sporadic, organization on a large scale is the only means of testing the claims of any theory and of ascertaining the conditions under which the phenomena occur.

Then there are the phenomena of apparitions which comprehend phantasms of the living, of the dying, and of the dead, and which seem to transcend explanation by chance and subjective hallucination, but for which we have as yet no adequate or intelligent explanation. To consider them as having a cause outside the organism in which they occur as facts of experience is to open up the largest question of interest that man ever faced and may be fraught with an importance which it is impossible to estimate.

Connected with apparitions and suggesting the same general explanation are genuine mediumistic phenomena which are something like experimental data bearing upon the proof of a life after death. There are many doubts and perplexities associated with such a conclusion, but the facts are certainly very impressive when we have excluded fraud from their production. They are of a character which makes it inexcusable to neglect their investigation. The systematic work of the Society for Psychical Research has placed the subject beyond ridicule or legitimate indifference, and it only remains to give the problems which are suggested by the facts and the exclusion of fraud some scientific solution, whatever this may be. It is even possible that an inquiry of this kind might result in scientific assurance regarding a future life. If the verdict be affirmative, no matter whether such a life be desirable or not, we should know upon what we have to reckon, as in all other rational affairs of the present life. If the verdict be negative we should have our protection from illusion which is scarcely less important than the discovery of positive truth. But we must be neither credulous nor incredulous in the matter. We cannot afford to be fooled by skepticism, if a future life be a fact, and we cannot afford to be fooled by belief in it if it be not a fact; and indifference to it is only an excuse for the evasion of responsibilities which if it happens to be a fact, we would never escape in any other question of knowledge and morality.

The most important consideration for the investigation of mediumistic and similar phenomena is, as already indicated, their sporadic character. The evidential cases are perpetually eluding us, and nothing but a central organization can cope with the problem of collecting them for scientific treatment. They are such as cannot be verified at every moment or place. In the physical sciences it is somewhat different. When a physicist announces a new discovery his claim can be tested in a short time in most of the institutions of the world. It is not so with the claims of a psychical researcher. Its phenomena are so casual and so complicated, even when they are not supernormal, that only some highly organized and endowed effort can accomplish anything with them. This is true of all residual phenomena, whether physical or mental. But it is still more true of the abnormal and the supernormal in psychology where the complications are much greater than in the inorganic world of matter.

There are also very important fields of residual phenomena in the borderland between physiology and psychology that require investigation. They are all alleged facts bearing upon the problems of the inheritance or noninheritance of acquired characteristics and of prenatal influences, with perhaps many allied phenomena. The facts related to these questions generally elude us like ghost stories, while the importance of a definite knowledge on both these questions represents one of the most gigantic ethical problems ever considered by science. It is difficult to experiment in either of them, while we can endeavor to avail ourselves of the real or apparent experiments of nature and, if possible, to give them scientific credentials, in so far as such a character is conceivable regarding spontaneous phenomena. There is much unsystematized matter bearing upon these questions, but its nature and value will not be known until it is studied in a scientific manner and the conditions known which affect its moral importance.

IV.—Endowment of the Institute.

It will be apparent that the financial wants of such a work will be very large, especially that it combines philanthropic effort with scientific investigation. For its complete organization and effective administration many millions will ultimately be required. But it can make a very good beginning of its work with a sum much less than its ultimate needs require and which can at first be divided between the two departments of the Institute's task. When it has demonstrated its usefulness, it will have no difficulty in securing adequate financial support, as its results will be quickly appreciated by every man who sees its humanitarian importance and feels what the privilege may be in considering its endowment.

The importance of the work at present is clear enough to the scientific man, and if we can only combine the enthusiasm and sympathy of those who appreciate the opportunity there will be those who will come forward to see that the completion of the work shall be effected. In the meantime it is all-important to make a beginning, and this can be done in either of the departments by a sum smaller than that which has been named. Any beginning will quickly demonstrate the value of the work and it is the rarest of all privileges to see that the task is immediately undertaken.

Needs of the Institute.

The explanation of the objects of the Institute outlines a scheme that involves a very large and expensive scientific work. It must show its worthiness by initial investigations and publications and will not expect any sufficient financial aid until it has shown its importance. That it has some claims, however, to financial assistance ought to have been made clear by the last twenty years of the London Society's work. It is to this that attention is called in putting the claim for endowment forward as one of the first objects of the present undertaking. The time has gone by when we should rely upon the sporadic and voluntary contributions of individuals for the sole evidence of the supernormal and some effort should be made in earnest to place the investigations upon the same substantial basis as is enjoyed by other phenomena. It has been made all the more imperative by the dissolution of the American Branch, which never had funds enough to do its work rightly. I wish in the inauguration of this new movement to keep its financial needs as prominent as the importance of its work and to do this I ought to explain definitely what scientific investigations of the kind cost.

Some measure of the expense involved in the scientific examination of psychic phnomena may be seen in the cost of the twenty years of experiments with Mrs. Piper. They cost in all probability, as much as $75,000, and this was not a large sum compared with the value of the results. It will cost much more to deal in a similar manner with a number of like cases, and this must be done before the rigid demands of scientific method are satisfied even for the simplest phase of the conclusion involved. It is not expected immediately to launch upon such an undertaking until the funds are secured. But it is hoped that this need will be appreciated as early as possible and that friends of the work will see that a proper corps of men are put to work on this task.

The membership fees, unless they come from several hundred members, can hardly do more than pay for publications and office expenses. This was all that could be effected by the fees of the American Branch, and indeed they did not suffice for that purpose. There were not even funds to pay for publications of any kind. Nothing but imperfect records could be made of phenomena independent of the Piper case. If this subject is to merit the attention and respect of scientific men it must be able to collect and publish scientific matter for study. This labor is not less expensive than other scientific investigations and will require the same patience and sacrifices that the discovery of all scientific truth claims. A large membership will help greatly toward the desired end, if it only creates a public opinion to support the work. The membership could be large enough to endow the work partly in a few years, but this result will not be expected from that source.

One of the most important steps demanding immediate attention is the funds to put such men to work as may succeed to it when the present organizers have passed away. One of the great misfortunes of the work of Dr. Hodgson was the inability to have had a man with him who could have taken up his work without interruption and this disaster ought not to happen again. The immediate crying need is men enough to investigate cases and experiences all over the country as they come to our notice. This requires that we be able to give suitable men a career. The proper men for the work will not undertake it unless a career can be offered and time given for doing really scientific investigation.

Another important circumstance should be noted. It refers to immediate wants. There are a number of very promising cases which ought to receive scientific attention. They require to be put under the proper care and surveillance in order to make the results of investigation scientifically valuable. A series of protected experiments are necessary as a means of ascertaining whether such an investigation as has been given to Mrs. Piper would be desirable. I know seven cases which demand such attention. Even the preliminary investigation cannot be adequately carried out without funds for it. The small fund already obtained for preliminary organization of the Institute may suffice to determine the importance of the cases, but it will not long support a large investigation of them.

The office and editorial work will require most of one's time and labor, so that a very early need is the employment of an assistant who may make a career of his work. Next to this is a fund for corallling cases for experimental investigations. No reance can be placed upon experiences with professional psychics. Private cases must be protected against doubt and suspicion. Scientific method requires that the experimenter be able to determine the conditions under which his investigations are made and to supply this want we must guarantee the instrument of investigation against the objections which the habits of adventurers have brought upon the men who deal in psychic phenomena.

An admirable article on this subject was recently published in the "Annals of Psychical Science" by its editor. There it was shown that psychics needed the same care and protection that any machine for experimentation requires, and the sooner that this fact is realized the better for the work.

The appeal is therefore here made for an early endowment of the Institute that its work be properly organized. As much attention must be called to this as to the investigation, and in fact the investigation cannot be properly conducted unless the endowment be made equal to the task. Just to put the work on a proper foundation will require an income of $10,000 a year. If that can be secured by membership fees and a reasonable assurance made that it will be permanent it will be easy to initiate a work which will soon secure a larger endowment on its merits. It is hoped that members will use their influence to encourage the establishment of an adequate fund for the application of proper scientific methods to this very complicated problem.

It is due to those who may be interested in both the work of psychic research and its endowment to say that a small fund has already been secured. The amount pledged and paid in has been $25,000, which was obtained as a preliminary orrganization fund and with the liberty of using both principal and interest in the work designed by the Institute. The permanent endowment desired is $1,000,000, which will yield about $40,000 a year for the investigations. A large sum will be required for Psychopathology. But we are here speaking only of the needs of psychic research, which demands $10,000 a year for putting it rightly on its feet. It is hoped that we may be able to make the fund now available a part of such an endowment and we can certainly do this if an adequate permanent fund can be secured at an early date.

In behalf of the plan for endowment we call special attention to the following scheme of membership: There will be five types of members: Founders, Patrons, Fellows, Members, and Associates. Those classes whose contributions establish a permanent endowment are mentioned in their place. It would not require a very large number of these to place the society beyond the contingencies of annual assistance. We would therefore emphasize the consideration of this plan by all that are interested in the problems of the Institute.

Founders shall have the privileges of the Patrons, Fellows, Members, and Associates, and shall have their names published in perpetuity, if so desired, in the Proceedings of the Institute in all its Sections. A person may become a Founder upon the payment of $5,000.

Patrons shall have the privileges of Fellows, Members, and Associates, and shall have their names published during their lives, if so desired, in the Proceedings of the Institute in all Sections. A person may become a Patron upon the payment of $1,000.

Fellows shall have the privilege of being enrolled in all Sections of the Institute; of receiving all the publications of the same; of the use of the rooms and library; and shall pay an annual fee of $25. A person may become a Life Fellow upon the payment of $500.

Members shall have the privilege of being enrolled in one Section of the Institute; of receiving all the publications of that Section, and shall pay an annual fee of $10. A person may become a Life Member upon the payment of $200.

Associates shall have the privilege of being enrolled in one Section of the Institute; of receiving only the "Journar" published in that Section, and shall pay an annual fee of $5. A person may become a Life Associate upon the payment of $100.

The funds contributed by Founders, Patrons, Life Fellows, Life Members, and Life Associates will be invested, and only the incomes thereof used in the work of the Institute.

Prospectus.

In connection with the statement of the aims of the American Institute for Scientific Research should go an explanation of the means by which its work shall appear before the public. These means will be its publications. The records and discussion of its investigations will find expression in the publication of two organs. These will be an annual volume of "Proceedings" or "Reports," and a "Journal." The annual Proceedings will consist of detailed reports and discussions of a more scientific character and representing matter which is intended to be of more permanent value. The Journal will be an organ with less pretensions as a detailed record of its matter and and will be intended to serve a more popular object. It will be necessary to explain briefly its nature and policy, both in regard to what it will not do and what it will do.

There are three things which the Journal will not do. First, it will not be an organ for the publication of speculative theories of any kind, philosophical, religious, or scientific. Its primary object must be scientific record and criticism. Various theories and explanations of phenomena may come in for discussion, but the Journal will not be an exponent of any special view of facts. Secondly, it will not limit itself to evidence of the supernormal, but will emphasize the record of facts of mental experience, throwing light on the conditions affecting the supernormal, and admit such criticism and discussion as will enable it to serve some constructive object. Thirdly, it will not limit its task to the discovery and exposure of mere frauds and illusions. As little of this work will be done as possible. Some of it will be absolutely necessary for the protection of genuine facts. But there is no longer good excuse for confining attention to the fraudulent and illusory aspect of psychic research. The time has come to do some other kind of work and to emphasize it, though it will devolve upon us to be the conservative influence in the community concerning such things as the supernormal.
